He also claimed "an excellent chance" at winning the nomination itself, although he refused to rule out another third-party presidential campaign. "I'm running as a candidate for the Democratic nomination, but I don't totally exclude anything," he said.

Humphrey, on NBC's "Meet the Press," said he expected to do very well in the Florida race. "I think we have good momentum, and I believe that I'm the only progressive candidate that has a chance to beat Mr. Wallace," he said.

But the Minnesota senator said if Wallace does win, it will demonstrate only that in an 11-way race, he has a solid bloc of voters.

"It would do nothing to damage my candidacy in the Democratic party if Mr Wallace should win because I do not consider Mr. Wallace to be what I call a card-carrying Democrat," Humphrey said.

Sen George McGovern of South Dakota went hand shaking at a University of Miami art show and in a black neighborhood of Coconut Grove.

Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York began his campaign day with a 5-1/2 mile bicycle ride, then went to a black church to accuse his senatorial rivals of compromising with Wallace and retreating on the issue of school busing.

"You're not going to beat Richard Nixon by trying to out-Wallace Wallace," Lindsay said.

Jackson denied in CBS's "Face the Nation" interview that his campaign opposition to the busing of school children for racial balance supports the forces opposed to racial integration.

He said a majority of black Americans are opposed to compulsory busing, too.

"This is an issue North, South, East and West," Jackson said.

Weather

Tomorrow's weather report reports that it will be cloudy today.

Late in the day, there will be a 20% to 40% chance of either rain or snow, depending on the temperature.

The temperature will be between 35 - 40 degrees, which would seem to eliminate the possibility of snow, but that's not what the telephone said, and we all know machines are right. Right?

Bromery, SUG Board Discussion Of C.C. Management Inconclusive

By JOHN M. DONNELLY

Last Friday afternoon the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board Task Force met with the Acting-Chancellor Bromery to discuss a possible change from SUG Board's advisory position in the Campus Center to a governing one by increasing their decisional power.

The Task Force meeting happened to follow up on the regular SUG Board meeting Thursday night, where a by-law change was passed which would give SUG Board the authority to hire and fire the management of the Campus Center.

The Task Force proposed to the Chancellor that SUG Board integrate with the management of the building.

Chancellor Bromery at first felt hesitant to the proposal saying, "What I'd hate for us to do is to develop a system incompatible with the workings of the building."

SUG Board reassured him by saying that there should not be two distinct views on policy, but rather communication. A data exchange would be necessary to implement his communication.

Bromery continued by saying, "I think it would be so cumbersome that it wouldn't work; there will be a division between the policy-maker and the person implementing policy."

SUG Board believes that this relocation of power would set up lines of communication so that any problem which arises in regard to policy may be dealt with quickly and efficiently. They believe that the policy-making has been misdirected by the management. They feel if they concentrate on the "framework" (of organization) as it was called, allowing for a culmination of the Chancellor's, student's, and alumnae views, the management will fall into place. The job of this "framework" would be to set the goals, policy, and guidelines of the Campus Center and Student Union.

Bromery added to this, "I don't care what the structure is as long as it serves its function."

The Task Force later pointed out the difficulty in implementing this sytem. The people will change each year, so the new officers should have some type of adjustment.

The Task Force also proposed that the framework utilize committees which could handle the day to day problems of the Campus Center facilities such as the Book Store, and Food Services. By this method many of the problems, which do not infringe on policy, would never reach the Chancellor or the SUG Board and could be dealt with quickly.

Bromery added, "I have the basic assumption that SUG Board and the management are trying to get to the same place. Any way in which you can get along better is O.K. with me."

SUG Board hopes that they can make the management of the Campus Center more sensitive to the needs of the students without interfering with the daily operation of the Campus Center and Student Union.

Committee Formed To Study Parking Problems

A new committee has been formed to consider the manifold problems of on-campus parking. It goes by the name of the Transportation and Parking Council and consists of three students, three faculty and three staff members.

Acting Vice-Chancellor Robert W. Gage explained that the council was formed to find out what was wrong with basic parking facilities on campus and what could be done to remedy this situation.

According to Gage, solutions might include a new improved transit system as an alternative to the use of cars as the main mode of transportation on campus. According to Gage, this could lead to a series of parking options, including basic registration of motor vehicles for peripheral parking areas, and a considerable increase in cost to those who wish to park in centrally located parking areas.

As a substitute for automobile transportation facilities, it is conceivable that a shuttle system could be instituted combined with an increase over the Student Senate's current three bus transit system to a possible eight bus system which would be paid for by the University.

These are only some of the plans that the committee may come up with, however. "The Council," said Gage, "is different in concept," in that "it is a 'user' committee." There is the additional factor involved in that the committee wants to have a concrete proposal by April, in order that it might be viewed and commented on by the University community before school gets out in May. All interested people may contact Gary Gomes, or call 5-0341.

Kinsey Wants Cats

LONDON (AP)-Some of Britain's lawmakers want cats brought in to take care of the mice in the mother of Parliaments.

"I am going to raise this issue next week on the floor of the House of Commons," declared Joseph Kinsey, a Conservative.

"Mice," he told newsmen Sunday "are popping up everywhere.

"You find them in the tearooms, in the bars, in the offices and along the corridors.

"It's a mouse explosion.

"The poison put down for the mice doesn't seem to be cutting down the population at all-on the contrary," complained Kinsey.

"It looks to me and my colleagues as if they're thriving on it. That's why we want a squad of cats to take over."

One mouse was seen recently in the rooms reserved for women legislators.

"Oh, the horror of it," said Mrs. Jill Knight, another Conservative.

"I usually get close to the Olympic high jump record when I see one about the place."

Lottery To Begin Next Week

Tickets for the Massachusetts lottery-which will have prizes of up to $1 million-will go on sale for 50 cents each on March 22, State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane recently announced.

The tickets for "The Game," as the lottery will be known, will be sold at 3000 locations in all of the state's 351 communities.

The first drawing for the $50,000 weekly top prize will be on Thursday, April 6, at 9 a.m. in Faneuil Hall. After that, drawings will be held each Thursday morning at different communities on a rotating schedule.

For each million tickets sold, there will be, on the average, 1000 cash winners each week and 10,000 other people who will win entry into the $1 million drawing, to be known as the "Million Dollar Game."

The $1 million drawing, Crane said, will be held about once a month based on ticket sales of 3.2 million a week. The commission said it hopes to sell four million tickets a week, meaning that the big drawing could be held even more frequently.

The New Jersey lottery, which was used as a model for the Massachusetts lottery, has had its million drawings as far apart as nine weeks.

The cash prizes in the weekly drawing will range from the single top prize of $50,000 to $25. On the basis of one million tickets sold, there will be nine winners of $2500 each, 90 winners of $250 each and 900 winners of $25 each.

In addition to the $1 million prize in the "Million Dollar Game", to be paid at the rate of $50,000 a year for 20 years, there will be a second prize of $200,000 ($20,000 a year for 10 years), a third prize of $100,000 ($10,000 a year for 10 years) and seven fourth prizes of $10,000 each.

As an extra, when ticket sales exceed the minimum needed for a $1 million drawing, there will be several additional prizes of $5000 each.

The state's cities and towns will get at least 40 per cent of the lottery receipts, amounting to between $40 million and $60 million a year, Crane estimated.

At least 40 per cent of the ticket money is for prizes, and a maximum of 15 per cent can be used for operating costs.

THE WINNERS of the $50,000 weekly prizes will be those persons who match the six-digit lottery number on their ticket with the winning six-digit number drawn in the lottery.

Second prizes will be paid to those who match the last five digits; third prizes to those who match the last four digits; and fourth prizes to those who match the last three digits.

The tickets will be sold in series of a million.

Thus, if two million were sold in a week, the winning number would be the same for each million series, and there would be two $50,000 winners and double the number of other money winners and qualifiers. There could be even three or four $50,000 winners each week, and a corresponding increase in other winners, if enough tickets were sold.

All the weekly cash winners plus those who match the last two digits of the lottery number will be eligible for entry in the $1 million game.

THOSE TICKET HOLDERS who have been made eligible for the million dollar game will qualify as semi-finalists by matching their lottery ticket serial numbers with a three-digit number to be drawn. The serial number differs from the lottery number, and is located on the lower right hand edge of the ticket.

If the last two digits of the serial number on the qualified lottery ticket match the last two digits of the three-digit number, the holder wins $100, but is not eligible for the million dollar drawing.

However, if the last three digits of the serial number match the three-digit number, the holder wins at least $500, becomes a semi-finalist in the million dollar game and will be invited to participate in person in the million dollar drawing.

The winning weekly lottery will be chosen by a complex series of steps "designed and tested," the commission said, "to insure a completely fair and unbiased choice of numbers."

These are the major steps:

—The last four or right-hand digits are selected, one at a time, from the spinning of a wheel.

—A two-digit number from 00 to 99 is then picked to give the winning six-digit number when combined with the four digits already selected. The process begins by selecting numbered balls from a drum and replacing them on a Post Position Board in the order they were drawn.

—Certified results of 10 horse races are then obtained from the State Racing Commission, with winning post position numbers 1 through 10. One of those post position numbers is selected from another drum and the six-digit number in the same post position is the weekly winner.

Pamphlets, which will be available to the public, give a detailed description of the lottery, "and how to play it."

The tickets can be purchased by anyone 18 years or older except employes of the lottery and members of the immediate family living in the same household.

Crane and Perrault said that 1500 of the more than 3000 ticket sales agents for the lottery already had been chosen. Each agent will get five per cent of the gross amount of the tickets he sells, they said, and will also get bonuses for being the seller of the winning lottery ticket.

The winning ticket will be published in newspapers, but cannot be broadcast on radio and television because of Federal Communications Commission regulations.

National Primary Amendment Proposed

WASHINGTON (AP)-Two of the most influential members of the Senate will propose Monday a constitutional amendment establishing a national presidential primary election.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana and Sen. George D. Aiken of Vermont, the dean of Republican senators, say the present system of separate state primaries on separate dates under different laws is a political circus, unfair to the candidates and the voters.

The candidates pick and choose state primaries in which they think they can be successful, Mansfield said in a speech prepared for delivery in the Senate. And, he said, "no two... primary tests offer the voter or the hopeful candidates any resemblance of similar opportunities."

Mansfield said the real issue in Tuesday's Florida primary, for example, "has little, if anything, to do with the matter of selecting a presidential candidate."

Straw-vote referenda on school busing and on equal opportunity in education have been placed on the Florida ballot and are expected to draw thousands of voters who might otherwise have stayed home.

The Mansfield-Aiken constitutional amendment would provide that the primary be held early in August of election years. The respective parties' nominations would go to whichever candidate polled the most votes, so long as it were at least 40 per cent of the votes cast in each party.

If no one received 40 per cent, a runoff between the top two finishers would be held four weeks later. Under the Mansfield-Aiken amendment, parties would still hold national conventions to nominate vice presidential candidates and adopt platforms.

To become effective, the amendment would have to be approved by two-thirds majorities in Senate and House, and be ratified by at least 38 states.

"I've been fed up for years with these circuses taking place in various states," Mansfield told newsmen.

Mansfield noted in his speech for Monday that the number of states holding statewide primaries this year is up to 25 from 14 in 1968.

He said the increase does not signify an enhancement of the Democratic system but an attempt to attract money and glory to a state that can become temporarily the center of national political attention.

And the candidate, Mansfield said, is found "enmeshed in a maze of laws, customs, and bad practices that leave him physically exhausted, financially deflated and more often than not, politically defeated."

National campaign spending limitations recently enacted for presidential campaigns would also apply to the national primary under the Mansfield-Aiken proposal.

To get on a party's national primary ballot under the proposal, a potential candidate would need the signatures of one per cent of his party's vote in the last previous presidential election.

There are also provisions to guarantee the would-be candidate's support is not just regional. He would need to meet a minimum petition requirement in at least 17 states, as well as the overall 1 per cent figure.

Britain and China Will Exchange Ambassadors

LONDON (AP) — Britain and China have agreed to exchange ambassadors, 22 years after London first recognized the Peking government, British and Chinese sources disclosed Sunday night.

The agreement came in the past few days after Britain acknowledged Taiwan to be part of China and the Communist government the lawful ruler of the whole country, the informants said.

Anti-Pollution Costs Will Cause Business Failures

WASHINGTON (AP) — The costs of curbing pollution will put hundreds of small factories out of business, bringing unemployment and local recessions to the communities that depend on them, a joint federal report said Sunday.

Nationwide, the study said, anti-pollution costs would have a significant impact, tending to push prices and imports up, and employment and the Gross National Product down.

Senators Accused Of Conspiracy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Marlow W. Cook, R-Ky., said Sunday he believes Democratic Sens. Edward Kennedy and Birch Bayh and columnist Jack Anderson have conspired to "discredit government officials despite the absence of wrongdoing of any kind" in the ITT merger case.

Cook released a letter asking Chairman James O. Eastland, D-Miss., of the Senate Judiciary Committee to call a closed committee meeting to consider his accusation.

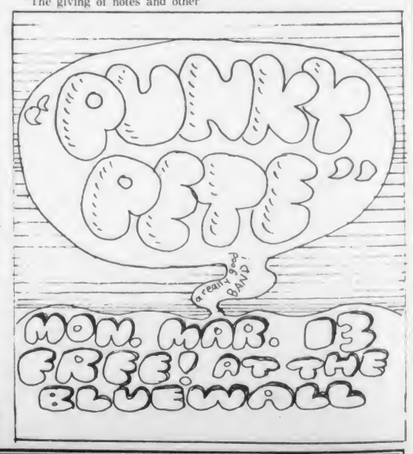
The committee has been conducting hearings at the request of Richard G. Kleindienst who has been nominated to succeed John Mitchell, who stepped down March 1 to run President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Kleindienst's nomination had won unanimous committee approval prior to publication by columnist Jack Anderson of allegations that the Justice Department gave the International Telephone & Telegraph Co. a favorable settlement in an antitrust action after ITT had pledged $400,000 for the Republican National Convention.

Kleindienst, who was deputy attorney general at the time of the out-of-court settlement, asked for the hearings on Anderson's allegations. And the Senate has withheld a vote on it's nomination pending the outcome of the current inquiry.

Eastland has said, however, that the nomination stands approved, as far as the committee is concerned, and he plans now new vote.

The hearings resume Tuesday with Mitchell as the next witness.



"I am compelled by the record of the hearings in the case to the conclusion that a political conspiracy exists among Sens. Edward Kennedy, Birch Bayh and Mr. Jack Anderson," Cook said in the letter.

Cook said Brit Hume, an assistant to Anderson, has made material available to Kennedy and the Massachusetts Democrat has refused to give this to the committee.

"At no time did Sen. Kennedy make the information given to his office available to other members of the committee, nor even inform them of his possession of the same," Cook said.

"The giving of notes and other documents to a member of a senatorial committee which is investigating the very subject matter contained in those notes is a serious affront to the committee process bordering on contempt," Cook said.

Kennedy said in response: "I hope that each member of the committee has instructed his staff, as I have, to develop every relevant piece of information, and that none of them will be deterred by the diversionary efforts of those who would rather not see this investigation proceed."

Woman Killed In Belfast

BELFAST (AP) — Guerrilla gunmen opened fire Sunday night on a British army patrol and a young woman bystander was killed, a military spokesman said.

The shooting cut short a weekend of peace brought by a guerrilla-proclaimed cease-fire.

The military spokesman said the army troops did not fire back when they were attacked in the Roman Catholic Lower Falls area of Belfast. The city's bomb-scarred streets had teemed with strollers earlier Sunday, the second day of the cease-fire due to expire at midnight Monday.

The woman, hit while standing in a shop doorway, was the 268th person killed since this British province erupted in strife between the dominant Protestants and the minority Catholics in August 1969.

Lower Falls is regarded as a stronghold of the outlawed Irish Republican Army's Official wing, which is not observing the 72-hour truce-called by the militant Provisional section of the IRA.

Convention Forms Black Political Party

GARY, Ind. (AP)-A National Black Political Convention, mired deep in parliamentary wrangles, voted Sunday to set up a permanent black political movement.

The convention also named the chairmen of state and other delegations as a steering committee to make the movement succeed.

"If we do nothing else today we will have made a revolutionary step toward a black political nation in this country and in the world," said the Rev. Jesse Jackson, head of Chicago's People United to Save Humanity, PUSH.

Rep. Charles Diggs, D-Mich., said he would not go so far as to call the new movement a third party. Both he and Jackson, however, pointed to independent black political organizations in Mississippi, Alabama, South Carolina and other states as examples of what the new organization might be able to do.

An outline for the new organization was drawn up by the New Jersey delegation before it arrived, and was endorsed by the black nationalist caucus two days ago.

As approved by Sunday's plenary session, it would be made up of about 427 people, 10 per cent of the delegates registered for the weekend's convention, and would be directed by a steering committee of about 50 people.

"The national assembly would function like a congressional body," said the resolution that was approved, "but also it could endorse candidates, support candidates, run national voter education and registration drives, lobby for black interests, assess black progress, make recommendations to the national convention and to the black community generally."

The resolution added that the assembly "would also be a chief brokerage operation when dealing with the white power political institutions."

Sunday's session was a tumultuous blend of debate over parliamentary procedure, shouts from the floor by delegates who wanted to be heard, and complaints that not everyone understood what was being voted on.

Among the well-known personalities on the convention platform were Mrs. Martin Luther King Jr., Manhattan Borough President Percy Sutton and Rep. Ronald V. Dellums, D-Calif.

After polling all the delegations officials announced there were 3,341 delegates attending.

Shortly before 3:30 p.m. all delegates were asked to go to their state caucus rooms, and the high school gymnasium serving as a convention hall was cleared. Convention officials said privately the reason for clearing the hall was a telephone bomb threat.

As chairman of the day, Imamu Baraka of Newark, N.J., tried again and again to move forward with the day's agenda. Baraka was formerly known as LeRoi Jones.

The platform committee, which had called for a new "black political movement," went into session again after debating until dawn.

State delegation chairmen who met with the platform committee until well past midnight said their groups were happy with the basics of the new "national black agenda," which calls for "basic alternatives to all the existing American economic and cultural systems."

Delegates were scheduled to vote on the document later Sunday.

There were problems with some of the hundreds of specific recommendations in the 12-page, tabloid size agenda.

Was it possible, for example, to reconcile the agenda's call for community control of schools with the Virginia delegation's position that for blacks in the South, community control is "a cruel hoax," and a return to the old system of segregation?

Star Berrigan Witness Ends Testimony This Week

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)-FBI informer Boyd Douglas, the star government witness in the conspiracy trial of Philip Berrigan and six other antiwar activists, is expected to wind up this week testimony by which the verdict eventually may rest.

The entire case against the Harrisburg 7 is built around testimony by the 31-year-old ex-convict.

The trial resumes Monday after a weekend recess, with Douglas beginning his third week on the witness stand. Four of the six defense attorneys have cross-examined him. A fifth, the Rev. William Cunningham, a Jesuit lawyer-priest, may ask a few questions of Douglas. New York attorney Leonard Boudin is scheduled to bring the cross-examination to a close.

Thus far Douglas has held to his story that the 48-year-old Berrigan and the other defendants not only plotted presidential adviser Henry Kissinger's kidnapping, but also the blowing up of Washington's underground tunnel heating system and the destruction of draft records in nine states.

Douglas and Berrigan were fellow inmates in 1970 at the Lewisburg, Pa., Federal Penitentiary, Douglas serving time for fraud and assault, Berrigan for destroying draft board records. As a study-release prisoner, Douglas was free to leave daily for classes at nearby Bucknell University.

Douglas testified he became a mail and telephone courier for Berrigan and then turned FBI informer on the Roman Catholic priest. The two were together at Lewisburg from Berrigan's arrival May 1 until he was transferred to Danbury, Conn., Federal Prison Aug. 1970.

Jury Selection Continues For Angela Davis Trial

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP)-The battle of the blackboard and the war of the water pitcher have enlivened the jury selection in the Angela Davis murder-kidnap trial.

Defense and prosecution attorneys have used the blackboard-which is actually a greenboard-and a plastic and metal pitcher to try and explain some complex legal priniciples to prospective jurors.

Defense attorney Leo A. Branton started the pitcher war by asking a prospective juror whether he thought it contained water. He replied he thought it did.

"That inference is possible but it could also be Seven-Up, vodka or ginger ale, couldn't it?" he asked. The juror agreed that was possible.

Branton then explained the contents of the pitcher was an example of "circumstantial evidence" since nobody had seen or tasted it.

He further explained that when a case is based on circumstantial evidence and one inference from the evidence points to guilt and another to innocence, the jury is always required to choose innocence.

Circumstantial evidence is expected to provide much of the case against Miss Davis, the 28-year-old black Communist charged with murder, kidnap and conspiracy in the Aug. 7, 1970 shootout at the Marin County Civic Center in which four persons were killed. She is accused of supplying the weapons used in the escape attempt.

Prosecutor Albert Harris Jr., questioning another juror, said that if there are two interpretations from one set of facts that were reasonable, the jury must accept the one pointing to innocence.

But he said if one interpretation is reasonable and the other unreasonable, the jury would have to go with the reasonable interpretation.

The battle of the blackboard started when defense attorney Howard Moore Jr. drew a thick chalk line signifying the "presumption of innocence" the prosecution must erase before Miss Davis can be convicted.

At the first opportunity, prosecutor Harris erased the chalk line and listed the charges.

Shortly afterward, Moore walked to the board and said: "Some think that just by stating the charges, you can erase the presumption of innocence." He then circled the statement of charges with his thick presumption of innocence line.

Riker's Island Prisoners Rebel

NEW YORK (LNS) — Lives of hostages threatened. Riot caused by a handful of hardcore militants!

These are just a few of the statements thrown around in the media in reaction to the riots at Riker's Island Prison in New York on February 28. What really happened is still hard to tell since there has been almost a complete press blackout.

What are the conditions in the prison? What happened during the riot? Have there been reprisals? At this point, little more is available than the New York Times picture of a "handful of militants...defying a surrender ultimatum...(armed with) makeshift knives, bedspring spears, chair legs and buckets of hot water."

The riot occurred in the Riker's Island juvenile jail. Located near Manhattan in New York, the prison also has separate facilities for older men and for women of all ages. Men in the juvenile jail are aged 16-21, and are mainly black and Puerto Rican.

Three hundred fifty prisoners rioted and held five guards hostage for three hours. Correction Commissioner Benjamin Malcolm talked with inmates over a loudspeaker. He also conferred with Deputy Mayor Edward Hamilton and Mayor John Lindsay about freeing the hostages by force.

The inmates asked to speak to representatives of the Young Lords Party, the Muslims, the Black Liberation Army, and reporters. The Commissioner asked the inmates to release the hostages as a condition for the talks.

At five p.m., Commissioner Malcolm gave the order (with Lindsay's approval) to storm the barricaded cell block. Several rounds of tear gas were thrown through the windows, and 150 prison guards stormed the entrance.

Twenty officers and at least 100 inmates were injured. Twenty-five inmates were treated in hospitals.

When the former men's jail in Riker's Island got overcrowded, a new one was built and the younger men were moved into the old building. The prison is overcrowded now (two men are in each one man cell) and in the summer even more people are squeezed in.

Most of the men in the juvenile section are awaiting trial-stuck there because they can't afford to pay bail. They can be there for a night, or for nine months. Some sentenced inmates are also sent to Riker's although they are there only for 1-90 days. (Men with longer sentences are sent to places like Elmira, in upstate New York.)

The prison school can only teach 180 of the 1929 inmates. The men get about one hour of recreation a day. "They're just storing you away," said one inmate. "Like, you have nothing to look forward to, nothing to learn. Your mind is dormant, you don't grow at all, all you talk about is what you did or didn't do."

Last year, four men at Riker's "hung themselves", and in the past two years two corrections officers were indicted for selling heroin to the prisoners. (These are the figures the Department of Corrections will admit to).

On April 22, 1971 over 75 inmates fought with guards after a guard tried to remove one inmate from the gym. And on February 1, 175 inmates battled guards for over 45 minutes to protest the new rules forcing prisoners to eat in isolated groups near their cell blocks instead of together in the main dining room.

Although the recent rioting is over now, the press is still being denied access to the prison. A team of Legal Aid lawyers is trying to interview everyone. The beatings may still be going on; there have been reports of prisoners forced to run a gauntlet of prison guards, who beat them severely.

NEW YORK (LNS)-As if sexism here on earth isn't bad enough, it's now catapulting its way through the vast reaches of the Galaxy as part of U.S. scientists' message to other planetary civilizations. The Pioneer 10 spaceship launched February 26, is on the longest space mission in history to date. Its mission? To send back to earth some two years from now, close-up pictures and scientific observations of Jupiter.

And perhaps more importantly, the Pioneer 10 will announce our existence to possible distant civilizations through symbols engraved on a gold-coated aluminum plate. The two symbols foremost on the plate are drawings of man and woman. Man's hand is raised in a friendly salute--and you guessed it--the woman is standing passively at his side.

Other less controversial symbols include one (on the top left-hand corner) which shows the two states of the hydrogen atom as the unit of time (radio frequency) and distance (wave-length) used. A star-like diagram (center left) shows the position of earth relative to 14 pulsars (stars) that emit radio pulses at regular (though in some cases slowly changing) rhythms. Man and woman stand infront of a diagram of the spacecraft (center right) and at the bottom of the plate there is a representation of the solar system which shows that the Pioneer 10 was launched from the third planet out from the sun.

Help Each Other

This weekend two local organizations, SOS and COS (Community Offering Support) combined in an effort to further the cause espoused by both groups, the humane treatment of patients at Belchertown State School.

What makes this unification notable is not the purpose of the groups involved but rather their make-up. Students and townspeople.

If this merging of groups works out, and there is no reason to expect it won't, it will mark a significant move towards the creation of a foundation for further cooperation between students and town residents on problems which concern both.

The resources of the campus and town are both limited in many areas. Time, money, expertise and information. If the University and town can unite on other issues that involve them both it would provide a greater and more powerful foundation that either alone could hope to build.

The anti-war movement discovered this. Progress towards ending the war has been greater since the involvement of all portions of the nation in the effort.

The town and campus working together on problems of common interest won't solve all our problems (the anti-war movement proved that, too), but it might help. At this point in the nation's state of affairs, all help is needed.

Obstructing The Hill

By LARRY HURWITZ

I'm sick of Howard Brogan. As a resident of Orchard Hill, which for eight years has been struggling to become a true Residential College, I must admit that this man's antics have me truly perplexed. During these past eight years, the HILL has never come further towards its goals at a faster rate than under the direction of the present Master, Leon Barron. The HILL offers over twenty courses and will offer twenty eight in the fall. In addition, over thirty five colloquia are being offered this semester. Perhaps for this reason, last Thursday at the Faculty Senate meeting, Howard Brogan moved to censure Leon Barron and Orchard Hill.

Brogan is a Faculty Fellow of one of the Orchard Hill dorms, a part time member of the HILL curriculum committee, and also a member of the Faculty Senate Committee on Residential Colleges. In the eight years (approx.) that Brogan has been associated with the HILL, he has repeatedly spoken out quite vociferously against many of the HILL programs that have involved student input.

In the Residential College Committee, he has published a "minority report" which stated in part that the HILL is governed by a shifting body of people, mostly students. To this point, I would like to mention that 1) Brogan is rarely at the curriculum committee meetings unless something of extreme noxiousness to him is being proposed and therefore question the position from which he makes this statement, and 2) The staff students, and all faculty who have ever had anything to do with the HILL are invited each week to these meetings. Faculty are sent letters in the mail, and also called. Students are informed though the HILL paper, THE SAGE. 3) The body of the curriculum committee is in fact not a shifting body but rather made up of a rather dedicated core of faculty, students, and staff who attend each week. The fact that more students show up for the meetings is an indication that students are vitally interested in the future of the HILL. Also in the report to the Residential College Committee were two statements which adequately demonstrated Brogan's reasoning. 1) That there are no such thing as Orchard Hill Faculty. 2) That personnel decisions should be decided by the Orchard Hill Faculty alone and not the students, faculty and staff, together.

Brogan's latest complaint with Orchard Hill is that, as mentioned above, students are members of the Orchard Hill Personnel Committee. This committee has the responsiblity of choosing one or more possible candidates for a full time Faculty Position which has been tentatively offered by the Provost's Office. The composition of this committee was decided at two meetings, one of which Brogan attended. At the one he did attend, he quite adamantly stated that he did not feel that students were qualified to decide on the hiring, promotion, tenure...of a Faculty Member.

After he stated his case, and after the committee voted almost unanimously to allow students on the Personnel Committee, he stormed out. The rationale for having students on such a committee was that since Orchard Hill is an experimental and Residential College whose purpose is to provide a more personal and interdisciplinary form of education for its residents, students who live there should have a voice in determining who would teach in the college. Furthermore, all too often in this university, it has been the policy to hire professors more on their merit as a scholar and their potential to publish and acquire grants than it has been to hire them on their ability to appeal to students through their superior teaching.

Perhaps Brogan should peek out the top of his Ivory Tower and consider that students are the ones who are manipulated in this educational system, so they should have some control in deciding their final destiny.

The most puzzling aspect of this entire Orchard Hill/Howard Brogan never-ending-affair is why he continues to be associated with the HILL when obviously it represents all the things that his myopic reasoning opposes. His constant obstructionism is a never ending threat to the realization of Orchard Hill as a Residential College as most of its residents and its active Faculty perceive it to be. Furthermore, his antiquated views on students and their role in determining their education is an ideal which does not at all fit in with any concept of progressive higher education, much less with the goal of an experimental Residential College.

It's A New Day

It's a New Day "Thank God All Might, it's a New Day. If you do not believe that life holds for you a certain amount of satisfactions, no matter how large or small, than life would not be worth living. Well, do I have news for you!! "The Promised Day" has come. At first I thought this might sound a bit fanatical, but it is not fanatical. I am just telling the truth. Of course nowadays admitting truths do seem a bit fanatical because no one really wants to face most of them. But this truth does not bother me, because it is motivated by a force far greater than any of us:

"Soon, will the present-day order be rolled up, and a new one spread out in its stead. After a time, all the governments on earth will change. Oppression will envelop the world. And following a universal convulsion, the sun of justice will rise from the horizon of the unseen realm. The whole earth is now in a state of pregnancy. The day is approaching when it will have yielded its noblest fruits, when from it will have sprung forth the loftiest trees, the most enchanting blossoms, the most heavenly blessings."

"All nations and kindreds,..will become a single nation. Religious and sectarian antagonism, the hostility of races and peoples, and differences among nations, will be eliminated. All men will adhere to one religion, will have one common faith, will be blended into one race, and become a single people. All will dwell in one common fatherland, which is the planet itself."

These most eloquent words were written by two of the Most important people to have ever shed light on this Day; Baha'u'llah, the Founder of the Baha'I Faith and Abdul 'Baha, his son and Perfect Exemplar of His teachings.

The effects of human degradation is far reaching, much farther than we all seem to realize. We are all responsible for hungry children, war, oppression, racism and spiritual disease. It is however sad that mankind must be brought to its knees before we recognize the Truth of this age.

"In this wondrous Revelation, this glorious century, the foundation of the Faith of God, and the distinguishing feature of His Law, is the consciousness of the oneness of mankind."

How does one recognize the Truth? By what method can you test this truth?

'A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit....Wherefore by their fruits ye shall Know them."

Poems

The Abduction

High upon, to overlook the depth to which is God.
The London fog
from across the sea extends the grace and rush of life, and offers contemplation, thus, therein.
My mist becomes that mist...
My freedom, there to fly.
A gentle cot upon to rest, to a leaving we cannot deny.
The sleeping heave felt deep within,
and complimented, thus, by Him.
The character of this, our flight,
not to be dwelt upon.
For it, my loves, is all alone.
The unawares of tripping, and the unwitting of the mind... the soul alone knows how to search for what none else can find.
Let not your God to lose His way.
He must be near at hand in times of one another's mist uprising to fog where we have climbed.
To treasure inspiration is to treasure that which rules.
The treasure of lonely fools.
Mistake not what is loneliness for one who knows his way.
To know the hopelessness of God is to earn the right to pray.

The Unknown Man

What has not been can never be again.
What has not begun
can never have an end.
What cannot be destroyed
you cannot mend.
What is not real
you cannot but pretend.
Adolf Paulin was a king and now has ceased to be.
His immortality was not,
and now has set him free.
An island from wherein he spoke and now wherein he dwells...
No one ever touched his mind,
so none, his story, tells.
For every stone laid into place
there's one already there.
The unknown soldier's tomb has, now, an epitaph as void and bare.

Letters To The Editor

A Womanly Rebuttal

To the Editor:

Anita Pepi's letter in March 8th's Collegian cannot go unanswered. Her comments and criticisms are a bit hasty, I think and deserve rebuttal. Firstly, as an individual and a woman I have been to the Infirmary for pelvic examinations and have been treated with respect and patience. My questions, when I had them, were answered carefully and completely. When I had further questions, a call to the Health Education Office cleared up any confusions I had. The exam itself need not be lengthy nor do most women need to see their own bodies at that time. (Most of us shower occasionally.) If a request were made for a different manner or means to be employed, I'm confident that I'd get my way. My feelings, I think, coincide with the vast majority of students on the campus regarding physician care, particularly the women regarding pelvic exams.

Secondly, however trivial or inappropriate pamphlets may seem, they are a convenient reference source and supplement to your doctor's information. If the content is not especially what you want, give them to a girl who will find them interesting or useful. We're all different. Besides, after checking with the Infirmary, I have found that the two pamphlets mentioned in the letter are not even given out at the Infirmary. There are pamphlets which are designed to help students understand their bodies and health better but not with these titles. (You might check the titles again!)

Lastly, I think you'll find every member of the Infirmary staff willing to discuss your complaints. There is also the Health Services Student Advisory Board which is there to help people who have complaints. The Infirmary is FOR students. You can help it work too.

Silent Bigmouth

To the Editor:

I am writing in reply to the article, "Up the Infirmary", by Anita Pepi in Wednesday's March 8 Collegian.

In the first place, if you don't like the treatment at the infirmary - DON'T GO. Nobody is twisting your arm. Find a private doctor that will soak you of your money.

If you consider the small amount of time it requires to take care of your own body too precious - THEN ROT.

If you don't want to wear a sheet simply say, "No thanks". Any why should a light bother you if you're so immodest?

If you think $12.00 is too much to ask for an I.U.D., a private gynecologist will be happy to charge you up to $40.00.

If you can't see what he's doing - ASK. You're the one who complains about not getting questions answered but he can't answer a question that hasn't been asked. Open your BIG mouth and ask, "What's this for?", "What are you doing now?", and "Why". If you're dumb enough to sit there silent, then you deserve the swamp of ignorance you're sitting in.

It is unfortunate you (one of the "thousands"; how about a maximum of 200?) had a bad experience at the infirmary. The doctors and nurses are warm, understanding and welcome questions. They will relate their own personal experiences and information to you if you sound interested.

You only get out what you put in. If you are warm, honest and friendly they will be too. But if you sit there bitching I wouldn't blame them one bit for giving you crap.

Food Petitioning

To the Editor:

Thursday night's petitioning at the dining commons didn't go over very well. People just enjoy eating the same food but continue to gripe. The Student Senate Food Services Committee refuses to hear any complaints by any students who refuse to sign the petition.

The petition is to show the administration that the majority of the students don't like the food. For the money we pay, we want better food or at least better preparation; but without massive support and proof of it, the administration will continue to function as it is and nothing will change.

The student employment at the dining commons is afraid to sign our petition. Why?—Because they're afraid of losing their jobs? That's ridiculous! If every student is afraid to sign a petition, then they are asses to work under conditions that they don't like.

Possibly they should consider their freedom of thought and speech, to be imprisoned by the administration. People bitch about the food and ask why nobody does anything about it. Then when a few come out of their rooms and off their beds to try to organize some action to bring about some necessary change, where are all those who supposedly care about what they are forced to eat? You can say that people don't have time to act but is it really that hard to support others who are acting sincerely in your interest?

You have a chance to get what you want from the administration if you would just get together and back an effort to get your needs answered. If they refuse to listen or act in our interest, then we stop eating in the dining commons and let the administration eat the shit. Maybe that's the only way to get the changes that are so important to us all.

Please—everyone who feels like helping the Student Senate Food Services Committee—come to our meeting on Tuesday from 6:30-8:30 p.m. in Campus Center Rm. 903.

A Current Rash

To the Editor:

This is in reference to the letter of Sylvan Area Government President Mickey Harris which appeared in Thursday's Collegian condemning what he called Donald McGilvray's "non-involvement" concerning the Elevator Emergency Distress System installed in the elevators in the Sylvan Area. Mr. McGilvray chose to approach the elevator problem through the public forum provided by this newspaper. It seems to me that if the President of Sylvan Area Government spent more time exploring solutions and proposing action to the elevator problem and less time assailing positive action on the part of people like Mr. McGilvray, there might exist the possibility of stopping the current rash of elevator breakdowns.

For Those In Need-Write

To the Editor:

We are conducting an unsubsidized, action-oriented study of the character and extent of political repression in American colleges and universities today. We are writing to campus newspapers throughout the United States in an effort to locate students and teachers who are having difficulties in obtaining financial support, finding employment, or obtaining contract renewals or tenure because of their political activities.

We believe that the widely-publicized cases involving radical activists at Stanford, Washington, Southern Illinois, San Diego, and Vermont, represent only a small fraction of the total number of instances in which efforts are being made to force radical teachers and students out of American colleges and universities. If this proves to be the case, we hope to convene a national Conference on Academic Repression in St. Louis in late April or early May. In order to make it an effective working conference it is important that we hear from concerned teachers and students as soon as possible. Those involved in or aware of cases of political repression are asked to contact us immediately and, if possible, to enclose details.

Very truly yours,
J. David Colfax, Ph.D.
Associate Professor

English Opportunities

To the Editor:

Not too long ago English majors when approached with what they would do after graduation usually felt safe leaning on the thought that if nothing else was available at least they could teach. But things do change and people who are begging for teaching jobs are having hard times. The English and Education departments have found it necessary to crack down on their placement of student teachers. Next year only twenty-five students will be allowed to student teach in English each semester.

Do not despair there are a few students in the English Department Undergraduate Council who are concerned about job opportunities for the English major. These students are working hard with faculty to set up a program to show all English and potential English majors that there are opportunities for good jobs with a B.A. in English. During the evening of March 16th there will be a professionals, faculty and your advisors to talk to you and suggest areas of concentration for the career you are thinking about and the opportunities available to you in the fields of journalism, technical writing, publishing, law and student teaching.

Don't run to the Placement office your last semester in school and look for a job. I doubt you will find one you want. EDUC members want to help you, so save some time, money, and frustration--Come Thursday, March 16th, 7:00 p.m. Campus Center, Rm. 168-172.

Reply To A Question

Your clitoris? Her clitoris! The room was oven-brown,
The pillows pink, the lights from the ceiling very well behaved.
We brought with us a jug of wine, some poems
(The Rubaiyat, I think!), and of course some mints:
The night was quite profound. I recall
That her soft throat giggled when I kissed her,
And that her fingers made wet creases under my tensed-up biceps,
But the thing, really, that I really recall is that,
In our moment of rapture, a blue snow-flecked swallow Peeked in from its position outside the window, nestling in the rheumy breeze,
Entirely at peace with the elements. I flew to that bird!
I left her with my memories, and now she is a wretched whore,
Packing the black streets of New Delhi with her ragged, anemic smile.
A more deserving prostitute will not be found anywhere, my dear.

The headline to the Nixon-ITT story on page five in Friday's newspaper should have read "Nixon Reportedly Favors ITT In Suit," not as it was originally printed, "Nixon Favors ITT In Suit."

Bouncing ping-pong balls are the newest thing at the Student Union games area. The installation of two new table tennis tables set the MDC ping-pong testers, Judy and Charlie, into action. First reports are good, but we are holding final say until we see the student reaction. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton)

Need summer credits? Check out Utica College of Syracuse University. UC's offering an unforgettable "Summer of '72"

FOUR DAYS OF STUDY — THREE DAYS OF FUN

In the heart of Central New York's vacation land, UC's just a short hop in the old jalop from Old Forge, swinging center of Adirondack action. Historic Cooperstown on shimmering Otsego Lake, home of the Farmer's Museum, Busch Woodland Museum, and the Baseball Hall of Fame is only a half hour away. Trotters and pacers run every night at nearby Vernon Downs. New beat music fills the nights at close by Oneida Lake, and Saratoga's Famous Performing Arts Center is an hour and a half away by Thruway.

There's golf, tennis and baseball right on campus. Plus swimming, diving, basketball, volleyball and weight training in our new $2.3 million Phys Ed Center. Day classes end at 1:30 P.M. so there's plenty of time for fun. Other action scheduled for our Summer of '72 includes film, drama and music workshops for fun and credit.

Food Service

Catering To You

By BETSY PEET AND JON SNOW

Planning a party or picnic? Perhaps the Catering Division of Food Services can be of assistance. This little- known facet of Food Services has been steadily growing for the past four years.

What had been an "ad hoc" service provided for the University Community as the need arose, has become an integrated department with a full time coordinator and manager. This was a result of demands by students, staff, and local organizations, for increased services not available through local restaurants and food suppliers, which did not have staff or facilities to handle large groups or special parties.

Some of the functions which the Catering Division has served, include the Senior Day Barbeque, fraternity and sorority dinner-dances, Alumni Weekend, and testimonials, such as was held for retiring Dean Jeffrey last spring. Next week when Julius Erving returns to campus, the Catering Division will serve over 250 guests at the Awards Banquet.

Small parties and intimate dinners are given as much priority as large events. he Berkshire Club Room is an ideal setting for gatherings of this size. Luncheons and buffets can be accommodated in larger halls, such as one of the dining commons.

As a part of its services, the Catering Division offers in-Dorm-Dinners for Board-Plan Ticket holders. This provides variety and conviviality away from the dining commons. In addition to these functions, luncheons, buffets, and seated dinners are arranged daily with many campus groups.

For those who like to be outside, barbeques, cookouts, and supplies to "take out" are another part of the extensive list of services which have been added to the Catering Department. You can enjoy the out of doors by having steak, hamburgers, or hot dogs cooked on an open grill, and also barbeques of chicken or spare ribs. If you are planning an extended outing, placing an order for catering "supplies" provides for a nice savings over outside prices. Also, box lunches prepared by Catering, make for an ideal and inexpensive picnic. Try this the next time you head for Colrain Gorge or Hampton Beach.

Mrs. Shirley Stafford, the coordinator for Catering, has been invaluable in assisting many groups with problems in planning of occasions. She is an expert at listening to what YOU want, and letting you do your thing while getting the best advice. Mrs. Stafford works with Mr Richard Ellis, who manages the special operations and productions, from complex buffets to hundreds of box lunches.

Chet Tidlund, an experienced chef, prepares gourmet meals and exquisite buffets with a flair. And Eddy Sacco skillfully complements these meals with home baked cakes, pies, pastries, and specialties such as petite Quiche Lorraine.

Not a direct part of catering, but very much a result of Mrs. Stafford's congeniality and efforts, are the tours offered by her for any of the food service facilities. She feels the tours of facilities are an important part of understanding services like Catering, as well as day to day operations.

In the future, contact Shirley Stafford at 5-2136 or 5-2148 in order to plan a complete party. This week a new information brochure will be available at the Catering Office in Worcester Commons, or may be sent to you upon request. Simply call the number listed above and plan that spring picnic!

Missing Your Bedspread?

During the course of this academic year, the University Lost and Found, located at the bottom of the escalator in the Campus Center, has returned over 100 pairs of glasses, several hundred pairs of mittens and gloves, scarves, hats and keys. However, there are still 157 pairs of gloves remaining, 28 pairs of glasses, 54 scarves and hats, 106 books and 23 sets of keys not to mention the numerous other odds and ends, hair dryer, bedspread, and records, etc.

The lost and found also have an equal number of these unclaimed items left over from last semester All of these lost articles of the fall semester will be sent to charitable organizations such as Belchertown if they are not claimed before Spring vacation. These organizations greatly appreciate receiving these articles, however, the lost and found realizes that many students cannot afford to lose them. It is open Monday through Saturday from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. and Sunday from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Classics Offers Two New Majors

Two new majors will be offered next fall under the auspices of the recently established Classics Department. The new majors are Judaic Studies and Near Eastern Studies. Courses involving these two majors will be offered in cooperation with the Five College Program.

Mrs. Mary Henry, secretary to Professor Gilbert Lawall, Acting Head of the Classics Department, said that the new majors will help to broaden the new, but fast growing Department. And that fresh and exciting things are being developed in Classics through the initiative of Prof. Lawall and Prof. David Biddle of the History Department.

A brochure will be put out at the end of March by the Five College Coordinator with additional information concerning the two majors.

Draft Resistors Want More Than Amnesty

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Leaders of American draft resisters and deserters who have found refuge in Sweden say promises of amnesty aren't enough to bring the colony home.

"I'm not going back," said George Meals of Atlanta, Ga.

Meals, 27, and others among the estimated 670 U.S. draft-dodgers and Army dropouts living in Sweden have discussed the amnesty projects under consideration in Congress. But they say they don't want forgiveness because they aren't the guilty ones in the Vietnam war.

"Every American tax-paying citizen is a criminal for paying taxes that provide for the Indochina war," said Meals.

"If amnesty was offered today only about 200 of us would think of going back," said Roberto Argento, 26.

Argento, employed by the Swedish government to work among fellow defectors, is an exception in the refugee community.

He has a working knowledge of Swedish, good health and a regular job. He and Meals have been in the country for more than three years.

Others in the defector ranks are less sure of themselves. They still make the rounds of leftist sympathizers or girl friends, carrying their sleeping bags from apartment to apartment. Unable to speak the language, they are unable to work.

"Amnesty-they talk about amnesty but I don't even have the money to go to the movies," says a U.S. visitor to a deserter gathering in provincial Malmo.

The Swedish welfare agency pays for the weekly social meeting and free meal, saying it helps officials keep track of the deserter community. Nearly all the deserters draw government benefits, such as free health care.

Black Actor Speaks Today

Chestyn Everett, noted Black actor, director, artist, critic, essayist and teacher, will speak on "The Role of The Black Artist in Revolution", this morning from 11 a.m. - 1 p.m. in the School of Education old Library. His presentation will be sponsored by the School of Education Committee to Combat Racism. Mr. Everett's visit on campus is sponsored by the Black Cultural Center of the WEB DuBois Black Studies Department.

Although he has many merits to his credit, Professor Everett is most prominent in the Black world following his service as director of the highly acclaimed Black Show Players and his present directorship of the united black artist cuba will present their production "To All Things Black & Beautiful" in Amherst on April 21). Mr. Everett is presently the Langston Hughes Professor of Black Theatre Arts, African Studies and Research Center, Cornell University.

Cornell Wins Debate

By STEPHEN FISHER

Cornell University was the winner of an intercollegiate debate tournament held at UMass this weekend by the UMass Debate Union. Cornell won in the final round against a team from Central Michigan University. Both teams were victorious in semi-final rounds against Tufts University and Marietta College. Denny O'Connor, from Cornell, was the recipient of the best speaker award.

The topic of the debate tournament was Resolved: that greater controls should be placed upon the gathering and utilization of information about U.S. citizens by government agencies. Debates were judged for the speakers' logic, delivery, evidence, organization, and refutation. All teams were in the novice (beginners) division.

Other schools represented were Bridgeport University, Harvard University, Bowdoin College, Emerson College, Fitchburg State College, Holy Cross College, George Mason College (Virginia), Miami Dade Jr. College, St. John's University, State University of New York at Plattsburg, U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, U.S. Military Academy (West Point), University of New Hampshire, University of Rhode Island, and the University of Vermont. UMass entered four teams, all of which had excellent records, but were ineligible to win trophies because UMass was the host for this tournament.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Libra can be delicately sensitive. Member of this zodiacal sign are not always immediately appreciated. But time wears well with Libra and these natives can emerge triumphant. Libra can fight as well as love. Libra is the loyal opposition and the persistent ally. Libra has a finger on the pulse of the public and is the artist and prophet. Libra harmonizes with Leo, Sagittarius, Gemini and Aquarius. There is great attraction to Aries and often marriage results. Libra should be cautious in relationships with Capricorn and Cancer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Forces tend to be scattered. Finish one task before embarking on different assignment. Be discreet. Not wise now to reveal all. You will be consulted and called. Maintain balance and sense of humor.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Friendship and money may now be akin to oil and water. Look out for your own interests. Not everyone is idealistic and you could be taken. You have right to be independent. Protect self in emotional clinches.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be ready for overtime assignment, added responsibility. Older individual displays faith important that you also have confidence in yourself. Halfway measures won't do. Rise above the petty.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Join forces with Sagittarian. Accent is on using past experience to make current gain. Obtain hint from one who is at a distance. Read, write and advertise. Snake oft groundless fear.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Study Taurus message. Take special care in legal area. Check details, fine print. Don't commit yourself to project unless thoroughly familiar with ramifications. Mate, close associate presses for answer.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept 22): Lie low. Wait, listen and observe. Let others show their hands. Be discreet. Answers are obtainable if you are quietly persistent. Message will become increasingly clear. Gemini is involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Home area is spotlighted. You discover that what you need is close at hand. One who makes you comfortable now is appreciated. Avoid the sensational. Be very careful when mailing large packages.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid jumping to conclusions. Tendency now is to act on impulse. It would be better to combine logic with desire. See situations, individuals as they actually exist. Then you won't be fooling yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Delay works in your favor. Patience now proves fine ally. Act accordingly. Capricorn can lend helping hand. Don't permit pride to stand in way of advancement. Show that you are ready for more trust, responsibility.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Take care in traffic. Outline aims. Move toward goal rather than in circles. Relatives, neighbors may be quarrelsome. Maintain balance. You will draw people to you who confide problems. Be fair, but firm.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New approach proves profitable. Move with the times. Discard outmoded methods. Guard valuables. Young person is enthusiastic but may not have all the facts. Know this and respond accordingly. Be analytical.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Orthodox methods may not suffice. Give full rein to imagination, creative sources. Teach and learn. Get off sidelines and into game. You can make new start to new direction. Many comment on your improved appearance.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a square shooter, frank, individualistic. This should be one of your most significant years, with September marked as an outstanding month. You make gains and, if single, you marry.

MEET THE ORDER THAT IS 113 YEARS YOUNG.

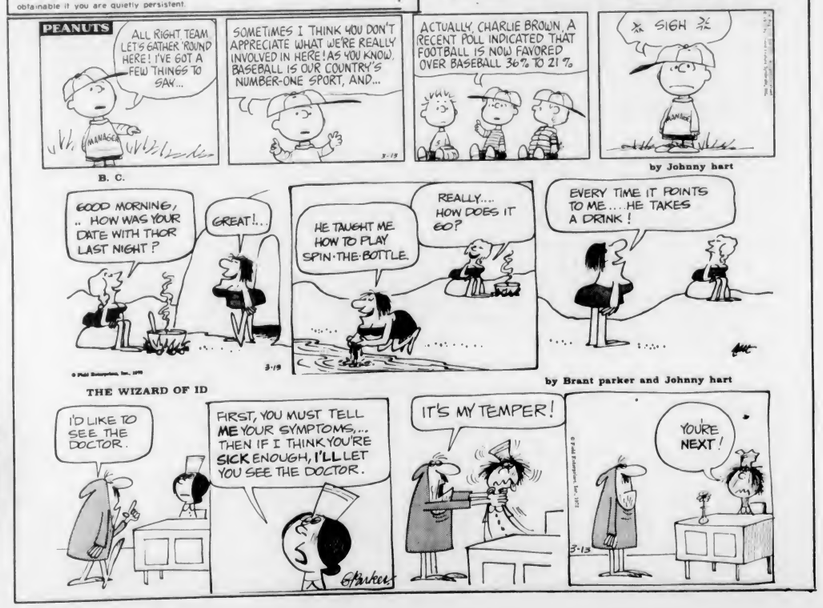
Paulists are often called the "modern" order but it isn't just because we are only a little over a century old. It's because of what we stand for.

The Paulists were founded by Isaac Hecker, one of the earliest ecumenical spokesmen. Father Hecker, who was a convert to Catholicism and a century ahead of his time, conceived and directed the first missionary society of priests established in, and for, North America.

Father Hecker's vision was a community that would "meet the needs of the Church in each age as they arise." For this reason he wanted the Paulists to be flexible, not wedded to specific works. A special project might be suitable for a particular time and a given need, but changing times would require different techniques and approaches that might differ from age to age.

That's why the Paulists are so flexible. Whether a man is in a parish, University Apostolate or mission ... whether he is involved in a narcotic panel or the Paulist press, radio, films or television, he has the freedom to use his own talents in his own way to achieve his objectives.

Paulists are not custodians of the past, but explorers of the future.



Now you know why we are called "modern."

For more information about the Paulist priesthood write to:

Kidd On JV's: "I Thought We'd Do Better"

By ROY LYONS

"I thought we'd do better." Those were the words of hockey coach Russ Kidd in evaluating his J.V. team's recently completed season. Commenting further, Kidd, a very personable guy, regarded the season as mildly disappointing but obviously not disasterous.

Although the strong skating squad possessed excellent depth and balance, Kidd did mention several outstanding individual performers. The late addition of Jay Connors was instrumental to the team. He joined his brother and Kevin Thompson to form the Redmen's most potent scoring line. They knew each other's moves instinctively, and it was reflected in their smooth, often spectacular, passing. Mike Ellis and Brian Mulcahy were the team's stalwart performers on the blue line. Ellis was the fourth leading scorer, indicating his ability to skate the puck out of his own end and through center ice. Steve Nims played hustling two way hockey all season even though his value to the team cannot be seen in the final statistics.

Goaltending was hot and cold, but that seems to be more the exception than the rule in hockey. John Binkoski saw most of the action in the UMass nets, although Kidd was encouraged by Steve Moran's abbreviated performances. Varsity back-ups Chick Rheault and John Kiah were used sparingly. Both had excellent attitudes all season.

Freshmen comprised almost the entire unit this season, and it appears that many will log another season of J.V. play before moving up to the varsity. For this reason Kidd anticipates a more experienced aggregation next season.

Several highly-touted schoolboys have applied to UMass, notably forward Mike Powers, goalie Cap Raeder, and defenseman Rich Goryl. However, other hockey schools in the area are equally interested in this trio, and where they choose to go is strictly a matter for speculation at this time.

Another matter for speculation is the new rule which will allow freshmen to play varsity hockey next season. There will be ten berths available on the varsity with the departure of the seniors, and there is always a possibility that one or two of these could be won by freshmen. Of course the J.V.'s loss would be the varsity's gain.

The Redmen J.V.'s will face another tough schedule next season, including many Division I teams. Practice sessions will be infrequent because of the squad's low priority at Orr Rink. In spite of this, it appears Russ Kidd will have the talent to improve on last season's .500 finish.

Wrist Wrestling Comes To UMass

By GEOFF KURINSKY

Wrist wrestling is the newest intramural sport to visit the campus. While it's not one of the four major sports, wirst wrestling is an up and coming event which has been growing in popularity since it was formalized a few short years ago. Similar to arm wrestling, the winner of a march is determined by one fall or by one default.

To keep things fair contestants compete only with other of similar weight. The weight divisions for the men are: Lightweight (Under 155), Middle weight (156-175), Heavyweight (176-195), and last but not least Godzilla weight (196 and up). Yes, women's libbers you get your chance to wrist wrestle also. The women's weight divisions are: Lightweight (Under 120 lbs.), Middleweight (121-140), Heavyweight (141-160), and Unlimited (161 and heavier).

Entries for this event are due on Monday, March 13 and practice sessions will be held on March 14, 15, and 16 beginning at 7:00 PM in Boyden Gym. The actual matches will begin on Monday, March 20 with preliminaries on Monday and Tuesday and the finals on Wednesday March 22.

Volleyball action came to a close last Thursday with the campus championship matches. Coming away with the men's title were the Mousketeers who were victorious over the Terriors (2-1). On their route to the final, the Mousketeers beat the favored Kamikazees and the The Team with every match being decided by a third game.

The women's title was grabbed off by the Lovers in an easy victory over Sorority champs, GSS. GSS had looked impressive in kocking off Kappa Alpha Theta but were outclassed in two straight games by the Residence Hall champions.

The James Gang is the Co-Rec Champion after knocking off the Superstars 2-1. On route to the finals, both teams upset the favorite teams, The James Gang beat the Bimbams and the Superstars knocked off the powerful AC's. Anyway, that's the end of the volleyball season, a most exciting one it turned out to be.

The spirng season will again feature a full slate of activities. The deadlines for entering all the events is Wednesday, March 15. Softball has been one of the most popular intramural sports in the past. Last year Lambda Chi "B" took the campus championship and hopefully they'll be back again defending it.

Phi Sigma Delta will be back again defending their championship in soccer after a super performance last year. In Badminton action, the domination of the fraternities continues with last year's campion being Phi Mu Delta who should come back strong again. Other action which will be going on this spring are Women's Slow Pitch Softball, Women's Badminton doubles, and Team Horseshoes. Remember, the deadlines for all these events is approaching fast, it's next Wednesday, March 15.

Battle Of The Carolinas Looms

South Carolina broke away from the Atlantic Coast Conference, but still can't shake North Carolina.

They met last year in the ACC playoffs and will meet this year in the NCAA basketball tournament.

A rematch of the longtime rivals was established by South Carolina's 53-51 victory over Temple in a first-round NCAA East Regional game and North Carolina's 73-64 success over Maryland for the ACC crown Saturday night.

"I still think we're playing for the Atlantic Coast Conference championship," said North Carolina Coach Dean Smith, referring to Thursday's meeting in the East Semifinals at Morgantown, W.Va.

Smith hopes to have more success this year than last. The Gamecocks' parting shot before going independent was an ACC playoff victory over Smith's Tar Heels.

The two will play opposite Penn and Villanova in the semis. Penn advanced to Morgantown with a 76-60 triumph over Providence and Villanova moved up by trouncing East Carolina 85-70 in Saturday's first round.

Marquette and Florida State advanced in the Mideast, Southwestern Louisiana and Texas in the Midwest and Weber State and Long Beach State made it in the West in other action Saturday.

Marquette ripped Ohio University 73-49; Florida State trimmed Eastern Kentucky 83-81; Southwestern Louisiana hammered Marshall 112-101; Texas whipped Houston 85-74; Weber State crushed Hawaii 91-64 and Long Beach State turned back Brigham Young 95-90 in overtime.

The victories established semifinal meetings for Marquette with Kentucky and Florida State with Minnesota in the Mideast semifinals Thursday at Dayton, Ohio.

Ballot Seeks Student Preference For Concert

By MDC STAFF

A spokesman for the Concert Committee announced yesterday that a ballot will appear in the Collegian, (today) which will enable students to state their preferences of groups for a free concert in the stadium this spring.

The Committee has only $8,000 to spend for musical entertainment, which narrows down the possibilities considerably, he said.

This means that supergroups like the Stones and the Who are out of the question. Also, in compiling this list, Gary Gomes, committee tri-chairman, said that group availabilities for the projected date of the concert had to be taken into consideration.

(They're shooting for the first weekend in May.) This rules out groups like J. Geils and Yes, who will be on tour in Europe at the time, and also Mountain, who will be reorganizing after the departure of Jack Bruce from the band, said Gomes.

Committee member Mitch Press, who is in charge of booking the groups for the concert, said that he compiled the list of groups by contacting various booking agencies throughout the country and checking out availabilities and approximate prices. There were certain "package deals" offered to him which could make the prices less expensive, such as the Dave Mason and Deloney and Bonnie "packages" listed in the poll, he said.

Press also enthusiastically remarked that he was even approached by Warner Brother's Reprise Records who offered the multi-group package including America, Pentangle, Todd Rundgren, Jo Jo Gunne, and Derek, Danny, Neil, & Bateau. "In addition to this, Warner Brothers said that they would supply the entire sound system needed for the stadium(which would end up costing us over $2,000 on our own), and possibly help out financially with security," he said. "They desired to videotape the concert for future purposes."

During last Thursday's Concert Committee meeting Bill Staton emphasized the immediate need for more funds in order to maintain the projected budget for the concert. Since half the raised funds would go to Students Offering Support, $6,000 would have to be raised in order to meet the budget, he said.

This money would be raised through various means, including dances, concerts, and coffee houses in which a minimal admission fee would be charged. The necessity for raising money, added Gomes, is very evident, if the Concert Committee and the students wish to see the money currently in the Committee's account go entirely for the hiring of a good act, instead of it being eaten away by sound and Security expenses.

At the meeting, Staton also emphasized the fact that the Committee will need more members, especially for the concerts and coffeehouses that would be held as benefits for both the Concert Committee and SOS.

Gomes said that when selecting the groups, the students should pick five groups on a scale of one to five in order of preference. Ballots can be deposited in either the Student Activities Office or the various Student Senate Ballot Boxes on campus. Gomes asks that the ballots be returned by Thursday, in order for the committee to make a final selection.

Press thinks that the students should take into consideration that money can be saved by selecting the package deals offered and that a wider variety of entertainment could be given to the student body by selecting these packages.

The committee's decision, based on the poll, should be available by Friday. Gomes and Press expressed the hope that the concert will come off successfully after all the problems it has encountered.

More Incentives Needed For All-Volunteer Army

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department told Congress Monday that additional incentives may be needed to achieve an all-volunteer armed forced by July 1, 1973.

"In spite of maximum efforts to increase enlistments and re-enlistments, it does not now appear that we can beat the target date," Roger T. Kelley, assistant secretary of Defense for manpower, said in testimony before a Senate Armed Services subcommittee.

Kelley reported progress in decreasing reliance on the draft in the last six months of 1971. He said in that period seven out of 10 enlistees were true volunteers compared with six out of 10 a year earlier.

Combat arms' enlistments in the Army increased from a monthly average of 250 in the last half of 1970 to 3,000 in the last half of 1971.

But, he said, "the fall-off in draft-motivated enlistments has been more rapid than the increase in the supply of volunteers.

"The short-run outlook, therefore, includes the likelihood that recruiting production will be below current targets in one or more of the services.

"The Navy, in fact, has fallen short of its recruiting goals for six successive months."

To overcome this, Kelley said, the Navy began offering three-year enlistments March 1, in addition to the customary four-year term.

Kelley said it is too early to measure the effect of pay increases that became effective Nov. 14, but volunteer enlistments of men with draft lottery numbers above 241 increased 29 per cent in December and January compared with the same two months a year earlier.

Kelley said the military has not yet used the enlistment bonus authorized by Congress for combat personnel, but "at present, it appears that this special accession incentive may be needed for Army's ground-combat skills and possibly other skills as well."

The enlistment bonus could run up to $3,000 for extended enlistments.

Model 'A' Delivers Mail

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — It's no Pony Express, but the Model A Ford has been delivering mail on time for 32 years.

The saucy black and red Model A was seven years old when H.C. Cobbs bought it in 1938.

It was in such good condition that when Cobb started carrying mail in 1940, he put the flivver to work. And he's still serving the same route out of Bunnell, Fla., perking along in the same perky Model A.

Cobb and his car take to the road about 8 a.m. for his 34.8-mile route, six days a week. Mail boxes, a zip to the right, a flash of envelopes. On they glide, Cobb and his car.

With 80 mail boxes and 100 stops a day, Cobb figures he gets 20 miles to the gallon.

It's a matter of practicality using the Model A to haul mail, he says.

"The top's so high, I can get up to 15 or 20 bags in the back."

And the front seat folds forward, making loading and unloading easier.

It's not a showpiece, Cobb says, it runs like a dream. Like a good watch, built to last a lifetime.

The Weather

Yes, this looks like this may be one of those days for staying in bed, as if you didn't know. The friendly man said that we were going to get hit with heavy showers and maybe even some sleet and snow. Towards sundown, which will follow sunrise by about 11 1/2 hours, it may all turn into thunder storms, with lightening. Daytime temperatures will stay about 40, dropping to about 30 shortly after the sun drops out of sight for the night.

Grad Sen Funds Day School

By MARY GOODYEAR

The Graduate Senate last night voted to grant $1500 from their current budget to the University Day School.

Rejected was a motion offering support to Provost Gluckstern's proposal of setting the salaries of teaching assistants at $3400, and teaching associates at $3800 yearly.

The Senate discussed the unfavorable cut in funds for teaching assistants and would not support the new reduced wage proposals proposed by Gluckstern.

A unanimous decision was made, without discussion, to endorse SOS policy.

Betsy Belz, the director of the University Day School, who was present at the meeting, claimed there was "every assumption that the University Day School will occupy a permanent position at the University." Of the eighty children enrolled in the day school, 37 are of graduate parents and 29 are of undergraduate parents.

Pedro Consuegra, a graduate student on the board of directors of the University Day School, said the school has been operating with a budget about one-half of that of any other day school of its size in the area. An increased budget would make more jobs available for graduate students.

This year there was a 10%-15% cut in teaching assistants services, and a 4%-5% cut in actual funds under last year's budget.

Mark Cheran, a graduate student whose wife is attending the University at the undergraduate level, said, "It really is an important thing when you're in the situation. I just want to make a request that you support this thing as much as possible."

Nixon Out To Get Youth Vote

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a small, windowless office across the street from the White House, a 30-year-old advertising man named Ken Rietz is organizing a nationwide campaign to capture the youth vote for President Nixon.

Rietz, a native of Oshkosh, Wis., and now a partner in a Washington advertising firm, is director of the Youth Division of the Committee to Re-elect the President.

His goal is to get the Republican message across to as many of the nation's 25 million new voters as possible. To do the job he has a paid staff of 14 assistants, all under 30.

"We're putting together a Young Voters for the President group in every state," Rietz said in an interview. "The first thing we have to do is get them registered."

For the moment, the Youth Division is concentrating on key primary states, and already has set up offices in New Hampshire, Florida, Wisconsin, California and Illinois.

If Rietz's office is small, his budget isn't. "It's more than any Republican has put into this kind of campaign," said Rietz. He refused to disclose any figures except staff salaries, which run from $5,000 to $11,000.

With registration among voters currently running 2-to-1 Democratic, Rietz and his assistants are working 12-to-15 hour days to organize a nationwide network of volunteers for the precinct-level jobs of ringing doorbells and setting up registration drives.

The plan works this way: In each state, volunteers will contact potential voters, first by phone, then with follow-up letters. The information gathered is sent to the Washington headquarters where it is kept on file in computers with other statistical data on young voters.

"Also, we plan to set up training centers for speakers and volunteers in each state," said Ken Smith, 22, of Harbeson, Del. "We want to give them briefings and supply them with facts and figures."

Smith, who has charge of recruiting Republican speakers for young audiences, and his colleagues are well aware that only one-fifth of the new voters are on college campuses. Although they are scheduling Cabinet officers and White House officials to speak on key campuses, the emphasis of their campaign is on non-college youth.

"Non-college youth are virtually ignored as far as political participation is concerned," said Tom Bell, 24, of Memphis, Tenn. "We hope to contact people in businesses and work very closely with technical schools and business colleges.

"We hope to reach people who will go back to their plants and factories and reach their fellow workers for us. It's the personal involvement we're after."

FBI Arrests Frank Fruits

NEW YORK (AP) — The FBI arrested a man using the alias "Frank Fruits" Monday as he tried to flee after collecting $160,000 from Pan American World Airways extorted under the threat of bombing its planes and other facilities.

The man, who authorities said is really named Billy Owen Williams, was arraigned before U.S. Magistrate Gerard L. Goettel on charges of obstructing commerce by extortion, including threat of violence to people and property, in telephone calls and letters to Najeeb Halaby, chairman of Pan Am.

Williams, 45, was ordered held in $100,000 bail after Goettel said he felt there was reason to believe Williams was "not merely a dreamer launching onto the current fad" for threatening airlines with bombing.

Assistant U.S. Attorney James Schrieber said the government did not have proof that Williams, an escapee seven years ago from a mental institution near Tallahassee, Fla., had the intention of carrying out those threats.

But, he said, "it would be dangerous were we to speculate whether he would carry it out. The interest of law enforcement is served by catching people who threaten the airlines."

No mention of Pan Am has been made previously in the series of threats against airlines that began last week with a $2-million ransom demand to Trans World Airlines, the detection of a bomb on one of its planes in New York and the partial destruction of another by a bomb in Las Vegas.

Nursing School Site To Be Discussed

A follow-up meeting has been planned to discuss the proposal for the location of the School of Nursing, Thursday, March 16. The meeting will be held in the Campus Center Room 174-176 from 7:30-9:30 p.m. Coffee will be served. A copy of the proposed statement may be obtained at the School of Nursing office by those who have not already received one. Do come and join in the decision-making process.

Howland, Cummings Disagree On Ripoff Policy

Richard Howland, student legal counsel, yesterday stated his beliefs in regard to the policy that should be established to combat the problem of shoplifting at the University store. (MDC photo by Jim Gold)

By KEVIN KEVIT

Expressing his views upon the new University Store rip-off policy, Richard Howland, student legal counsel, recently stated his belief that "suspension is far too severe" a penalty for shoplifting, and that fining offenders would "make more sense in that it would recover the community's economic loss."

Expressing opinions somewhat in opposition to those of Howland, University Store manager Winthrop Cummings hailed the new rip-off policy as having dramatically decreased the amount of pilfering in the store during the first few days after its going into effect.

In defending his position, Howland said yesterday, "I am a firm believer in making the punishment fit the crime and I base my outlook on any law upon three main points: whether it is right, whether it is just, and whether it is effective."

The extent to which a law is "right", in Howland's opinion, consists in the measure of its justice to the parties directly involved in the commission of an offense, while its "justness" extends this definition to include those tangentially or indirectly involved in the effects of lawbreaking. A law's effectiveness, for Howland, merely consists in the extent to which it works.

Howland, in terms of his own definitions, believes that the new rip-off policy is not right because it does not provide for remuneration of the store's shoplifting losses. It is not just, he stated, in that it does not ease the economic burden of the university community, which must pay for tip-offs. Finally, he believes that it is not effective, since student courts are usually too lenient to suspend an individual for an infraction like shoplifting.

Because it has consistently been the case that a student shoplifter, once caught, won't repeat his offense, Howland thinks that a punishment as severe as suspension is hardly necessary for the protection of the university community.

Terming the rip-off policy "a reactive law meant to offset an immediate problem", Howland expressed hope that it will serve as the basis for the adoption of a better law in the future.

One alternate law described by Howland would involve fining the shoplifting offender. In order to make well-to-do students suffer some consequence for their actions besides writing a check, and to provide for the cases for poor students who cannot afford to pay a fine, he recommends that the student be put to work serving the university community in some aspect for the minimum wage until the amount of the fine is earned.

Howland added, however, that "fines should be kept at a reasonable level."

Cummings, explaining the reasons behind the new suspension policy, said,

"The whole idea is to stop the volume of theft as much as possible. Many people may see this policy as heartless, but fair warning has been given to the students."

Cummings, expressing a belief that a strong deterrent like the threat of suspension will hold rip-offs at a low level, offered the opinion that "there won't be many cases of shoplifting now. People will just stop. Unless a person is troubled in some respect, he won't knowingly play Russian roulette with his future."

When asked for his views concerning the lowering of the rip-off penalty for a fine, Cummings stated that "fines won't be effective in regaining economic losses. Even if the fine was to be set at three times the value of the goods stolen, this would mean that we would have to catch one third of all the shoplifters in order to break even."

Cummings then added quickly that such an apprehension rate would be "impossible."

Parking Warnings Sent Out

By STEPHEN FISHER

Student Attorney General Henry Bouffard reported that 500 warnings to pay parking violation fines were sent out to those who owed money for previous fines. Another 500 will be sent out later this week. One thousand more will be sent out every other week until the approximately 10,000 violators have all received warning notices.

Bouffard stated that approximately $150,000 is owed in parking violation fines, some dating from as far back as 1969.

The fines are to be paid within 30 days from receiving notices to the District Court of Hampshire County in Northampton. The office of the Student Attorney General will check with the District Court at the end of the thirty day period to see which fines have been paid.

Those who have not paid will be summoned to appear in that court. Failure to appear will result in action by the Registry of Motor Vehicles. Violators are susceptible to loss of their drivers' licenses.

All money paid to the court in fines is returned to the University and placed in an unrestricted scholarship fund. The now permanent procedure of sending warning notices and using the District Court as an enforcement mechanism will be staffed by students on the work-study program. Bouffard added that the use of this plan may cause as much as $250,000 to accrue annually in the scholarship fund in the future.

Conference To Consider Residential Programs

Associate Provost Robert Woodbury and Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage have announced plans for a conference on the feasibility of academic programs in residential areas, to be held at the Northfield Inn Wednesday, March 15.

The conference is intended to be a working session during which students, staff and faculty representatives from the various residential areas, (Sylvan, Northeast, Central, Orchard Hill, Project Ten, Southwest, and the Greek Area will meet with one another, as well as with departmental and administration representatives to discuss ways in which the concept of living-learning programs may be implemented on the UMass campus.

The format of the conference will include two panels each to be followed by a series of workshops designed to deal with the issues raised by the panelists. The first panel will focus on the vision of what residence hall based academic programs might be, their educational potential and their role in the University. The second panel will discuss this vision in the political and financial realities of the current University.

Invitations to the conference are being extended by the Area Director's office of each of the residence hall areas and numbers must be limited. But it is hoped that the thinking and enthusiasm generated at the conference will have repercussions among all those on campus who are interested in developing living-learning programs. A report on the recommendations and procedures of the conference will be made available to interested persons.

State Rep Olver Here Today

John Olver, state representative from Amherst will speak on campus today about student impact of voting in Amherst as contrasted to voting in their hometowns. Olver, a former professor at UMass, has been active in the last year with local voter registration of students and is being sponsored by the Voter Registration committee of the Student Senate.

Representative Olver will speak in Machmer W-26, and a question and answer period will follow over coffee and doughnuts in the Suffolk room of the Student Union. Members of the Voter Registration committee said that those students who are unsure as to why it might be to their advantage to vote in Amherst come to the lecture and listen to Representative Olver in regards to the registration drive being held on Thursday March 16 in the Concourse of the Campus Center.

Guns, Butter Discussed

"Guns and/or Butter: What Price National Security" will be the topic of the seventh UMass Great Decisions program Wednesday, March 15, at 7:30 p.m. in the Noah Webster House lounge.

Moderator for the live broadcast over radio WFCR (88.5 FM) will be Luther A. Allen of the UMass political science department. Panelists for this week will be Mark Aldrich of Smith College's economics department, Harold J. Gordon of the UMass history department, and Henry I. Tragle, an assistant dean of the UMass Amherst Graduate School.

Members of the Five-College community (Smith, Amherst, Hampshire and Mount Holyoke Colleges and UMass) and the general public are invited to participate in the live audience participation program.

Britain-China To Exchange Ambassadors

LONDON (AP) — Britain and China agreed Monday to exchange ambassadors, normalizing relations for the first time since London recognized Mao Tse-tung's Communist government 22 years ago.

The break-through came after Britain acknowledged Taiwan as a "province of China" and the Peking government as the country's "sole legal government."

This represented a British climbdown. It was made possible by President Nixon's new policy toward China.

Since the early 1950s the British, keeping step with the Americans, had insisted that Taiwan's status was "undetermined."

They maintained a consulate in Taiwan province of Tamsui. This now is being closed.

In the United Nations they backed the U.S. "two Chinas" policy. That has been changed.

Because of these things Mao's regime kept open only the most tenuous diplomatic channels with the British. Diplomatic missions in Peking and London were headed by British and Chinese charges d'affaires, officials who rate considerably lower than full ambassadors.

But the Nixon initiative freed the British from their old restraints.

Because the President in Peking recognized Taiwan as part of China, the British felt they, too, should abandon their old stand.

But they went further than the Americans, who still have diplomatic relations with Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist regime in Taiwan.

Elevation of the two diplomatic missions to embassy status was announced in London and Peking.

It seemed to be part of a general Chinese move to normalize relations with foreign countries once branded as hostile.

Britain broke the ranks Western Unity on Asian policy in 1950 when it extended formal recognition to Peking. As a reward China responded in later years by piling indignity upon insult.

A billion dollars worth of British investment in mainland China was expropriated. Britons were jailed without trial. Diplomats were manhandled. In 1967, during the cultural revolution, Britain's mission was burned to the ground.

Despite this the British feel they have established a stake in the lush China trade. Two-way business now is nearing $300 million a year.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the United States was informed in advance of the British decision to exchange ambassadors with the Peoples Republic of China.

There was no comment, however, from press officer Charles W. Bray on the termination of Britain's consular relations with Nationalist China.

On the U.S. ambassadorial talks with China in Paris, Bray said State Department personnel knowledgeable in Chinese affairs will be sent to Paris from time to time to assist in the meetings held by U.S. Ambassador Arthur K. Watson with his Chinese counterpart Huang Chen.

However, the tentative plan does not call for assignment of a permanent China specialist to Paris for the talks, Bray said.

In Brief...

Ghandi's Congress Party in Stunning Victory

NEW DELHI (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's Congress party climaxed stunning victories in India's state elections by defeating the militant Marxist Communists Monday in their traditional stronghold of West Bengal.

Congress candidates took 95 of the 118 seats announced. The other 162 races were to be tabulated Tuesday. The pro-Moscow Communist party faction, allied for the election with the Congress party, claimed 13 seats, while their common enemy, the Marxists, won only three.

Nixon Ready to Announce Busing Recommendations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House said today President Nixon has decided on steps he will recommend in the busing controversy and will send Congress a special message calling for "action-and action now."

Announcing this, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon might send the document to Congress by the end of the week but certainly "within the next 10 days or so."

New Style of Car Seen in Anti-Pollution Battle

WASHINGTON (AP) Anti-pollution controls will attract a new class of cars-the "sub-sub-compacts"-to U.S. roads in the next few years, says a report prepared for the federal government.

The report estimates anti-pollution controls will cost about $300 per car by 1976.

It says anit-pollution costs will have a substantial but not severe effect on the domestic auto industry.

Soviet Jews Continue to Emigrate

MOSCOW (AP)— About 5,500 Soviet Jews have emigrated to Israel so far this year, informed sources reported today.

They said if the present rate of departures is maintained, an unofficial target of 30,000 for 1972 could nearly be attained. This total was passed on by unofficial Soviet sources to Israeli officials and is believed to reflect the Kremlin's intentions, they said.

In 1970 an estimated 1,000 Soviet Jews were issued exit visas. Last year, replying to pressure from the Jewish community and foreign criticism, the Soviets allowed 13,905 Jews.

Black Convention Reveals Political Disagreements

GARY, Ind. (AP) — The first National Black Political Convention revealed fundamental disagreements among black Americans on several crucial issues.

School busing to improve the quality of education was one issue that brought a shower of conflicting resolutions, along with shouted denunciations of integrationists, segregationists and President Nixon from the hectic convention floor.

Before it was over Sunday all the conflicting resolutions had been tentatively adopted, subject to further study by a convention committee.

Most of them agreed, however, on strong support for "quality education" and "community control of schools." They included:

A condemnation of school busing to achieve racial integration, introduced by the Florida delegation.

The South Carolina delegation's opposition to "racial integration of schools as a bankrupt, suicidal method...based on the false notion that black children are unable to learn unless they are in the same setting as white children..."

A Virginia reply that read, "We categorically reject all efforts to return to the era of racially segregated public education... We strongly condemn the injection of the phony issue of busing into the consideration of whether or not states should be required to disestablish racially dual systems of public education."

The Congress of Racial Equality's description of Nixon as a "racist" and the explanation that although CORE agrees with Nixon's opposition to forced busing, "it is for different reasons."

To the consternation of many delegates, including those from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, delegates from Tennessee, Maryland and Illinois also came out against forced integration and for "quality education."

"I'm not for it," said Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, moments after the convention shouted its approval of the South Carolina resolution opposing integration. "I suspect it will be mistakenly interpreted as support of the President's policy, and in my judgment, the convention would do well to reconsider."

A.J. Cooper, of the Albama delegation, said his state could not support South Carolina.

In Alabama, Cooper said, black children have no chance for a quality education if schools are not integrated.

NAACP delegate Ivonne Price, said the resolution "is definitely against the policy of the NAACP. A lot of our people feel it was not a legal vote."

Virginia also raised the question of whether the item had been railroaded through by Imamu Baraka of Newark, N.J., chairman of the convention's closing session.

The nation may not know the convention's final position on the busing issue, as well as on others, until May 19, the date set for a steering committee to announce how it resolved the problem of the conflicting resolutions.

Rep. Charles Diggs, D-Mich., one of the three-day gathering's organizers, said that in voting earlier to initiate a new, independent, national black political movement, the convention agreed to refer all resolutions to the steering committee.

Making Love Is Good For The Heart

NEW YORK (AP) — "Sex is not only here to stay," the doctor says, "it can help you stay here longer."

The doctor's message is that the old theory holding that sex is bad for a weak or aging heart has been disproved.

Not only that, but he is saying that there is mounting evidence that sex is good for the heart, and further, that men with sexual frustrations are more prone to heart disease.

"During the next year," writes Dr. Eugne Scheimann of Chicago, "millions of men will suffer from painful, often fatal heart attacks. Ironically, many of these attacks could be prevented by one very simple, very cheap and very pleasant treatment: more sex."

Scheimann, a sexologist and columnist, discusses sex and heart disease in the April issue of Forum, an international journal of human relations.

Research has demonstrated an association between heart disease and such risk factors as cholesterol level, blood pressure, smoking, lack of exercise and being overweight, Scheimann acknowledges. But he suggests, as do others, tension and anxiety may also play a role.

"I believe," he says," "that the best way a man can release tension is by making love."

Scheimann argues that relatively few middle-aged women die of heart disease and observes that these women are not worried about sexual impotence.

"A woman," he says, "may lose interest in sex, or fear losing her attractiveness, but the burden of proving herself by sexual performance is not hers."

Doctors themselves seem unusually prone to heart attacks, Scheimman says. "Doctors have a high incidence of trouble marriage," he says, "and a lesser degree of sexual freedom outside marriage than other professions."

Sex, Scheimann maintains, is good medicine for the heart: "Sex activates the thyroid gland, burns up cholesterol and calories, exercises every muscle in the body and strengthens, but not overtaxes the heart by making it pump more blood for a short period and then relax.

"A healthy night of sex is nature's tranquilizer, reducing stress and creating a general feeling of relaxation and well-being."

TAKING A BITE--Democratic presidential hopeful Gov. George Wallace of Alabama bites his tongue as he waits Sunday to appear on ABC's "Issues and Answers" from Washington. (AP Wirephoto)

Democratic Candidates Criticize Wallace

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — A corps of Democratic candidates hustled through campaign springs Monday, chorusing criticism of Gov. George C. Wallace on the eve of a Florida presidential primary expected to draw a record turnout of voters to unscramble an 11-way race.

Who wins may be less significant in national political impact than the order of finish, and margins, of the losers.

Alabama's Wallace ran through his litany of campaign themes in Orlando, hammering on at his opposition to school busing, his call for law and order and a strong national defense.

"Not one of the other candidates stands a chance of beating George Wallace except Hubert Humphrey," Hubert H. Humphrey, the senator from Minnesota, told 300 Jacksonville longshoremen.

Humphrey said Wallace is never going to be the Democratic nominee for the White House.

"I find it hard to believe in my heart the voters of Florida are going to vote for a worn out demagogue like George Wallace," said Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, campaigning among senior citizens in Orlando, and door to door in St. Petersburg and Miami.

"He is not going to be the Democratic nominee or the next president because he's not the kind of a man who ought to be president of the United States," said Muskie, battling to stay ahead of his national rivals in Florida after his less than majority victory in the New Hampshire primary last Tuesday.

In Tampa, Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington claimed he has passed Muskie in the candidate standings.

Jackson, like Wallace, has campaigned in Florida as a foe of compulsory busing.

Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota and Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York battled to outdo each other Tuesday, with the top finisher in their contest sure to claim the showing made him the ranking candidate of the party's liberal wing.

Rep. Shirley Chisholm of New York was winding up her campaign, too.

The rest of the Democratic ballot listed absentee entries: Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana, who stopped campaigning after he managed to muster only three per cent of theNew Hampshire vote; Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles, Rep. Wilbur D. Mills of Arkansas and former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy of Minnesota.

The busing issue loomed over the field.

The voters will be registering their opinion as to whether the U.S. Constitution should be amended to ban the compulsory busing of school children for purposes of racial balance. That straw vote seemed certain to boost the Wallace showing.

While the Democrats battled it out to lead the field of national presidential contenders in Florida, Rep. John M. Ashbrook of Ohio challenged President Nixon in the Republican primary.

Nixon is certain to win and sweep the 40 nominating votes at stake. Rep. Paul H. McCloskey of California also is on the GOP ballot, but he has quit the campaign.

Irvings Plead Guilty

NEW YORK (AP) — Author Clifford Irving and his wife, Edith, pleaded guilty Monday to conspiracy and grand larceny charges for selling a fake autobiography of Howard Hughes to McGraw-Hill, Inc., for $750,000. Other charges against the pair were dropped.

They each could get a total of 13 years in prison and $11,000 in fines on the federal conspiracy and state conspiracy and grand larceny counts which they admitted.

Irving's researcher, Richard Suskind, pleaded guilty to the state charges which could bring him up to eight years in prison and a $1,000 fine. He had been named a co-conspirator but not a co-defendant in the federal case.

All three remained free on bond.

Other federal and state charges against the Irvings and Suskind which could have carried up to 100 years in prison were dismissed. These included a federal mail fraud charge and state counts of larceny, conspiracy and possession of stolen documents, plus two counts of perjury against Irving and Suskind.

Sentencing on all the charges was scheduled for June 16.

The federal and state indictments alleged the Irvings and Suskind fabricated taped interviews, in which Irving and Suskind interviewed each other, forged documents and engaged in other schemes to defraud McGraw-Hill.

In federal court, the lanky, 41-year-old novelist, appearing haggard and nervous, was asked by Judge John M. Cannella what he had done.

"It was that I conspired to convince McGraw-Hill that I was in communication with Howard Hughes, when, in fact, I was not," Irving replied.

Mrs. Irving, 36, speaking rapidly and with a German accent, admitted she had "put the money in and out" of banks under false names.

In state court, Justice Joseph A. Martinis accepted the trio's guilty pleas to two counts to satisfy the entire 14-count indictment.

Martinis asked the three defendants: "In effect, you admit that you conspired with each other to defraud McGraw- Hill?"

"Yes," all three answered.

As they left, Irving declined to comment to newsmen.

Never Fear; Nixon's Here

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's chief economic adviser says fears that the new international monetary settlement will collapse are unjustified and foreign countries must learn to accept the facts of life.

Herbert Stein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, was asked in an interview how the United States could calm fears about the settlement and also enjoy economic recovery at home.

Stein replied that his contacts with official representatives of foreign governments "lead me to think that these fears are not shared by them, are not shared by people who are more in touch with economic as distinguished from private finance."

That Scandalous ITT

WASHINGTON--The ITT-Kleindienst $400,000 misunderstanding has many tragic consequences. One is that the motives of one of the great conglomerates of this country are being questioned. There are certain skeptics who believe that ITT would never have offered $400,000 to finance the Republican convention in San Diego if the Justice Department hadn't agreed to let the conglomerate hold on to one of its prize possessions, the Hartford Fire Insurance Co.

I can state without qualification that this is not the case. The decision to donate $400,000 to the Republican National Convention was made in good faith by men who felt strongly about preserving the two-party system. This is what happened:

The Republican Party wanted a national convention very badly, but they had no money to hold it. So, they went to the ITT people and asked, "Is there any possibility of donating any cash to the Republican convention?"

The ITT people replied, "We would love to contribute to the Republican National Convention, but we have an antitrust suit pending with the Justice Department, and if we gave, say, $100,000, it might look as though we were trying to influence the Administration to make a decision in our favor."

"Don't worry about that," the Republicans said. "No one will know you gave the money except President Nixon, Atty. Gen. John Mitchell and H.R. Haldeman in the White House."

"But," said the ITT people, "suppose Jack Anderson finds out about it? He has such a suspicious mind that he could come to the wrong conclusion as to why we would want to contribute $200,000 to the Republican National Convention. He might say that the reason we did it was so that we could hold on to the Hartford Fire Insurance Co., which the Justice Department so unfairly wants us to divest from our conglomerate."

"You have nothing to worry about. Jack Anderson will never find out that you have contributed a dime to our convention in order to hold on to the Hartford Fire Insurance Co.--how do you spell that?"

"H-a-r-t-f-o-r-d. Our company believes its antitrust suits should be judged on the merits of the case alone. If we contributed $250,000 to the convention, the Senate Judiciary Committee might call hearings to find out whether we did anything to influence Richard Kleindienst, who we understand will be the next attorney general.

"On the other hand, if we lost the Hartford Fire Insurance Co. because of the Mickey Mouse tactics of your antitrust lawyers, it would be very bad for the balance of payments of the United States, our stock would take a beating and it would have a serious effect on the economy.

"That is a very persuasive case you have presented. Why don't you lay it out to Kleindienst and ask him to Lelp you? I'm sure he will because he won't know anything about your generous contribution to the Republican Party."

"How can we be sure? Even if we gave $300,000, which we're prepared to do, it would look as if the gift had something to do with the Justice Department suit."

"We don't see how people could think such a thing. The reason we approached you is because everyone knows that ITT has no ax to grind. Your donation will be looked upon as an act of faith in the great American political system.

"Only those with evil minds and members of the Democratic Party would question your noble motives. But we assure you that neither President Nixon nor Atty. Gen. Mitchell, not even Mrs. Mitchell, will look upon your generous gesture as anything other than a gift from a conglomerate with a heart of gold."

The ITT people nodded their heads. "Your words have touched us deeply. Here is $400,000 with absolutely no strings attached. By the way, before you go, could we interest you in some fire insurance?"

Brogan Replies

By HOWARD O. BROGAN
COMMONWEALTH PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH

Since Larry Hurwitz seems to object to my having any opinion differing from those of some members of Orchard Hill and seizes the occasion to attack me personally and at length in his column, I trust you will see fit to print this reply.

I was the original proposer of the establishment of Orchard Hill as a residential college ten years ago this spring, long before Larry Hurwitz, or for that matter Master Leon Barron was associated with that enterprise. I participated in all the discussions that led to establishing this college and personally drew up the original plan for integrating it into the University government. Among other things I proposed the title of the College and of the Masters, Preceptors and Faculty Fellows. Since I have been a Fellow ever since the College was founded, I should suppose I might be as knowledgable about how the college does work and how it is supposed to work as Larry Hurwitz is.

There was supposed to be a faculty consisting of the Faculty Fellows of the four halls, which would take the place in the program which the faculty has in other colleges of the University, in so far as the College offered a curriculum. Before Master Barron's administration, there used to be meetings of the Fellows for the whole College, in which curriculum and other matters were discussed. We also had for several years regular meetings of the Fellows of Emily Dickinson, the hall with which I was connected.

However, the year before last the Fellowship began to be disbanded. The Preceptor of my hall was abruptly dismissed, and a new one appointed, so far as I know without consulting the Fellows; and the new Preceptor-supposedly after discussing the matter with an unspecified group of students sent letters of dismissal to most of the Fellows without consulting at all with their faculty colleagues. Another of the Preceptors just announced that the fellowship of the two halls he was in charge of was in abeyance, again without consulting the fellows.

I protested to Master Barron on these drastic changes in the operation of the College. However, I continued to attend and to participate in what purported to be a Curriculum Committee, and in fact last spring I moved approval of the present curriculum as a member of that group.

However, new courses were set up and staffed with teachers unqualified by the usual standards, and in fact not members of the faculty at all, and without consulting such Fellows as remained active in spite of all this discouragement. The final straw for me came last fall when I protested these actions as not having been approved by the Curriculum Committee and was told by Master Barron that the group I had attended was not a Curriculum Committee at all: the real Curriculum Committee consisted of the Master and the Preceptors.

The recent establishment of a Personnel Committee by a group with not fixed membership, but predominantly consisting of students, a Personnel Committee which is to consist of eight students, the Master, his Assistant and the Area Coordinator (neither of these members of the faculty), and of three faculty members, not elected by the faculty but by this group predominantly of students, proceeds a step further toward complete student dominance.

I have welcomed student participation. I do not approve of student dominance of curriculum and faculty personnel.

Moreover, this committee, and the procedures by which it has been established is in direct violation of the "Morris Report" by which the Board has agreed that the faculty is to participate in the University government. It is also in violation of the Statement on Government of Colleges and Universities which has been drawn up by the American Association of University Professors with the help of the National Council on Education and the Association of Governing Boards of Universities and Colleges. This statement has also been endorsed by the Association of Land-Grant Universities, of which our institution is a member.

Our faculty Senate has been trying for three years to get the Board to accept this Statement in principle. It seems to be unwise to abrogate it ourselves while urging the Board to accept it.

From this experience I not unnaturally conclude that the faculty is not playing a proper role in the operation of Orchard Hill. Since the Faculty of every accredited college in the nation is considered to be a key factor in the education offered by it, I am naturally apprehensive that the education offered by Orchard Hill is not going to be up to the standards of other colleges in the nation or in this university.

I respect students. However, I do not consider them to have the qualifications of faculty members on matters of curriculum and personnel. I do not believe the faculty should dominate over students. Why should students want to dominate over faculty?

Land Of Oz

Suppose there was a world where Toto needed no leash, where scarecrows and tinmen talked? Where neither the Lullaby League nor the Lollipop Guild were on strike for higher wages. Where a house could fall from the sky into a busy city square and not get ticketed during the entire movie? Where a midget was judged not according to his height, but according to his ability to break into a buck 'n' wing at the least provocation. Suppose there was such a place. Do you think they would allow Nixon and Muskie to run for President there?

Tuesday night, NBC presented The Wizard Of Oz, as it does every year. This year it happened to be shown on the night of the New Hampshire Presidential Primary. From time to time New Hampshire Primary partial tabulations would crawl across the bottom of the television screen. The juxtaposition was a bit overwhelming.

Annoyed at the unwelcome intrusion, we silently wished the grim reminder away, simultaneously noting that McGovern was doing well, and that Muskie was not doing as well as he was supposed to do. Then the profanity passed, and we went back to truckin' down the Yellow Brick Road with Dorothy and Toto. In the newspaper this morning, Muskie, Nixon et al were splashed across Page One. No mention was made of the death of the Wicked Witch of the West.

When one has a job, he usually works five days a week, and has two days off. Even a full-time job is not a full-time job. But when one is an undergraduate, asked by both Rennie Davis and Richard Nixon to make a better world, it is a twenty-four hour a day task, even if you don't do anything.

Anyone on a campus with two good ears is constantly aware of social injustice, ecological abuse, psycholological trauma, and the shortage of cigarettes after midnight. One is constantly reminded of the fact that something or another is always wrong.

I have nothing against people knowing that something is wrong. It would be better if everyone knew what was really going on around them; exploitation would end. Life would be a lot better if it were a lot better, and without voices raised in criticism of the wasteland, things would never get any better. Particularly in a time of potential nuclear overkill, and ecological apocalypse, Earth has a real need to confront the harsh reality we have carved for ourselves.

In four years of college, I have seen more people who were unhappy than happy. Existential despair sells better than Coca-Cola on this campus. To see a dozen people simultaneously happy is a rare thing. Those things which can make dozens of people happy at once are to be treated as sacred.

America has holidays and weekends when people don't have to work. Existential despair, contemporary crises, may we please have three hours off each year to watch The Wizard Of Oz? (In case you missed it Tuesday, Dorothy made it back to Kansas again.)

Letters To The Editor

Save Appalachia

To the Editor:

This Saturday (March 18) at 1:00 P.M. there will be a concert of Appalachian Mountain music in the Student Union Ballroom. There should be some really fine mountain music; in addition, Doug Yarrow and Mike Kline of West Virginia will be giving a slide show (with music) about strip mining and other problems of Appalachia. I'm writing this letter to urge people to come find out more about strip mining, and also to tell about my own experience with strip mining.

Last year I taught in a rural school in eastern Kentucky. The whole mountain behind my house and behind the school was being strip mined. Instead of tunneling down to the coal (deep mining), the strip miners come with huge bulldozers and shovels, and lift up the earth, throwing it to the side until they dig down to the coal seam. Then they dig up the coal and carry it off, make some attempt to fill in the pits they have created, and leave. With the first rain, masses of dirt and rock are washed down the sides of the mountains. Behind my house the rock and rubble from the strip mine had washed half-way down the mountainside. The streams, which used to run clear and abound with fish, now run black from the run-off from the strip mines. Reclamation laws are not enforced, and in many areas the mountains are so steep that reclamation is virtually impossible.

The situation is even worse than I have described, because, since they own the mineral rights to most of the land in the mountains, the coal companies can strip mine someone's land without his consent. Most families sold the mineral rights to their land a couple of generations ago, when deep mining was the only known method of mining. These same mineral rights now give the coal companies the legal "right" to come onto a family's land and virtually destroy it.

Some people in the mountains are trying to stop strip mining. But the strip mine operators have a lot of influence in the state legislatures. They also have tremendous political and economic power locally; a man who speaks up strongly against strip mining is likely to lose his job. In an area with a scarcity of jobs, few people can afford to take that risk.

It's easy for people here to feel that the Kentucky and West Virginia mountains are far away and that it's "not our problem." But I've become convinced that people in other parts of the country are going to have to become concerned about strip mining in the mountains if we are going to succeed in stopping it. So I'm urging people to go to the concert on Saturday to find out more about what's happening to the Appalachian moutains and to their people, and I'm urging people to ask Senators, Congressman, and candidates for national office to take a stand on strip mining. Unless we act soon to help the people of Kentucky and West Virginia to save their mountains, it's going to be too late.

Not So Free

To the Editor:

Jan Liva's article on the International Women's Day rally in the March 7th Collegian is the poorest example of objective reporting I've ever read. Your distorted coverage of the event is blatant anti-feminist propaganda.

Over twenty women spoke for over three hours at the rally on Wednesday. From these you selected only three as being newsworthy: an unscheduled request to sign one of the several dozen petitions being circulated there; a rap on the working woman; and the shortest presentation of those scheduled, the one on Gay Women.

You ignored mentioning the information on the first Black woman running for President - Shirley Chisholm, the excellent speech on the exploitation of women by the medical profession, or the formation of a statewide resource center and community for women. You choose not to mention the organizations that are by, for and about women in the area - those who had women there to explain the services available at the Southwest Women's Center or the Valley Women's Center.

Once again, the "free and responsible press" reveals itself as oppressive and ignorant. You, Ms. Liva are a fine example of that oppression's product. This culture has so manipulated you, as a woman, that you can only see to report that which pleases men. Apparently, Ms. Liva, you didn't hear the presentation made on Gay Women. Not only did you misquote me, but you totally missed the entire point of the rap - that labels and images are applied to the movement by men in order to discredit the validity of the cause.

There are three basic ways in which male culture tries to do this (since they can't deny that oppression of women exists). One is to make the feminist movement ridiculous sounding - as though oppression were a joke. Another way is to paint us pink, to infer that we are all communists since we oppose oppression. The third way is to classify us as sick or perverted, making us guilty by association since we claim that all women are sisters in their oppression, including Lesbians.

It is interesting to note, Ms. Li a, that your coverage of the rally follows so similar a vein. You choose to place emphasis on the petition for the "Mother Jones" Library, the talk on the problems of working women, and the rap about Gay Women.

Very interesting. Very sad, Ms. Liva. Maybe next year you'll be ready to hear the truth. We'll still be here.

Pass The Salt

To the Editor:

In the Second Punic War, the Romans conquered the Carthaginians and as punishment, sowed the land with salt so nothing would grow. This winter, the Physical Plant has done the same, heaping over 600 tons of salt on the roads and sidewalks of this campus.

The use of salt as a deicer has many adverse effects on the environment. Not only does it pollute our ground water, kill our trees, shrubs, and grass, poison our wildlife, corrode our cars, paths, roads, and steps, but it is also producing a new form of air pollution. Safety comes first, but salt isn't necessarily the answer. According to a study done in Newton, Massachusetts, sand alone can help reduce the accident rate and cost less in the long run.

The town of Burlington, which banned the use of deicing salts in 1970, has actually saved over $26,000 for snow and ice controls (including sand removal). The so-called "clear pavement" policy which this campus adheres to often leads to deceptive feelings of security. This is due to the fact that in reality, the salt attracts a thin film of slick moisture. Burlington's accident rate has actually decreased! The use of sand alone would improve the winter conditions on campus.

Sen. John Quinlan is sponsoring S 185 which would prohibit the use of salt products for snow removal on public ways. Please support this bill at the state hearing March 21. Although hopefully Spring is almost here, it is not too soon to start thinking about next year's stormy conditions!

Editorial Points

In an editorial yesterday, the New York Times said that with the recent Clifford Irving and Chief Red Fox fiascos the government may require book jackets to contain such legends as: "Contains 45 percent truth, 11 percent plagiarism, 19 percent pure imagination, plus artificial flavoring." Maybe books will be next year's cyclamate.

Perhaps serious consideration should be given to what's really going on at the Infirmary. The debate now seems to be who does or doesn't like the way it feels. (If it feels good, do it?)

The word is that WMUA is going to have an "all-request day" soon, for a mere five dollars a hit. Would you pay a prostitute for something you could get for free?

Though considered an afterthought by many, blackness is still a powerful source to be reckoned with on this campus; in politics, social life, and all other phases of university endeavor.

Two-Way Street

To the Editor:

In reply to Chuck Kenyon's letter in Friday's Collegian: I don't really care what you oppose. But as far as not tolerating "any attempt by the military recruiters to jeopardize the lives and morality of students on this campus" is concerned, I have two things to say.

1. My life is my own and I will do as I please with it, the S.M.C. not withstanding.

2. I don't need the S.M.C. as a guardian of my morals.

Freedom of expression is a two-way road whether you agree with a point of view or not. I strongly object to any attempts at one-way censorship. If the military recruiters must leave, then let the S.M.C. leave with them.

Common Courtesy

To the Editor:

I own a Mustang and park it in F lot. On two separate occasions during the last two weeks, my parked car has been hit by other cars. The person(s) responsible did not, on either occasion, leave a name, address, or phone number. This totally unethical behavior has angered me more than having two dents in my car. It is also going to cost me the first one hundred dollars of the repair bill, which should rightfully be paid for by the people who hit my car. It would be gratefully appreciated if the drivers of those cars or anyone who witnessed either incident contacted me. I also suggest that before members of this college community criticize the government, the administration, or members of the "older generation" in general, for their lack of honesty, integrity, or credibility, they first stop and consider how they treat each other.

Equal Housing

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in regard to the housing situation on campus for married students.

I went to the housing office last week and put myself on a waiting list for married undergrads, wondering why there was a different list for undergrads and grad students. Upon asking this question, I was informed that married grad students are allocated 80% of university housing, and undergrads only 15%, with the other 5% going to guests of the university. I was also told that undergrads were lucky to have 15% of the housing, that the university wanted none of their housing to be for undergrads, but the University Housing Committee (made up mostly of grad students) said that undergrads were entitled to housing, also, so we were allocated our 15%. Very nice of them.

I know that 80% of the university student body is not made up of grad students, and I doubt if 80% of the married students are grads, so why this obviously biased attitude against giving married undergrads their fair share of university housing? If it's because grad students do most of the work on the committee, I would be happy to join that group, as I'm sure other married undergrads would be too, if it would mean a change in this housing policy.

If any members of that committee read this letter, would you be so kind as to explain why these policies are set up this way, either in a letter or article in the MDC? It would be very much appreciated. I like to at least be aware of why I am being screwed, even if there is nothing I can do about it.

Teaching Loads

To the Editor:

In the Friday, March 10, 1972, issue of the Daily Collegian, your reporter quoted my remarks in the Faculty Senate as summing up the feelings of the Faculty regarding the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Teaching Loads, as follows: "The teachers do not want to take on any new work."

Since the reported statement was not a direct quotation of anything I said and since it was wide of the mark, I should like to clarify what I did say. I stated that it seemed clear that there were two themes running through the discussion on the Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Teaching Loads: (1) there was some feeling that existing teaching loads are already heavy enough for some faculty and (2) there was some feeling that teaching loads are inequitably distributed throughout the faculty--some are teaching too much and others too little.

Though I did not explicate what I meant by the first point, I think it was clear from other remarks I made and from remarks made by other Senators that one should not view teaching load in isolation from the innumerable other duties faculty have, such as advising, public service, service within the University, research, artistic production, publication, and service on dissertation committees. Other factors are size of class, number of teaching assistants, whether one is introducing a new course, and the like.

I also made the point that what is needed is an intensive survey of precisely what each faculty member is doing. Only in this way can one tell whether there exist serious inequities in the distribution of teaching loads, inequities which are glossed over by the gross teaching load figures in the report. I made this point in recognition of the fact that it is quite possible that there are such inequities.

Make It, Yourself!

By MARILOU BARSAM

Every weekday from ten a.m. to six p.m. at least twenty-five to thirty students, male and female, come to the room across from the Hatch, to involve themselves in enjoyable, creative projects.

These students are finding ways to develop creative talents, while working with their hands. They are participating in the Craft Center Workshop.

The Craft Center has been open to all UMass students since November. The response to the center has been termed great by those involved.

Before the Crafts Center was created, there was a Crafts Guild in operation. The guild was a club, complete with membership dues, officers, etc. Eventually the guild became a dying affair.

A few members of the guild, along with the Student Activity Staff, perceived need for a crafts center. So a member from the S.U.G. Board, the program council for the campus center, and the former Crafts Guild Club formed a Crafts Task Force.

Through their efforts and plan development, the Craft Center became reality. The Program Council requested funds from the S.U.G. Board and were appropriated a set budget for the fiscal year 71-72. Most of the appropriated money is derived from the campus center tax.

The task force interviewed prospective candidates for the position of supervisor, and out of this the present supervisor, Penny Worman, got the job.

The first thing Ms. Worman did was to put up a list of various crafts. The list requested students to indicate which particular crafts interested them the most. The results of the poll are indicated by the types of crafts work presently available to all.

A student has only to enter the Crafts Center and decide on a project that he or she feels interested in. All tools and the facilities themselves are free. A student pays for the actual material he or she uses. Penny purchases the material wholesale and sells it for cost price.

Students can work on silver jewelry, leather, stain-glass windows, mobiles, pendants, woodwork, candle making, block printing, or silk screen printing.

Penny is knowledgeable in all craft areas. She and her five assistants will instruct anyone who asks.

Jim Riley, Program Adviser for Student Activities stated, "The idea here is, that any student be he skilled or non-skilled, can come in here and use what resources are available, to do whatever he wants in making a crafts item."

Ken Mello, a UMass student, spends the majority of his day at the center. He noticed the sign, which invites all to drop in and eventually he did. For a few days he observed. Then he began working with silver and later leather.

Ken feels that, "It's great how anyone talented or not can come in, pick up a craft, and learn by asking others for help."

Both he and other craft workers agree that the informal atmosphere is "great". People help each other to express their individual creativity, while becoming friends at the same time.

The Crafts Center is planning to offer pottery in the near future. Already three grinding wheels have been made.

Also rooms are being petitioned off to serve those interested in photography.

"Shamrocks For Dystrophy" Drive on Campus Tomorrow

The third annual "Shamrocks for Dystrophy" drive will be held on the UMass campus. on Wednesday, March 15. Over the last two years this drive has netted $1,000 and $2,059 respectively.

Funds collected during the day long campaign are sent to MDAA, which uses them to support a world-wide research program, and to provide such services to dystrophic children as diagnostic expenses, physical therapy, medical supplies and to operate a summer camp for children afflicted with the incurable disease.

District Director Donald Blais of the Western Mass. Chapter of the Muscular Dystrophy Associations of America, Inc. has expressed hopes that the UMass drive will once again prove to be the largest single contributor in the Western Mass. area.

Members of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity are conducting the campus drive, with the assistance of the members of Alpha Chi Omega, Kappa Alpha Theta and Kappa Kappa Gamma sororities. Tables will be manned in the Student Union lobby, in front of the Hatch, and in the Campus Center Concourse during the daytime. A canvass of the dormitories will be held at night.

Concert Features Olevskys

The husband and wife team of violinist Julian Olevsky and pianist Estela Kersenbaum Olevsky will join with cellist Leopold Terapulsky for a concert Wednesday, March 15, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The three performers are faculty members of the UMass music department.

Included in the concert program will be the premiere performance of Frederick Tillis' "Music for Violin, Cello, and Piano (1971)." Also in the program will be Mozart's "Trio in G Major K. 564," Bloch's "Three Nocturnes," and Brahms' "Trio in C Major Op. 87."

As part of the music department's Faculty Recital Series, the event is open to the public without charge.

SOACT

Ever Turn Your Mother On?

(Editor's note: SOACT will be a regular weekly column in the Collegian, submitted by the Student Matters Committee.)

With involvement, this weekly column can be used as an escape hatch from trivia 'cuz whether you're into a social ship right now or just waiting for the tide to roll in, the Student Matters Committee hopes to high heaven that you will find "Social Action" relevant to your situation. SOACT's purpose of communication is split-level, serving as a resource-contact-head trust of good people in the land of Free. If you utilize the tools provided, please fill us in on the details and we'll ink them into future columns because this is really your thing, and only you can do it! Write: Student Matters Committee, SOACT, UMass.

Did you ever think about turning your mother on? Yippie! It's now possible through an address given during a speech by Bess Myerson Grant, heard with open Eyes at the World Mothers' Day Assembly of "Another Mother for Peace". Reprints of this Middle American-type affair, "You Don't Have to Buy War, Mrs. Smith" by the former Miss America, can be had for a dime (coin) from AMFP. This non-profit, non-partisan association of individuals, which also gets out a newsletter and distributes pamphlets, posters, and bumper stickers bearing the logo, "War is not Healthy for Children and Other Living Things", also has available a Consumer Action Kit which includes a listing of appliance manufacturers who are involved in war production. They need volunteers. Write: "Another Mother For Peace", 407 N. Maple Dr., Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210.

Thinking about VISTA lately? If you've completed an application for that gov. group, here's a secret: An organization of almost half the active VISTA volunteers is alive and well and doing fine. It's working toward: 1) creating a union of volunteers to negotiate and work for community control of all VISTA projects; 2) moving as a catalyst toward an alliance of low-income communities and support groups which together take control over anti-poverty programs. The group informed us that they need staff members at their national office and people in the field to help organize volunteers and poor communities. ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

Aries women, though magnetic and synamic, have a tendency to frown. These women are affectionate but often frighten would-be suitors. The Aries woman looks for a man but often finds one who, in turn, is looking for a mother. Women born under this zodiacal sign are physically attracted to Leo, often marry Aquarius and can gain financially from Taurus. Some famous women born under Aries include Bette Davis, Joan Crawford and Gloria Swanson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You get what you need by being a self-starter. Those around you now tend to procrastinate. Adhere to your own style and pace. Be positive without attempting to impose your will. Subtle approach brings results.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Emotions fly high-you know what you want and strive to get co-ordinated. Key now is to relieve yourself of tensions. Until you do, you will be at standstill. When you do, there is progress-and happiness.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may be victim of another individual's fantasy. Means one who should know better is seeing through misty eyes. Key is to be yourself. If person in question really cares, focus will be clarified.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Strive for factual information. Be aware of subtle nuances. Get to heart of matter. Emphasize what is solid. Reject notions which are based on wishful thinking. Aquarius plays important role.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be wary where investments are concerned. There is difference between gamble and calculated risk. Changes for better are due. You are provided with valuable hint. Utilize rather than waste it. You will understand.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent is on closing transaction. Be positive about legal ground. Family counsel can be valuable if you listen. Be diplomatic and receptive. One who cares is trying to aid. You will know.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are drawn in many directions simultaneously. Confusion could reign. Key now is to perceive, analyze and correct. Pisces person is very much in picture. Be moderate; avoid excesses. Situation will be clarified.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Refuse to risk something of value for nothing in return. Obtain hint from Libra message. Avoid basing actions on impulse. Know where you want to go-and why. Reject superficial explanations. Be on guard.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be sure of facts. You get called on assertions, statements or claims. Take long-range view. Don't be in too much of a hurry. Conservative course now works in your behalf. Act accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Information given you in secret may not be accurate. Double-check. Obtain hint from Sagittarius message. Do some personal investigating. Puzzle pieces can be put in place. Be persistent.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Share knowledge. Learn by teaching. Follow through on hunch. Budget needs reinforcing. Not wise now to lend or spend excessively. Element of deception is present. Be aware, alert. Check quality, price.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Social activity is spotlighted. Accept invitations. Leave details to others. See picture as a whole. One who talks much may actually have little to say. Know this and respond accordingly.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have unique way of expressing yourself. Opposite sex finds you fascinating. You usually are on the move, but often complain about aching feet. By October, your life will be on a new, more productive path.

Women Gymnasts Beat Towson State

By STEVE CARY

Saturday, on their second overnight trip in as many weekends, the women varsity gymnasts easily surpassed their hosts at Towson State College, Maryland, scoring 95.25 to Towson's 81.45. This was the sixth and final regular meet of the season, and brings their record to five won with their only loss coming from Springfield College, the defending National Champions.

Freshman Jeannine Burger led the team's scoring for the second week, taking first in the All-Around and three individual wins to undoubtedly make her weekend trip. She scored well above second with a 32.93; the second going narrowly to Debra Nichols of Towson at 29.85, with Marina Rodriguez making it that way totalling 29.27. Jeannine's firsts in individual events were Floor Ex.-8.50, Side Horse Vaulting-8.33, and Uneven Bars-8.9.

Second on the floor was UMass' Anne Vexler-8.45, with third an 8.0 for Nichols. Gail Hannon, an injured and recovering Freshman, took second on Side Horse Vaulting with an 8.0. Gail's problem has been a knee that has threatened her with serious trouble, but which she has overcome bravely this season. Third in the jumping were Thanne Poth and Margie Combs tied at 7.4. At the risk of being repetitious, Margie has also been fighting a painful shoulder injury all year.

The Balance Beam, known to be a miserable event for the spectator due to the certainty of falls, progressed normally with Miss Nichols high at 8.05. Second was Anne Vexler-7.5, and third Marina Rodriguez with a 7.35. Much concentration in the performance of and even more work in practice is always a necessity in this event. Unevens yielded the top score of the meet which is beginning to go customarily to Jeannine Burger-8.9, with second Margie Combs'-8.37, and third surprisingly far away at Debra Nichols'-7.73.

That being the essence of the Towson meet, attention is now turned to this coming Saturday and the Eastern Women's Intercollegaite Championships, to be held in Memorial Field House at Springfield College. To the gymnasts, this is the season. Nationals must be qualified for here, and in this sport that is where success is found.

Coach Evans can only look ahead with all the girls to this coming meet where the pressure will be the greatest. Springfield has scored 106, and Clarion, West Chester, Southern Connecticut, and UMass have scored in the 100 to 103 range. The meet will be exciting and worth the trip. Team Championships begin at 9 a.m., and run all day. Individual competition is in the evening at 7 p.m. Tickets are a big $2.00, but the goal is worth it. Our University can support a Championship bid, and the loudest UMass crowd that can make it to Springfield will have its presence felt and appreciated by the fine women's team.

No. 6 Raised....Quietly

Wayne Wins

By CHARLOTTE LETTIS

Battling the cold, and very wet weather on Sunday, Ron Wayne, graduate of UMass, won the 30 kilometer New England Championships held in New Bedford, Mass. Running at a pace of 5 minutes 10 seconds per mile, Wayne came within 16 seconds of breaking the course record, held by another former UMass graduate Ralph Buschman. His time was 1 hour 35 minutes and 10 seconds.

Running in sixth place, not far behind, was Tom Derderian, a former New England 30 kilometer champ at the time of 1 hour 38 minutes 53 seconds, a personnel record for him. In 14th and 15th place were two other UMass runners, Peter Crisci and Chris Chambers. Their times were 1:42:57 and 1:43:34. Out of 210 starters, 155 finished.

The only woman running the race was Ginny Collins, 27, from Brookline, Mass. Her time was 2:33:00. The race was the last official chance to qualify for the Boston Marathon, having to do 2:20 or better.

Next week several men and women from UMass plan to run the Lexington to Cambridge 9 miler. It will be of importance to the women because of the strict ruling put on them by the A.A.U. They plan to enter and run officially despite opposition from many race officials.

Heard 7th On Golf $ List

NEW YORK (AP)-Jerry Heard's $30,000 victory Sunday in the Florida Citrus Open shot him from 36th to seventh place in this year's pro golf money-winning race.

The PGA Tournament Players Division reported Monday that Jack Nicklaus, the game's all-time leading money-winner, maintained the No. 1 position.

Nicklaus, picking up $3,600 at Orlando for a 10th place tie, now has a total of $97,720. He is followed by Tom Weiskopf, with $64,504, and Bob Rosburg, with $57,187.

Squires' Owner Warns NBA On Scott-Suns Case

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP)-Ignoring a warning by Virginia Squires owner Earl Foreman that he would consider it evidence of a conspiracy, the Phoenix Suns of the National Basketball Association announced Monday they had signed Charlie Scott, the American Basketball Association's leading scorer.

General Manager Jerry Colangelo said the Suns acquired the 6-foot-5 guard from the Boston Celtics for "cash and future considerations."

The considerations, he said, depend on the outcome of any litigation that Foreman promised to pursue.

He termed "pure speculation," reports that the Celtics would get the Suns' All-Star forward Paul Silas.

Scott, who quit the Virginia team Saturday in a contract dispute, will join Phoenix against Milwaukee Wednesday night.

Colangelo, in Kansas City to scout the NAIA tournament, talked to Scott and his representative in New York Saturday, then flew to Boston Sunday to negotiate with Celtics General Manager Red Auerbach.

"The Suns have obtained Charlie Scott from the Boston Celtics for cash and future considerations, depending on whether or not there is any litigation and whether or not Phoenix prevails," said Colangelo's brief statement.

Boston had drafted Scott in the seventh round of the college draft two years ago.

Scott claimed that Foreman was in default on several clauses of his contract and had reneged on a promise to pay off a $26,000 loan for him.

"That failure has damaged my credit rating," Scott said.

In Norfolk, Foreman declined to comment on Scott's charge, saying "courts of law are where these issues will be decided."

Foreman also indicated the Squires would file suit against the Suns and the NBA to prevent Scott's playing for Phoenix.

Last season, Scott shared rookie-of-the year honors with Kentucky's Dan Issel. This season, he was averaging about 35 points per game.

It Was A Very Good Year

By BILL BALLOU

It was a season of ups and downs, of surprises and disappointments, but as a song once said, "It was a very good year."

The year being referred to is, of course, the 1971-72 hockey season, a season which saw the Redmen skaters gain their first ever Division II championship.

Naturally enough, in a championship year, the high spots predominate, while the not so pleasant fades into the background. There was a lot to be happy with; a championship, the breaking of several all-time records, some bright talent that bodes well for the future. With this comes the bad, but that will be discussed later.

The Division II crown, won at home against Buffalo, rates as the high point of the season, naturally. To say the win was a surprise, though, would not be accurate.

It was evident from the start of this campaign that if there was ever going to be a year to go all the way, this was it. Coach Jack Canniff had lost only two lettermen from the year before, giving his club a wealth of experience with ten returning seniors serving as the heart of the team.

There was plenty of talent in this group, as well as experience, and the leading scorer from the previous season, Pat Keenan, was only a sophomore. The defense seemed especially strong, with three of the four starters being seniors. In the goal was P.J. Flaherty, who as a junior had rated All-East selection in Division II. The captain of the team and leader of the defensive corps was Brian Sullivan, another All-East selection.

If defense does indeed win titles, then UMass started the season in good stead.

This defense did indeed do its job, and was the major factor in bringing a title to UMass. As well as the forwards played, and as often as they scored, the defense and P.J. Flaherty held the collective opposition to exactly 3.00 goals per game. In college hockey, that is an impressive defensive record.

The high points of the year for Flaherty and his defensive friends had to be the two tournaments, one at Williams and the other for the championship.

The Williams Tourney saw the Redmen take all three games, and record their only shutout of the season. For the entire tournament only four goals were scored against the UMass team.

The championship games showed UMass being touched for just six goals, three in the first game, two in the second, and one in the final. Good defense.

It's also true that no matter how good a defensive corps and goaltender are, if the forwards don't cover their wings and backcheck then trouble is bound to come.

But the main job of the forwards is to score, and there was plenty of scoring all season long.

Junior Pat Keenan broke his own UMass scoring records for goals and total points in a season as he hit for 34 goals and 59 points. He also broke the career points scored record by ending up his junior year with a total of 115 points. The previous record was 81.

Senior Jack Edwards broke the record for points in a career as he added 26 assists to his previous mark of thirty to give him a career mark of 56.

Sophomore Jim Coleman emerged as potentially one of the best centers UMass has ever had. A great stickhandler, Coleman must learn to shoot the puck rather than try to skate with it too much.

Don Riley, a junior center, developed into the best all-around player on the Redmen squad. Riley killed penalties well, played a strong defensive game, and blossomed into a point-getter extraordinaire during the playoffs. His five assists in the final vs. Buffalo gave him a total of 14 goals and 16 assists on the season for 30 points.

The line that Riley centered had to rank, scoring wise, as the biggest disappointment of the year for the Redmen until playoff time rolled around. This trio, consisting of Riley, Chico Shea, and Eric Scrafield, simply did not produce many goals during the regular season. But when playoff time rolled around, Boom! the puck started finding the net as if it had never left home. They had it when it counted.

The first line of Pat Keenan, Dan Reidy, and Jack Edwards combined for a total of 60 goals and 75 assists, giving them 135 points for the season, an average of 5.2 a game.

Reidy, the strongest man on the team, looked like a tank on skates and was just as tough. He did the work in the corners and hit for 15 goals. Reidy always seemed to get the job done without much fanfare. But he got it done.

There were others like speedster Charlie Donovan, who started out on the fourth line and moved up to the third midway through the season. His final totals of 8 goals and 11 assists were a tremendous improvement over last year's 2 goals and 0 assists.

The two boys from Auburn, Mike Waldron and Bob Shilalie, played the same type of game, but with different equipment. Waldron was a fireplug as right wing on the third line and despite his lack of size, hit with fury. He also picked up 12 goals including a hat trick against Boston State.

Shilalie was a hard rock defenseman and filled in well as the swing man on the five-man defensive corps. A lot of people ran into Shilalie during the course of the season, but not many skated away in the same condition they arrived.

There were disappointments such as the lack of production from Eric Scrafield, Lonnie Avery and Dennis Grabowski, but Scrafield and Grabowski more than came through in the playoffs. Grabowski filled in brilliantly for Pat Keenan and Jim Coleman when they were injured and Scrafield played his best hockey of the season in the playoffs, hitting for two goals in the Buffalo game.

Lonnie Avery, a junior, started the season on the third line but was eventually demoted to the fourth line. Avery's potential indicates he could be a help to this team next year, but this season he just didn't get going.

And sophomore Jim Lynch, who played fourth line all season, just never got the ice time to produce much. When he did it was against Division I. Lynch needs a few more moves to go with a lot of hustle to become a scorer. But he showed in a game against Providence a willingness to hit and skate. There's always room for that kind of hockey player.

In a season wrap-up like this, it's easy to point out mistakes made by coaches and players. But this team and Coach Jack Canniff won the Division II title; they did it all. There will be time for second-guessing in future years.

A fitting close to a season like this is to make mention of all the people who make things run smooth but are never seen.

People like Richie Freechero, the team manager, who would rate All-East selection if there was such a thing for his position.

People like Tom Peters, the team PR man and statistician, who wore the same coat to the final that he did to the first Vermont game because it would bring good luck. It did.

The Division II title belonged to a lot of people, those who played and those who didn't.

Maryland Bet In NIT Tourney

NEW YORK (AP) — Maryland, the tallest squad with one of the best records, was named by some Monday as the basketball team to beat in the 35th National Invitation Tournament.

But the rest of the 16-team field promises that they won't be easy marks for the Atlantic Coast Conference tough guys.

"I'd like to say that St. Joseph's is the favored team," said Coach Jack McKinney of the Pennsylvania school at a drum-beating luncheon," but I'll have to go with Maryland.

"We're much smaller than they are-as a matter of fact, so are a lot of teams. But we can win here if we get good performance from our backcourt men."

St. Joseph's, 19-8, the runnerup in the Middle Atlantic Coast Conference, meets Maryland, 23-5, in one of the first-round games this Saturday at Madison Square Garden.

The week-long tourney gets underway Friday night with a doubleheader pairing Virginia, 21-6, of the ACC against Lafayette, 20-5, and Fordham, 18-8, paired with Jacksonville, 17-7.

The Maryland-St. Joseph's game is part of a Saturday afternoon doubleheader. Davidson, 19-8, of the Southern Conference, meets Syracuse, 20-6, in the opener.

Oral Roberst, 25-1, plays Memphis State, 21-6, of the Missouri Valley Conference and St. John's, N.Y., 17-9, takes on Missouri, 21-5, of the Big Eight Saturday night. The first round closes Sunday with Princeton, 19-6, of the Ivy League, playing Big Ten representative Indiana, 17-7, and Niagara, 18-8, meeting Texas-El Paso, 20-6, of the Western Athletic Conference.

"Maryland certainly looks like one of the toughest," conceded Memphis State's Gene Bartow, whose club also must be considered a strong candidate for the title of the nation's oldest post-season tournament.

Hal Wissel, the Fordham coach, agreed that Jacksonville wouldn't be easy, either, but added: "We're not in awe of big teams."

Lefty Driesell, the Maryland coach, wouldn't say whether his team is the "UCLA of the East," a quote attributed to him earlier in the season.

"I don't think anyone will equal John Wooden's record out there," sad Driesell, referring to the Bruins' five straight national titles.

All Lefty wants is a chance to win the NIT. He has that.

Meal Ticket, C.C. Fee Increase Discussed

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Proposed increases in the Campus Center fee and meal ticket cost were the topics of discussion at last night's Rents and Fees Committee meeting which Campus Center Manager Terry Grinnan and Joel Stoneham and Gerry Grady of Food Services attended. Also in attendance was Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services Thomas Campion and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage.

After some opening remarks by Campion in which he stressed that all business of the night would and should be open to discussion, Grinnan explained the technicalities of the estimated fiscal 1972 budget and the projected 1973 budget of the Campus Center. This included the projections of the budget with a possible five dollar and a possible ten dollar increase in the Campus Center Fee.

As things stand now (with the present $60 Campus Center Fee) the surplus for fiscal year 1973 is a projected $47,325 which is reduced to a loss of $38,675 due to what Grinnan termed "cash float". There is also the factor that there is no money at all available for Capital Expenditure, which Grinnan said in a post meeting interview could cause loss of potential business.

Grinnan explained "cash float" as the money that is tied up in such things as inventory in the University Store or money that is otherwise not available for immediate use.

The proposed increases in Campus Center Fee would bring about the following changes: With a $5 increase there would be $50,000 available for Capital Expenditure and a projected surplus of $109,825 ($23,350 when considering "cash float"). With a $10 increase there would be a reserve of $100,000 for Capital Expenditure and a $171,825 surplus ($85,825 when considering "cash float"-this is the more realistic figure).

All of these increases would come about with absolutely no raise in any of the student services in the Campus Center complex except for food, which undergoes a 5-6% increas in wholesale prices.

Gerry Grady of Food Service presented his arguments which culminated in a request for a $7.50 per semester increase in the cost of meal tickets next year. He explained this in terms of the following new expenditures and decreases in revenue:

1) An estimeated decrease of $288,000 in meal ticket revenue due to an increased number of seniors and students over twenty-one years of age living in residence halls.

2) It is estimated that more students will be choosing the ten meal option next fall than did this semester.

3) Wage increases for Dining Commons employees.

4) Estimated increase in cost of food purchases due to an estimated 6% increase in wholesale price indexes.

5) Expenditure on "desperately" needed renovations in Worcester Dining Commons and minor alterations at Hampden Dining Commons.

The total of the Food Services budget amounts to $6,166,000 revenues and $6,302,881.13 expenditures. This leaves a deficit of approximately $137,000 in the budget which is the basis of the request for an increase of $7.50 a semester or 2-1/2%.

The committee's reaction to these proposed increases is not yet known. However, investigation of the measures is under way, with a total of six meetings already planned in the next three weeks on the topics and some investigation by committee members on ways of cutting down on expenditures. The committee is working to eliminate any need for these increases.

Thursday night the committee meets to discuss possible rent hikes with representatives of the Housing Office. This is where the greatest proposed increases are expected. The committee is prepared to oppose them. More on this in Friday's Collegian.

Ms. Cole Calls Women's Prison Oppression Bold

Here, Johnnetta Cole makes an important point concerning the prison conditions which effect women in the United States. Ms. Cole feels that prison conditions are better in some socialist countries than in this country. (Photo by Carl Nash)

By PAM HYJEK

Johnnetta Cole, a teacher of Anthropology and Afro-American Studies here at UMass, spoke last night of the oppression of women as evident in women's prisons in the U.S. Ms. Cole was speaking before the Orchard Hill course: Women in the Economic and Political System, which meets on Tuesday nights in Dickinson Lounge.

Ms. Cole began by speaking of the oppression seen boldly in the prisons. She rejects the idea that there is sigcificantly different treatment of the oppressed outside the prisons; as prisons are a natural outgrowth of a capitalist society. Supporting this theory, she observed that the severity of penal institutions has been greatly reduced in socialist countries, such as Cuba and China, where the need to resort to crime has been supposedly mitigated.

In contrast to a men's prison where armed, uniformed guards announce authority loudly, the control of women in prison is more subtle. Women are not expected to break out of jail; they are expected to dress neatly, to be nice women and give up their evil ways. Beauty shops are a common "convenience" to encourage the fulfillment of the ideal of woman even there.

For many women, concern for their children can cause them to be manipulated cruelly. Black women and white women may be pitted against each other, and disunited; none can hope to gain anything. Though the absence of Third World prison guards is a current complaint, Ms. Cole denied the value of such an innovation. Rather than reform, she called for an end to the entire penal system.

Whole prostitution, theft, forgery, alcoholism, and involvement with drugs are the most prevalent crimes of women, she noted that these offenses find their generation in society. Upon release, women are often forced to resume the practices for which they were imprisoned; as nothing has been fundamentally changed in the society.

"Sisters in Framingham (State Prison) sit day after day after day and sew little flags...or shields that say 'Massachusetts State Police'." Again, women in prison, if allowed to participate in a training program, are offered the options of secretary, beautician, or, in a more advanced program, that of keypunch operator.

Johnnetta Cole said that the lack of press coverage of women's prison revolts reflects what interests the press, as well as what prison authorities choose to repress.

King Commemoration Nears Final Planning

A student committee is nearing final stages of planning for the annual Martin Luther King, Jr., Memorial Lecture Series which will be held this year during the week of April 4th to the 7th.

The Distinguished Visitors Program has committed itself to sponsor the lecture series each year in order to commemorate the death of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. (April 4, 1968). This year some members of DVP along with other interested students and groups such as Program Council, Orchard Hill Area Government, New Africa House, etc., has come up with a series of three exciting events which will certainly be both educational and entertaining.

The lecture series traditionally is held in order to remind the UMass community of those goals and aspirations which the distinguished Dr. King possessed and strove for, e.g., justice, equality and a love for all mankind. It is during this week that the lecture series hopes to bring about a greater understanding of Black people and their goals.

The theme of this year's events is twofold:

1. to define and discuss Dr. King's civil rights movement and its relationship to the present Black struggle, and, 2. to present how Black people are redefining themselves thru the arts.

The Martin Luther King, Jr., Memorial Lecture Series wil present on:

April 4th, Imamu Baraka (LeRoi Jones), Black poet, playwright and politician, discussing "The Civil Rights Movement–Dr. King, and the Present Black Struggle" in the Campus Center Auditorium.

April 5th, Edmund Gaither, Curator of the National Center for Afro-American Artist, Museum in Boston, will present a slide/lecture presentation entitled "New Dimensions in Black Social Art" in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

April 7th, the series will end with a dance presentation by George Howard and the Primitive Dance Company of the National Center of Afro-American Artists also in the Campus Center Auditorium.

All events will begin at 8 p.m.

The members of the working committee are: Jackie Berryman, Bob Pierce, Coleen Roche, Ingrid White, Candi Early, Suzanne Flynn, Joel Mayer, Anne Fournier, Mary Lou Londergan and Robert Padgett.

All events are free and open to the public.

Selectmen Change Meeting Date

By CHARLEY BERKOW

As a direct result of Monday night's Town Meeting action (see page three), the Amherst Board of Selectmen decided last night to switch their weekly meetings from Monday to Tuesday nights.

The switch came because Selectman Nancy Eddy said that she could not attend any more meetings on Monday nights, as she has to pay for a babysitter.

In other action in their meeting in Town Hall last night, the Selectmen granted several applications for licenses, and discussed a new system for filing reports on locally licensed establishments.

"It seems clear that the Town Meeting believes in Noblesse Oblige," Ms. Eddy said, referring to the Town Meeting's decision Monday night not to allow the Selectmen salaries. "I don't."

Ms. Eddy's husband has a class on Monday nights, and as a result cannot babysit for his children. As Ms. Eddy cannot be reimbursed for a babysitter, she asked that the meetings be switched to Tuesday nights, when her husband is free to babysit.

The meetings had been scheduled on Monday nights to make it easier for citizens to attend, and to allow fresher coverage by the Amherst Record, a weekly newspaper which comes out on Wednesdays.

The deadline for the record is Tuesday afternoon. The news of the Board of Selectmen's meetings held on Tuesday nights will be more than a week old when it appears in the Record.

Selectman Bob Garvey asked that records of investigations of establishments licensed by the Board of Selectmen by all agencies should be kept in one place. This, he said, would allow the Selectmen to be more informed when they dealt with license applications.

The manager of Sound Ideas, Joel Artenstein, appeared before the Board requesting a license to sell second-hand stereo equipment.

The Board granted the license, on the condition that he keep records of the serial numbers of the articles he sold and where he got them.

Town Manager Allen Torrey mentioned that there used to be a racket in town of stealing textbooks and selling them to used bookstores. "We are aware that there is a great deal of theft of stereo equipment," he said.

"No one is more aware than I," replied Artenstein. "I just installed a $1,000 burglar alarm."

SOS To Meet Tonight

There will be an open meeting of Students Offering Support tonight at 7:30 in Room 176 of the Campus Center in order to discuss plans for incorporating with the community.

Representatives from SOS and the Amherst community met last Sunday to discuss incorporating their efforts for the raising of funds in support of 28 parents of residents at the Belchertown State School, who have filed a class- action suit against the State Department of Mental Health.

During the meeting, Joe Sylvia, chairman of SOS, called on representatives from the Amherst community to join SOS in their efforts to express support and obtain funds for the suit.

Sylvia also announced in an interview that there were presently efforts in the direction of establishing CSOS throughout Massachusetts. He said a one-day conference is planned for April 8 at UMass in order to acquaint all interested colleges and universities in the state with the issues involved in the suit, and the necessary means of establishing a CSOS on their campus.

Academic Affairs Discuss School Of Ed

By HUGH OWEN

One member of the Academic Affairs Committee referred to last night's meeting as a witch hunt. Witches were not the ones on trial, however. Only a few of the faculty members of the School of Education.

The School of Education members were invited to the meeting to answer Academic Affairs Committee member's questions. Some issues discussed were overcrowding in the School of Ed, the new changes in the school and what effects they had on it, the pass-fail system, and the administrative records system.

A few years ago the School of Ed switched to the Modular Curriculum. Basically, this sytem enables more students to take more courses in less time than had been previously required. Now this curriculum is overcrowded and too many students are being trained for occupational fields which are not able to handle them.

Another problem which was brought up was the opinion that the School of Ed was advancing its programs too rapidly to deal with the problems that might arise in these programs. Dean Earl Seidman of the School of Ed admitted that this had happened in the past but he feels that most of these problems have now been resolved.

On the subject of the pass-fail system, Dean Seidman said that this move would be in keeping with the School of Ed policy of continuing to work with experimental grading systems.

Chuck MacMillan, a faculty member of the School of Ed, pointed out that a problem with the present pass-fail system is that a large majority of Graduate School Deans prefer the traditional grading system. He went on to say, however, that most Graduate Schools will accept the pass-fail system. Another problem in the system, MacMillan said, was that it could move towards a credit-partial credit, credit-no credit system and eventually revert back to a system much like the traditional A-B-C system.

Barbara Bolden, an undergraduate student in the School of Ed, then questioned whether the policy of an open records system in the School of Ed is actually being carried out. She said that when she had tried to obtain some budget records they were unavailable to her. She further stated that in her opinion the School of Ed was very chaotic and that they had the potential to resolve these problems but were not using it.

Town Meeting Hits Major Issues

By CHARLEY BERKOW

Most of the major budget articles passed the Amherst Town Meeting Monday night with barely a ripple.

But the Town Meeting members argued long and hard over proposals to pay members of the Board of Selectmen and to increase the legal right-of-way along Potwine Lane.

The Town Meeting got through 22 of the 45 articles on its warrant on Monday night. It will continue tonight at 7:30 in the Amherst Regional High School Auditorium.

In the closest vote of the night, 115 to 94, the Town Meeting turned down a motion by Merle Howes, chairman of the Board of Selectmen, to pay the Selectmen.

Howes said that the salaries, $600 a year for Selectmen, and $1,000 a year for the chairman of the Board, would serve only to cover expenses incurred by the Selectmen in the course of their duties.

Supporters of Howes motion said that it should be passed because it would allow for equal opportunity of participation on the Board.

Selectman Leo Bouchard, for example, a Master Electrician, loses a day's pay every time he has to go out of town to a meeting, as the Selectmen have to do from time to time.

Selectman Nancy Eddy said that because her husband has a class on Monday nights, the night that the Selectmen meet she has to hire a baby-sitter to take care of her children.

In somewhat of an upset, the Town Meeting voted down a proposal to extend its legal right-of-way on Potwine Lane.

Town officials had wanted to extend the legal right-of-way to insure that houses built on Potwine in the future would be far enough away from the road to allow for a widening of the road or for sidewalks to be built.

Residents of Potwine signed a petition against the proposed land-takings.

Selectman Michael P. Sullivan said that the town had no plans at the present to widen the road.

Merle Howes, chairman of the Board of Selectmen, after the meeting, predicted that "in five years, when half the people who live on Potwine Lane have gone on to teach at other Universities, the people who live there will come and ask "Why wasn't that done five years ago?' "

He also pointed out that Potwine is a feeder to other streets that will be built as the area is developed.

Selectman Leo E. Bouchard, who lives on Potwine Lane, said that the issue is whether or not local residents can control their own neighborhood.

It also accepted 30 new roads, most of them in subdivisions. It did not, however, accept Old Town Road, which it had planned to, because it is University property. The University will be asked to erect and enforce no parking signs on the street, and plow snow from it. If it doesn't, the Town may ask the state legislature for the rights to the road.

The Town Meeting approved five articles in short order to raise a total of $126,000 for road improvements.

The Town Meeting also:

—unanimously approved motion to raise $75,000 to construct a new bridge on South East Street over the Fort River.

— agreed to raise $88,650 to replace, extend, and construct several water mains in town to be constructed on Potwine Lane and also appropriated $8,000 for a sewer.

—agreed to raise $25,000 to be placed in the Conservation Fund to buy land.

—approved a proposed purchase by the town of about 2 1/2 acres of land between East Leverett Road and Cushman Brook for the Conservation Commission.

—appropriated $7,000 to support an investigation by local geological experts of the surface and underground water resources in Amherst.

—appropriated $20,000 for sidewalk construction.

—voted to restore about $6,000 to the budget requested by the Jones Library. The Selectmen approved the higher budget, but the Finance Committee had trimmed it. The budget for the libary will increase by 57.6% over last year. Most of the increase will go to salaries.

—approved the purchase of some land in Shutesbury near the Atkins Reservoir. The purchase was designed to protect watershed by preventing development of the area.

Pentagon Denies Gassing

WASHINGTON (AP)-The U.S. Air Force dropped two 50-pound canisters of deadly VX nerve gas on a North Vietnamese outpost in Cambodia in 1968 to test the effects of this weapon in combat, an ecology magazine reported Tuesday. The Defense Department denied this was done.

The April issue of Earth, published in San Francisco by the Earth Publishing Corp., said in an article written by Managing Editor Gerard Van der Leun that scientists at the Rocky Mountain Arsenal in Denver asked for and received Pentagon permission to use North Vietnamese troops as human guinea pigs.

Van der Leun wrote that the experiment was carried out under the code name "Project Red Cap" during the summer of 1968. He gave no indication where he got his information or on what it is based.

A Pentagon spokesman said "There is no truth to the allegation." And he added:

"The United States has not employed nerve gas or any other lethal chemical agent against enemy forces in Southeast Asia or any other location."

The spokesman said the name "Project Red Cap" never has been used in conjunction with any of the Rocky Mountain Arsenal projects or any other military project as far as could be determined. "Red Cap" is the standard military acronym for "Readiness Capability."

Van der Leun wrote that the target was an equipment recovery station operated by the 94th North Vietnamese Army Recovery Group located about 10 miles inside northeast Cambodia near the Ho Chi Minh trail.

Wallace Sweeps Primary; Humphrey 2nd

Shirley Chisholm, one of the candidates who received a small percentage of the vote in the primary, talks with one prospective voter in the final hours of campaigning.

Primary Results At A Glance

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Here are the vote totals in Florida's Democratic presidential preference primary with 99 per cent of the 2,841 precincts reporting:

Wallace 505,689-41 per cent
Humphrey 227,059-19 per cent
Jackson 164,976-14 per cent
Muskie 108,132-9 per cent
Lindsay 79,484-6 per cent
McGovern 74,286-6 per cent
Chisholm 43,384-4 per cent
McCarthy 5,848-0 per cent
Mills 4,575-0 per cent
Hartke 3,477-0 per cent
Yorty 2,560-0 per cent

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Here are the vote totals in Florida's Republican presidential preference primary with 99 per cent of the 2,841 precincts reporting:

Nixon 356,847-87 per cent
Ashbrook 35,896-9 per cent
McCloskey 16,950-4 per cent

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Here are the returns from 99 per cent of Florida's 2,841 precincts on the three straw-ballot questions:

Yes 1,103,856-74 per cent
No 386,724-26 per cent

Whether to provide equal opportunity for quality education for all children:

Yes 1,065,393-79 per cent
No 289,839-21 per cent

Whether to allow prayer in the public schools:

Yes 1,133,079-79 per cent
No 294,848-21 per cent

MIAMI (AP) — Gov. George C. Wallace stormed to a landslide victory Tuesday night in Florida's Democratic presidential primary. Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey ran a distant second, while Sen. Edmund S. Muskie was trounced and far back in the field.

Among 10 defeated Democrats, Muskie of Maine was the big loser. He ran fourth, behind Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington.

As the election night count neared completion, Wallace had 42 per cent of the Democratic vote, a better showing than expected. With a 19 per cent showing that doubled Muskie's total, Humphrey gained most among candidates other than the Alabama governor. Jackson had 13 per cent.

Muskie was back with the also-ran entries, at 9 per cent.

President Nixon swept to victory in a Republican primary that never was a contest.

And Florida voters declared by a gigantic 74-26 per cent margin that they would like the U.S. Constitution amended to forbid the compulsory busing of school children for purposes of racial balance. They also voted heavily for equal education for all children.

This was the standing on the long Democratic ballot, with 99 per cent of Florida's 2,481 precincts counted:

Wallace 511,352 or 42 per cent.
Humphrey 228,850 or 18 per cent.
Jackson 166,424 or 14 per cent.
Muskie 108,849 or 9 per cent.
Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York was fifth with 80,312 votes, or 6 per cent.

He had waged a contest with Sen. George McGvoern of South Dakota for the top spot among liberal Democrats. McGovern finished sixth with 74,482 votes, also 6 per cent.

Rep. Shirley Chisholm of New York was next with 44,180 votes, or 4 per cent.

The balance of the votes were split among four absentee entries, Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy of Minnesota, Rep. Wilbur D. Mills of Arkansas, Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana and Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles.

On the Republican side, this was the count with 99 per cent of the precincts in:

Nixon 357,138 or 87 per cent.
Rep. John M. Ashbrook of Ohio 35,976 or 9 per cent.
And Rep. Paul N. McCloskey of California 16,982 or 4 per cent.

McCloskey quit the presidential campaign after the New Hampshire primary last week but his name remained on the ballot.

The near-final count in the busing referendum, which was not legally binding, was 1,104,700 or 74 per cent for an anti-busing amendment, and 387,073 against, or 26 per cent.

At the same time, 79 per cent of the ballots, or 1,066,123, were marked in favor of a straw-vote question which asked whether Floridians support equal opportunity in education. The vote against was 290,003 or 21 per cent.

In Brief...

Nixon Expects Inflation Ease

The Nixon administration expects the post-freeze inflation bulge to subside by Easter. But, if it doesn't, new ways to slow the price rise will be tried, the new member of President Nixon's Economic Advisers said Tuesday.

Marina Whitman, who was sworn in Monday as the first woman member of the council, told newsmen that the price-control system could be tightened to affect some of the problem areas where prices have risen too rapidly, or other action could be taken.

Guess Who's Back.....

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Billionaire Howard Hughes has arrived at an undisclosed place in the United States, an aide said Tuesday.

Dick Hannah, a spokesman for Hughes Tool Co., said the billionaire left his Nicaragua hotel late Monday night.

Hannah would not disclose the reasons for Hughes' leaving Nicaragua, where he had gone after vacating his residence in the Bahamas.

Board Approves Big Dock Raise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Both labor and management Tuesday asked the Pay Board to approve a 25.9 per cent pay raise for 15,000 West Coast dock workers, the biggest one-year pay increase it has yet considered.

They argued at a formal hearing that the raise is justified by 10 years of rising worker productivity that has saved employers an estimated $1 billion.

Military Aid Cuts Attacked By Nixon

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon told Congress Tuesday that cuts and delays in U.S. military aid to allies "could have a destablishing effect at a time when calm confidence in our support and perseverance will be critically needed."

Nixon in a special message said approval of his full $2.15-billion new military-aid request, a $700-million increase, is especially critical "as we begin to make adjustments in our international role.

"Without adequate security assistance," Nixon said, "we cannot safely reduce our military presence abroad."

The President sent the message to Congress as Secretary of State William P. Rogers made the same appeal before the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

If withdrawal of U.S. troops abroad is not balanced with increased aid for our allies' own defense, Rogers said, "the Nixon Doctrine would be regarded by the international community as signalling an American retreat from international responsibility."

Mitchell Explains ITT Dealings

WASHINGTON (AP)-Former Atty Gen. John N. Mitchell testified Tuesday he met for 35 minutes with the president of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., even though Mitchell had disqualified himself from taking part in antitrust suits against the conglomerate.

But Mitchell told the Senate Judiciary Committee that the discussion in August 1970 dealt only with ITT president Harold Geneen's arguments that the Nixon administration's antitrust policy was too vigorous.

Mitchell, who disqualified himself because his old law firm had advised an ITT subsidiary, said there was no discussion of the company's court battles with the Justice Department.

Mitchell denied knowledge also of a reported $400,000 pledge by ITT to help finance the Republican National Convention in San Diego next August.

The committee was in its eighth day of hearings requested by Richard G. Kleindienst on a report published by columnist Jack Anderson that ITT was given a favorable settlement of the antitrust action after making the pledge.

Kleindienst was deputy attorney general at the time of the settlement last July. He has been nominated to succeed Mitchell who stepped down March 1 to manage President Nixon's re-election campaign.

The committee gave unanimous approval to the nomination prior to the publication of Anderson's accusation. The Senate has not acted on the committee's report but Chairman James O. Eastland, D-Miss., has taken the position that as far as the committee is concerned the nomination stands approved and he does not plan another committee vote.

As Mitchell underwent rather mild questioning from Democrats, there were indications that some senators will be traveling to talk with ITT lobbyist Dita D. Beard, now in a Denver hospital with a heart ailment.

Mrs. Bead, 53, is the author of a memo cited by Anderson as evidence that the antitrust settlement and convention commitment are related.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said the committee heard a report from two heart surgeons who examined Mrs. Beard and reached an understanding that some members of the committee would fly to Denver, probably next week.

Mitchell said his meeting with Geneen came at the ITT executive's request. It's purpose, Mitchell said, was "to discuss the over-all antitrust policy of the department with respect to conglomerates.

"I assented to the meeting on the express condition that the pending litigation would not be discussed. Mr. Geneen agreed to this condition."

Mitchell said he advised Geneen that "our policy was to bring litigation only where there was a showing of anticompetitive practices."

Vietnam Victories Claimed

SAIGON (AP)-The allied commands claimed a series of victories Tuesday along South Vietnam's western borders including destruction by bombers of a major enemy headquarters in eastern Cambodia.

Field reports and communiques claimed at least 166 North Vietnamese killed and more than 100 bunkers and huge quantities of supplies destroyed.

Senior U.S. advisers in the field said U.S. B52 bomber strikes sent about 200 enemy troops fleeing Monday from their headquarters in eastern Cambodia, 15 miles across the border and about 85 miles northwest of Saigon.

U.S. and South Vietnamese tactical fighter-bombers pursued them through the jungled base camp. Hundreds of rounds of artillery blasted at them, and more B52 raids were made around the headquarters at dusk.

There was no confirmed count of enemy killed, U.S. advisers said.

U.S. helicopter pilots reported sighting mangled bodies strewn across the base camp, in bunkers and bomb craters.

The U.S. advisers believed it was the enemy's rear service base for operations inside South Vietnam west of Saigon.

One adviser called it the biggest success to date of a 7,000-man South Vietnamese ground drive against enemy base camps in eastern Cambodia.

The operation was launched last Friday, but so far there has been no major ground fighting.

There were no South Vietnamese casualties. Ground troops did not reach the site. A South Vietnamese armored column was said to be camped just south of the scene overnight.

Hussein To Announce West Bank Autonomy

AMMAN, Jordan AP)-King Hussein will proclaim a revised constitution Wednesday that declares the occupied west bank of Jordan an autonomous part of his kingdom, sources close to the royal palace said Tueday night. But they denied a report he had made a pact with Israel for return of the territory.

Radio Baghdad said Tuesday that Hussein had reached a peace agreement with Israel that would make the west bank an autonomous Palestinian state with an Arab Jerusalem as its capital. Widespread denial greeted the Iraqi report. Israeli authorities called it nonsense.

The king was scheduled to announce his proposal at a news conference Wednesday.

Palace sources said the steps Hussein would announce "are purely internal...for the reorganization of the status of the Palestinians and do not involve any agreement with Israel."

Western diplomats in London said the king's plan, as outlined to the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union, called for union of the west bank with his kingdom, but was not based on a peace settlement.

Sources in Jerusalem said a statement by Secretary of State William P. Rogers that "immediate developments" were expected in the situation sent the Israeli Cabinet into hurried consultation. Israel asked Rogers to clarify the remarks he made before the House Foreign Affairs Committee in Washington, the informants said.

Rogers told the committee he was familiar with Jordanian intentions but did not want to comment on them publicly because of imminent developments that would explain the situation.

Israeli Prime Minister Abba Eban cut short his appearance in Parliament just after a television announcement of Rogers' comments.

In dismissing as nonsense reports of a settlement, one Israeli official said, "We wish they could be true." A Foreign Ministry statement denying the rumor lacked, however, the usual disclaimer of diplomatic meetings.

New I.R.A. Offensive Ends N.Ireland Truce

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)-Irish guerrillas, striking swiftly at the close of a three-day truce, unleashed a furious bomb and gun offensive Tuesdy that claimed the lives of two men and injured many others across Northern Ireland.

At least 14 bombs blasted Belfast, Londonderry, Strabane and a number of other towns, causing widespread injury and destruction.

The onslaught began within minutes of the midnight ending of a 72-hour cease-fire called by the nationalist Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army.

The two men were killed in a short, sharp battle between British troops and snipers on the edge of the Roman Catholic Bogside district of Londonderry. Security officials said one of the dead was positively identified as a member of the IRA Provisionals.

Provisional headquarters in Dublin charged both men were unarmed and were "just walking along a street smoking when they were shot dead."

A Catholic was shot to death shortly before the truce expired. The death toll in 31 months of violence stands at 272.

As the battle raged through the beleaguered province, former Prime Minister Harold Wilson returned from talks with political leaders in Dublin to press the British government for urgent peace moves. These would involve concessions to the Roman Catholics of Northern Ireland who insist they were being discriminated against.

China's Women Still Face Inequalities

ROME-JANE DOES HER BIT-American actress Jane Fonda gestures during rally staged in downtown Rome Wednesday by an Italian women's liberation organization. (AP)

HONG KONG, March 13--Thousands of representatives of women's organizations attending a rally held in Canton, capital of Kwangtung Province in south China, to celebrate women's Day last Wednesday, according to a broadcast from the city monitored here.

But out of the 18 senior officials listed as present, only one was a woman.

The limited political power of women in China is reflected in the fact that when the Ninth Congress of the Chinese Communist party elected 170 persons as full members of the Central Committee in 1969, only 13 were women. The Central Committee elected a political bureau of 21 full members and four alternate members. Only two were women.

The election of these two women, Chiang Ching and Yeh Chun, owed more to the pre-eminence of their husbands, Mao Tse-tung, the party chairman, and Lin Piao, the vice chairman, than to their own personal popularity or party standing. Yeh Chun has since disappeared from public view along with her purged husband.

A country that has prided itself on having "liberated" its women long before liberation movements gained their present universality, China still is a man's world when it comes to political power. A series of recent articles in the Chinese press, published to mark Women's Day, reveal that Chinese women have reason to complain of inequalities in other fields.

The acknowledgment of these inequalities is a new trend. Women's Day publicity in the past has been devoted mostly to praise for those who were outstanding workers. A catch phrase in vogue two years ago was: "What men can do can also be done by women."

But in Hopei Province, according to an article in the current issue of Hung Chi, a periodical published by the Central Committee, women have voiced a complaint that "the work is equal but not the pay."

Hung Chi said that the struggle over equal pay for women was "still very fierce" and revolved around the allocation of work points, which are the basis for calculating how much a worker earns. It stated that some officials held the work points of women down to 7 while men could get up to 10.

Rural Problems Discussed

Problems existing in rural China were discussed in a recent issue, of the weekly publication Peking Review by one of China's most prominent women, Soong Ching-ling, who is the widow of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, China's revolutionary leader, and a sister of Mrs. Chiang Kai-shek. Mrs. Sun is one of two deputy heads of state in the Chinese Government but does not wield significant political power, which is vested in the top officials of the Communist party.

Posing the question whether the women's liberation movement in China had come to its end, Mrs. Sun said the answer was "definitely no." She added that much "feudal-patriarchal ideology" still prevailed among farmers.

"This ideology still does yield mischievous things in the rural places and some of the small towns," she said.

She said that in some rural areas women received less pay than men for equal work in production. She reported that proportionately more boys than girls attended school because parents needed the girls to do household work and some even felt that their daughters would eventually enter another family and would not need an education. The dowry system still operates, she wrote.

Birth Control Advocated

Because farmers want to build up the family labor force, she said, the birth of a daughter is considered a disappointment. The desire to have at least one son "has an adverse effect on birth control and planned births," she said.

New Black Party; First Step Forward

GARY, Ind. (AP)-"What has happened here has been a rather extraordinary situation," said the Rev. Jesse Jackson of Chicago. "We pulled off a lightweight miracle."

The independent black political movement born last weekend at the first National Black Political Caucus may not quite measure up to Jackson's description. There isn't even any guarantee it will survive.

But it does mark the first step toward doing on a national scale what blacks have been doing for several years in a handful of states-becoming less dependent on the major parties to gain elective office.

In the mid-60s, a Huntsville, Ala., dentist named Dr. John Cashin founded a tiny, black-controlled organization called the National Democratic party of Alabama.

Today, a substantial majority of Alabama's more than 100 black elected officials have been elected as members of the NDPA, regardless of whether they also consider themselves Democrats.

The United Party is working to create a similar power base in South Carolina, hoping to increase the number of black office holders as it decreases black dependence on the state Democratic party structure.

Delegates to the weekend caucus encompassed a wide range of black political thought. They included representatives of the National Association for the Adavancement of Colored People, the National Welfare Rights Organization, Jackson's People United to Save Humanity, the Republic of New Africa and the National Democratic party of Alabama. Also present were a black adviser from the White House, black legislators, many Democrats, some Republicans and the National Black Caucus made up of congressmen.

The language that created an independent black political movement on a national scale-it's tentatively called "the National Assembly"-gives it even more maneuvering room than the existing state groups. It could become a third party or not, as it sees fit.

Boyd Says Called FBI 80 Times

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)-Government informer Boyd F. Douglas Jr. said today he made approximately 80 telephone calls to the FBI while he was spying on antiwar priest Philip Berrigan and members of his Catholic Left peace movement.

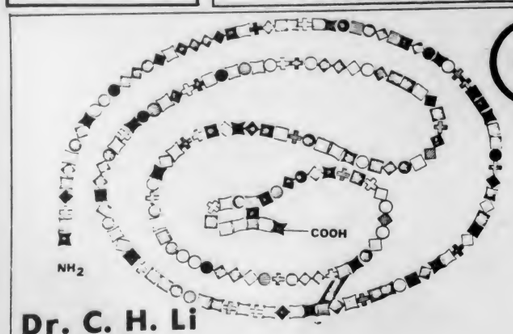
But he denied he ever received instructions from the FBI on what kind of information he should be gathering while he and Berrigan were inmates at the Lewisburg Pa., federal penitentiary during the spring and summer of 1970.

The 48-year-old Berrigan, now serving a sentence for destroying draft records, and six codefendants are accused of conspiring to kidnap presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger, blow up heating tunnels to federal buildings in Washington, D.C., and vandalize Selective Service offices around the country.

Under cross-examination for the sixth day, the 31-year-old ex-convict said he kept in touch with three FBI agents after he was discovered carrying illegal communcations for Berrigan in June 1970.

Douglas said that besides the telephone calls he had six meetings with FBI agents before he was paroled from the penitentiary on Dec. 16, 1970, three weeks prior to testifying before a federal grand jury.

It was during that year Douglas was a student at nearby Bucknell University and able to leave prison daily for classes.



Pressed to describe the purpose of the meetings, Douglas said one concerned his request for a $50,000 reward, which the FBI rejected.

State Rep Takes Education Stand

BOSTON (AP)-The chairwoman of the legislature's joint Committee on Education said today she "will never support state control of school costs for as long as I sit in the state Senate."

"It would be the biggest political donnybrook in all the years I've been in the legislature," said Sen. Mary L. Fonseca, D-Fall River.

The committee today began public hearings on several bills to provide for complete state takeover of public school costs or to provide a greater share of state aid for local school expenditures.

Mrs. Fonseca said, "the welfare situation in this state is a perfect example of what would happen if the Commonwealth tried to take over the cost of public school education."

Welfare costs were taken over by the state in 1970. The department has come under criticism from legislators and public officials for its massive spending and what they say is poor administration.

One of the bills up for committee hearing today would have the state take over control of the administration of public schools as well as their finances.

"You can't have 351 school boards trying to establish school policy," said Rep. I. Edward Serlin, D-Boston, who filed the bill.

Your Head

Orgies And Coping With Mother

By DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

Q: "My boyfriend and I have been going together for two years and are very much in love. Lately he has been arguing that each of us could and should express our genuine affection for other people sexually by inviting our friends to bed with us. We have argued about this a lot--he says I'm old-fashioned but I don't feel it could be the same between us if our relations included other people. What should I do?"

A: Our society is moving rather quickly away from what has been called the Victorian sexual ethic. It therefore does become increasingly difficult to make neat moral judgments about specific kinds of sexual behaviors and relationships. Nevertheless, the issue in your case cannot meaningfully be resolved in terms of whether or not you are "old-fashioned." The question is "what kinds of sexual and affectionate relationships with men are consistent with your values and feelings?" If you feel that things wouldn't be the same between your boyfriend and you if you did as he suggests, chances are that they in fact wouldn't be. Your boyfriend is suggesting that your values and feelings are less valid than his by labelling them "old-fashioned." This would seem to be where the problem really lies. If in talking together you find that it is impossible to come to an understanding that feels right for both of you, you may have to consider the possibility of a more suitable partner. The MH Service would happily meet with the two of you to see if we can be helpful.

Q: "I've always been pretty close to my mother and she has always said that she wants me to have my own life. Now that I've come to school my mother has called me many times about family crises, particularly about my younger brother and sister. She says she does this because "I can understand the younger generation." I've had to go home almost every weekend to mediate arguments. I really care about my family and even though I've tried pretty hard there doesn't seem to be anything I can do to make everyone happy."

A: In order to resolve this situation you are going to have to give up the gratification you get from being "close to mother," the "family mediator," and the "expert" on the affairs of youth. When a family member leaves home everyone is forced to readjust their patterns of relating. Parents may become suddenly aware of growing old, younger brothers and sisters may vie for more attention and freedom, and the person who leaves home has to seriously confront the task of developing their own life. Dealing with these realities can be stressful for all concerned and can elicit strong feelings of guilt, anxiety and resentment. In order to clarify your relationship to your family, you will have to take a stand. Tell your mother that you care about your family and that includes a sense of respect that they can resolve their own disputes by themselves.

If you can make your parents aware of the demands of your life here, they will be less likely to interpret your position as one of disinterest or callousness.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will accept questions in strict confidence for possible appearance in "Your Head." Send or bring your inquiries to Mental Health, 303 Machmer Hall.

Here Come The Faculty

Tomorrow morning there's going to be a general faculty meeting to consider two amendments to the Faculty Senate's Constitution. One of these will deal with the Athletic Council (changing the composition of the Council to include more students and fewer Alumni). The other will be a motion to change the Fac-Sen's Constitution so it would have jurisdiction only over academic matters.

The Athletic Council amendment is the one you've all heard so much about. While it would seem that there would be no trouble in getting full faculty approval, that just ain't so.

There is a growing drive among some of the faculty to kill the amendment. It could be done in two ways. One, at tomorrow's meeting propose an amendment to the amendment which would negate the existing amendment (the one that would increase student representation). While neither of the proposed amendments will receive final approval tomorrow (that takes another general faculty meeting), if the amendment to the amendment passes tomorrow, we would be forced to fight it being passed again at the second general faculty meeting. If it was stopped successfully at the second meeting, we would be back where we started from. The whole process to change the composition of the Athletic Council would have to be started from scratch.

Well, that we don't need.

So here comes the usual plea. If you want the Athletic Council changed (it's your money other people are spending) GO to the general faculty meeting. It's Thursday morning, 11:15, 227 Herter.

Getting fair representation on the Athletic Council is the first step in gaining a measure of control over the other fees we pay (Campus Center for example). But before we can go on to them, we have to win the first battle; and that one starts tomorrow.

The other amendment to limit the Fac-Sen to Academic policy decisions (a result of the Student Strike) would have even further reaching effects. For one, it would remove any influence the faculty could possibly have over non-academic campus policy. That's sometimes good, sometimes bad, depending on the issue. While it would perhaps have been nice if they had had no say in the whole Athletic Council deal, there are times when faculty support on an issue is valuable, psychologically or materially.

Looking at it from their standpoint, it's surprising that at this state in affairs they would want to cut themselves off from campus and University politics. The Governor's proposed budget will effect them, too. This is not the time, if there ever is one, for the representative body of the second most important group on campus to retreat into the Ivory Tower. If they do, it may well be stormed.

Ending Paternalism

Certain members of the UMass Faculty may continue to be known as "fascists" who are totally unresponsive to students' needs and desires. Only if motions and amendments attempting to halt any progress for student accessability to the Athletic Council are suppressed at tomorrow's meeting will these names be dropped.

After having fought a long hard battle to obtain rights which belonged to them anyway, UMass students should not accept any faculty movesto thwart efforts at changing the faculty's constitution and give students a majority voice on the Athletic Council.

Faculty paternalism has existed for too long. Even the state legislature is looking for ways to give 18-20 year olds additional rights and responsibilities which should belong to them. When will our partially antiquated Faculty catch on that we will not let them run our lives any longer, no matter what our age?

Students should be gratified that the Faculty have agreed to call their two general meetings to ratify the amendment before the end of this semester. However, we certainly should not have had to beg in this way for favors which are justly ours.

If the Faculty has any conscience as a body, it will do all in its power to pass the amendment which gives students their rightful place on the Athletic Council.

The Happy Secretary

WASHINGTON--Women's Lib organizations have moved out of the home and are now attacking the male chauvinists where it hurts--in the nation's offices. They finally have realized something that men have known all along--the power in this country lies with the American secretary. And while very few wives are willing to go to the barricades, there are millions of secretaries who are ready to take up arms to fight for the revolution.

I am one of the few male chauvinist bosses who takes Women's Lib's attempt to organize secretaries seriously. I know that my sweet-smiling, Junoesque secretary, Margi, who sits in my outer office, would really like to be a colonel in a heavy artillery women's brigade leading an attack on the National Assn. of Manufacturers.

But I wisely have prevented her from finding any excuse to feel oppressed or exploited. This is how I keep Margi happy.

In the morning I always get to the office at 9 o'clock sharp to open the mail so it will be ready for her when she comes in around 9:30.

I naturally wait for her to finish her coffee and talk to the other secretaries on the floor before asking her if she would be interested in taking any dictation or answering any calls.

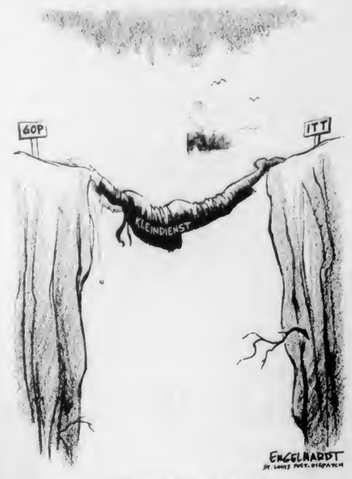
By 11 o'clock she's in her happiest mood, and we usually get our best work done. Occasionally, when she has to leave the office, I take her calls for her. If I feel it's important, I'll write down the name of the person who called and his telephone number.

But some are crank calls from department stores asking about bills that I don't want to bother her with, so I just listen to the person's story and try to get him off the phone as quickly as possible.

When Margi comes back, I ask her which person she wants me to call first for her.

The most important thing I've discovered as a boss is not to burden my secretary with too many details. I might tell her about my appointments, just in case she wants to remind me later about them. (This, of course, is strictly voluntary, and she has no obligation to do it if she is busy reading Women's Wear Daily.) And I try not to bother her with IBM or Xerox salesmen who constantly are coming into our office to sell their wares. I believe Margi's time is too valuable to talk to these people. While I have been accused of being brusque with strangers who come into the office selling postage meter machines and insurance, I would rather have them think badly of me than of Margi.

One of the main criticisms that secretaries voice about their work is that there is no chance for advancement. This is not the case in my office. I keep encouraging Margi to become a humor columnist. I have told her any time she wants to take over the column it's hers. This has made her feel that there is some future here, and while she hasn't done any humor columns yet, she is secure in the knowledge that if she wanted to, she could go as far as any man in the business.



Many secretaries complain that bosses are more interested in their looks than they are in their work. The reverse is also true, and my secretaries prefer to work for a man who is good-looking rather than efficient.

We don't have this problem in our office because although I am good-looking, I'm serious about my work, and Margi considers me more than just a sex object.

It is for these reasons Margi has rejected all approaches from the Women's Lib movement. While she is sympathetic with their goals, she knows that Women's Lib couldn't give her any more than she has now. It's no wonder that most militant women resent somebody like me. By treating my secretary as I do I've pulled their raison d'etre right from under their feet.

It's Something To Look At

Write only what you see, verbatim, as written upon the shallow glassy screen whose voice is also lean.
Listening all the while,
and gazing,
and pondering what there is to ponder... in search of another line.
At once, the room, a library...
an audio and video haven,
in which to waste ones boredom.
Bookcase images, and the stories they smile upon us.
And thoughts, remembrances, of once before... in thinking, that, always, there are new times coming. Places, people, and all of these to share.
But will they ever come?

sighs passing stillness, arising out, across hills,
borning not so gentle a wind.
Borning ancient warlords, inanimate, supreme.
Cloaked in ominous gray,
disguising hoarseness...
the sky, a deep black circle,
a ceiling of the same.
Discovered, hiding the rumble of army chariots,
are distant hills, in a mist of their own agony...
all swept in black and swirl.
Nearer, darker, as if smoke... still, a circle of smiling faces, below a faltering sky...
the hoof-torn heavens.
Heavily, in painful birth,
the sky, the burning night, for an instant pure white, writhed. And blinded children running circles... then tired.
Sitting circles... false innocence, defying...
Beneath an inevitable storm.
Confronting truth in vain,
demandingly, "... No Rain!! No Rain!!... ..."

Letters To The Editor

My Mother Did Not Call Me 'Michael'

To the Editor:

The Collegian and Poor Richard's is part of the larger, white male dominated institution, the University of Massachusetts. Though some reporters are very conscientious, the paper suffers. Why has it not alternated weekly female and male editors, with sharing of all positions and work? What would be the effect of a multi-racial staff composed equally of women and men? The noxious caption to the photo of the Hamlin House mural (3/10, p. 3) as well as those accompanying the Women's Day photos, would certainly be less frequent.

The university channels white males in all "leadership" and administrative positions. Males rip off the admissions, especially to graduate school in disportionate numbers and they cadge assistantships and fat salaries with tenure when women are excluded. Thus on Wednesday one demand was: "We deplore discrimination in any form including that which is based on sex, race, class, lifestyle, or politics. We demand that economic and procedural barriers be broken down so that black, Hispanic, native-American, Asian, poor and other women be admitted in substantial numbers to UMass, as students and faculty. We are sick of the mono-male-monopolized culture of which UMass is a microcosm!" If this demand were met, chairmen and heads of departments would no longer exist, salaries would be equalized, and those excessive salaries going to the most viciously competitive and greedy people could be redistributed to accommodate those previously excluded.

Had the reporters listened to all the speeches March 8, it would have been clear that women are creating strategies to counter the alienating and destructive impact of stratification, elitism and power. A positive contribution from the women's movement has been the Women's Institute to open in May and to replace the repressive, destructive (called "corrective") facility at Lancaster, Mass. Women from the Valley Women's Center has a year's lease. Their statement of goals points out: "The Women's Institute is committed to developing alternatives in our society based on the values of human equality, cooperation and sharing. The institute will begin changing those aspects of our society and culture which limit possibilities of growth and action for both women and men." There will be no hierarchy, no titles, no expertise to be hoarded; all salaries will be the same, consensus will be the mode of decision making.

One of the aims of Women's International Day was to lift the level of awareness of ourselves and others by sharing thoughts and feelings. We did not expect the cooks to drop their pans, the maids their mops, the secretaries their typewriters. They were not free to leave their male employers. We merely wanted to express our understanding of how an administrative secretary administers for an administrator, takes hell from those who won't confront the administrator, takes hell from the administrator, is expected to know all there is to do and does his work. He signs his name and rips off the title and salary. Everyone of the speakers at the rally have encountered this problem in their working lives or as volunteers in the community. Both women and men workers on this campus should have paid released time from their jobs to attend classes or to otherwise enhance their personal development and provide for themselves choices to a dignified function in society.

My mother did not call me "Michael". Titles, eg. Mrs., are divisive of women. Titles which are not functional to the person and to an equitable society should be abolished.

One who protects the right to bigotry is less than human and is in need of a restoration of that lost human dignity. We invite all such people to undergo the consciousness raising process by attending the public events presented by women and other oppressed groups. Finally, "We demand of ourselves, our sisters, to remain aware and learn of the sources of oppression and to fight that oppression. We demand of ourselves a commitment to liberation, not only for ourselves, but to those who are oppressed, yes, by their sex, by their race, class, work, and government. In short we are committed to a personal and political struggle!" Liberation, not to be individualized into a selfish goal, cannot exist in a competitive, hierarchal society monopolized in every sphere by one gender and one color.

ONWARD!

Iranian New Year

To the Editor:

In the March 10th issue of Collegian there was an article entitled "Baha'i New Year" stating "March 21st is the first day of the year, according to the calendar of the 110 year old Baha'i World Faith." Should there have been any calendar mentioned, it must have been that of the Iranian's which was initiated by Jamshid Jam, the king of Persia, several hundred years B.C. Nou-Rooz, NEW DAY, the beginning of spring is an Iranian national celebration for the beginning of the New Year and has no religion connotation whatsoever.

Abbas Farazdel

No Assurance

To the Editor:

Some correction must be made to the sexist and racist intimidations, omissions and selective editing done in the Collegian, 3/9, and Poor Richard's, 3/10. Why was it omitted that the women assembled had demanded that a building be named after Sorjourner Truth who had lived in Northampton? The quotes that preceded the Women's Calendar were edited out. Was that a male decision? Are words from women too dangerous? How can the paper print quotes from Nixon and not from Mother Jones and Angela Davis?

Because there is no assurance that the staff will print what women submit the following is included in my letter:

ANGELA SENDS GREETINGS TO SISTERS IN STRUGGLE—San Jose, March 8--In a statement issued today, International Women's Day, Angela Davis sent "sisterly greetings across the continent and across the world to all women, especially those in struggle to free humanity from the yoke of imperialism, the scourge of racism, and the burden of war."

"I salute the courageous women of Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos, the staunch women fighting for liberation in Africa, and those of Cuba who unhesitatingly defend their socialist revolution, the first in the Western hemisphere. My warmest fraternal greetings also to such outstanding leaders of national liberation movements as Madame Binh of Vietnam, and Dolores Ibarurri of Spain. Especially I greet my Black sisters in the United States who have historically played such a fundamental role in the freedom of my people. Many Black Women have made critical contributions to our struggle for national liberation. These contributions, however, have been obscured by racism in history books which are written by the oppressor."

Ms. Davis' statement mentioned Harriet Tubman, Sojourner Truth, Rosa Parks, and Claudia Jones, a Communist leader, who was deported to England during the McCarthy era. She also paid high tribute to Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Mother Jones and Mother Bloor.

Angela Davis called attention to a number of women in jails today, among them Norma Gist in Idabelle, Okla., and Connie Tucker in Florida.

In the spirit of sisterhood.

As if it weren't bad enough that they make pizza on a six thousand dollar piece of stone, someone has removed some of the tables which were previously located in the Hatch to the eleventh floor of the Campus Center. Next time you go to the Hatch after your 10:10 and you can't find a place to sit, demand to sit at their granite pizza table. That'll show them.

Wouldn't it be nice if the Legislature did lower the drinking age to eighteen? The bouncer in the Blue Wall would get to throw out all the high school kids after school let out.

I Am The President

To the Editor:

Through the Collegian, I would like to report to the community my decision to seek election as Student Senate President on April 5. The president is the principal student representative before the administration, faculty, and Board of Trustees. The position requires experience, hard work, and some degree of intelligence and good sense.

So many issues must be faced. Academic reform has bogged down. The dormitories are still wretched human ghettos. We pay too much in rents and fees and are denied control of the programs we pay for. The Student Affairs Division maintains its father-knows-best attitude. These are not problems that will be solved merely by wishing them away, for we must contest entrenched interests and deep-seated prejudices.

In two years of activity in the Student Senate, first as chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee and now as Vice President, I believe I have acquired the breadth of experience and demonstrated the depth of commitment necessary for the task that lies ahead.

On The Outside

To the Editor:

At Ken Kesey's happening (February 24) representatives were elected to organize a people's party. In Friday's Collegian a letter appeared inviting anyone interested to an official Birthday Party for the new "Rabbit" party. When we phoned one of the numbers that appeared in the letter we were told that due to organizational difficulties concerning the establishment of their platform, the Birthday Party, scheduled for next week, would not be held for three more weeks.

Also it seems a central committee, elected and self-elected, has coagulated. Not only is it now closed to all new members, but we believe it is working to get itself so together that nothing the public wants will dislodge its platform.

We are on the outside looking in on the Donkeys, the Elephants, and the Rabbits. Yes we need organization to bring a third party together for the people, not to lead us down yet another trail. My God we are led enough.

Don't

To the Editor:

The following is a suggestion to those who were planning to see the film, The Great American Wilderness. Don't!-- and do not encourage your children to see it. What is advertised as a natural wildlife adventure is in reality a documentary of the senseless slaughter of some of the continent's most rare and beautiful animals. It is beyond me how this film was ever rated "family entertainment" as this was the most obscene fifteen minutes I have ever witnessed on film.

More Obstructionism

To the Editor:

This letter is written in reply to Howard Brogan's column in the March fourteenth "Collegian". Mr. Brogan has gone to great pains to try to portray his side of the Orchard Hill issue lily white, while presenting the Master of Orchard Hill Dr. Leon Barron, as an irresponsible and incompetent administrator. This angers me, because Dr. Barron has done an excellent job, and Orchard Hill has made great strides as a community and as a Residential College under him. This is due greatly to Dr. Barron's sensitivity and awareness of student, staff and faculty needs. Orchard Hill has constantly been trying to break down the barriers which have traditionally hampered full student and faculty involvement with one another. It is this barrier between students and faculty that causes much of the alienation which many students feel in this large and many times overwhelming University. Student voices are heard on Orchard Hill in most matters because the faculty and staff of the hill feels that it is healthy for students to have a say in those matters which affect them. If the position of the faculty is under such great attack as Mr. Brogan fears, why have no other faculty people connected with Orchard Hill come forward and protested? I would say that it is because these people are all dedicated to the idea of a Residential College, where students, staff and faculty interact in ways which are more meaningful than the traditional ways. They are willing to experiment with various methods in order to facilitate this idea of better student-faculty communication. Thus, Mr. Brogan's attack on Dr. Barron is uncalled for. Rather, it would be better for him to attack every student, faculty member and staff member connected with Orchard Hill, because if Dr. Barron has been irresponsible, so have we all. If attempting to break down an alienating and impersonal system through an increase in student and faculty interaction is irresponsible, then we all plead guilty. If allowing student voices to be heard in matters which concern them is irresponsible, then again we plead guilty. But I do not feel that we have done anything wrong. The quality of education on Orchard Hill is more meaningful to students here because we can interact on a more personal level with faculty and staff. The sense of alienation from the University which pervades the campus seems to be at a minimum on Orchard Hill. We respect the faculty people and staff connected with the Hill because they have recognized our needs as individuals, and not as mere numbers among so many other numbers. It has been through the vigorous efforts of Dr. Barron that this communication between faculty and students exists, and we respect him for this.

So I would ask Mr. Brogan to make up his mind; either he goes along with the views of the people who live and learn in Orchard Hill, or he makes way for someone who does, we are tired of his obstructionism.

Too Noisy To Study Noise

KNOXVILLE — What do you do when it is too noisy to study noise?

Staffers in University of Tennessee's noise laboratory faced that situation when construction began on an addition to the football stadium, in which the laboratory facilities are located.

"It's kind of strange when a noise-study laboratory can't function because of the noise outside," said Dr. David Lipscomb, laboratory director.

We Are Not Alone

By TONY GRANITE

HEADLINES OF THE WEEK come from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee Post. In the same issue, a front page story about the campus book store's problems was headed, "Shoplifting here 'terrible'." And in the letters to the editor column appeared this headline: "Bookstore Should Serve Students Better."

Ya can't win.

They quote one student who took his freshman year at another Indiana campus as saying: "There is so much caring here. If you skip a class, you're missed. If you're worried, someone notices. If you make a mistake, it's right out in the open and you get help."

Sounds like Nirvana.

CYCLING COSTS at Louisiana State, where they're assessing every bike owner a $1 registration fee, in compliance with a new city ordinance. But the campus cyclists get distinctive license plates, according to a story in The Daily Reveille.

DUKE CELEBRATES BLACK WEEK when "black students and people in the community get a chance to view things that are happening to black people that they would not necessarily be exposed to at Duke University," according to the Duke Chronicle.

MEANEST THIEF STORY The Northern Iowan of the campus of the same name. An "Open Letter to a Thief" read, "To a 10-year-old mentally retarded, autistic boy named Mike Morrison, there is nothing besides his family (a student mother and two younger brothers) that means quite as much to him as his dog named Cricket to which he occasionally makes noises, and an orange, oft-broken, child's tractor that usually sets on the corner of 31st and Ohio where Mike can sit on it and watch people go by in their cars.

"The tractor, given to Mike two years ago by a neighbor, has been broken twice and welded back together by volunteers who wouldn't accept payment for their services. The tractor was stolen once this summer, but soon recovered.

Prostitute Causes Public Uproar

CRANSTON, R.I. (AP) — Amid a continuing public uproar over the use of a prostitute to address a high school class, three members of the local school committee announced Tuesday they would hold a hearing to find out what the community thinks about the unusual guest lecturer.

The unidentified 23-year-old woman spoke last Friday to about 40 seniors studying "victimless crimes" at Cranston West High School. The students are enrolled in an innovative social studies program, called "Economics and Politics in the Community."

Committeeman Aram G. Garabedian said he was outraged and called for the suspension of the two teachers of the class and the chairman of the social studies department. He criticized as "a total whitewash" the full committee's decision Monday night to send letters of reprimand to the teachers and their supervisor.

Garabedian said Tuesday that he and two other committee members would ask for the special session next week.

"We'll let the people speak--students, parents, clergy, the professions, and if it has to be, I'll come back the next day for another meeting," Garabedian said.

Hormone Researcher Speaks Tomorrow

Dr. Choh Hao Li, head of the Hormone Research Laboratory at the University of California Medical School in San Francisco, will be a UMass Distinguished Visitors Program speaker Thursday, March 16.

He will lecture on "Pituitary Hormoes: Growth and Reproduction" at 8:15 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium. An informal coffee hour will follow in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

There will also be a Biochemistry Seminar at 4:30 that afternoon, entitled "The HGH (Human Growth Hormone) Molecule" in Peters Auditorium in Goessmann Laboratory. All interested persons are invited without charge.

A 1933 graduate of the University of Nanking in China, Dr. Li received his Ph. D. in chemistry from the University of California at Berkeley.

Starting with the hormone CSH in 1940, Dr. Li has isolated and identified seven major pituitary hormones. In 1971 he synthesized the 188 amino acid HGH, the largest synthesized molecule to date. Dr. Li holds honorary degrees from universities in this country and abroad and has received awards and honors from the American Medical Association and other groups.

Dr. Choh Hao Li will speak tomorrow in Mahar Auditorium at 8:15. He has very intensely studied "Pituitary Hormones" and has synthesized the 188 amino acid HGH, the largest one to date. Come to the lecture. You might learn something about your body you've never even known.

Raise Filed For, By Reps

BOSTON (AP) — The legislature's joint Committee on Public Service today filed with the House clerk a bill to give Massachusetts lawmakers a $1,288 pay raise in two steps over a two-year period.

The bill would increase the current $11,400 legislative salary to $12,027 effective Jan. 3, 1973, and raise it to $12,608 Jan. 2, 1974.

This amounts to a 5.5 per cent increase each year.

The Juilliard String Quartet will play this Friday night in Bowker Hall at 8 P.M. They are considered to be one of Americas finest string groups. Why not come, and lend them your ears.

Juilliard String Quartet Arrive At Bowker Friday

The Juilliard String Quartet will appear at the UMass for the sixth consecutive season, at 8 p.m. Friday, March 17 in Bowker Auditorium.

The engagement is the fourth of five concerts in the 1971/72 UMass Fine Arts Council Chamber Music Series.

The Quartet will perform Luigi Cherubini's Quartet No. 1 in E flat major, an 18th Century work infrequently heard in concert today; String Trio, Opus 20 (1927) by Anton Webern, and Johannes Brahms' Quartet in A minor, Opus 51, No. 2. This program, typical of those being presented by the University's Fine Arts Council, combines major works of the contemporary period, a staple from the traditional repertoire, and a relatively unknown work.

The Juilliard String Quartet includes in its membership Robert Mann, first violin; Earl Carlyss, second violin; Samuel Rhodes, viola, and Claus Adam, cello. The Quartet schedules concerts throughout the United States, Europe, and Great Britain, and is also resident quartet of The Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., where the members perform a major series for the nation's capital and an even larger international radio audience. In addition, members of The Juilliard Quartet are members of the faculty of The Juilliard School in New York where they give private instruction and coach chamber music ensembles.

Reserved tickets are available by contacting the UMass Fine Arts Council Office, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before the concert.

A telephone reaching both ticket offices is (413) 545-0202. Ticket prices for this concert are $1 for UMass undergraduates; $2 for other full-time students; $3 for UMass faculty-staff, and $3.50 for the general public.

Students Have A "Social" Assignment

Students 18 and over who get monthly social security payments have an important "assignment" due before the end of the school year, according to John Daly, social security district manager in Holyoke.

Full-time students in school who are 18 and over and are unmarried can get monthly checks from social security until they're 22-if a parent gets social security benefits, or if a parent has died after working long enough under social security.

"About 580,000 students in college, high schools, and trade schools get $53 million a month from social security," Daly said.

A reporting card is mailed to each student beneficiary about 3 months before the end of the school year. The students's "assignment" is to fill in the card and mail it back to social security as soon as possible, he said.

"This attendance report is used to determine if the student can continue to get monthly checks," the manager said. "Any delay in returning the reporting card could mean a delay in payments for the student."

Any student in Hampshire County who needs help with the report, or information about his benefits, can call the Holyoke social security office at 330 Appleton St. The telephone number is 586-2710, toll-free.

Town Voter Information

March 25 is the deadline for voter registration in order to be eligible to vote in the presidential primary on April 25.

Sunderland: Town Clerk is at Town Hall every weekday from 12:30-3:00 P.M. Registration books will also be open on March 25 from noon to 10:00 P.M.

Leverett: Town Clerk, Mrs. Perry, will be at the Town Hall on Monday, March 20, from 7-9 P.M. Or call her at 367-2349. Mrs. Duncan, 549-0517, is also a registrar.

Shutesbury: Town Clerk, Mrs. Nebiker will be at the Town Hall from 8-9 P.M. on Tuesday, March 21. Or call her at 549-0485.

Pelham: Registrar of Voters, Mrs. Weaver, will be at the selectmen's office in the Old Rhodes School on Pelham Hill from 6-8 P.M. on Tuesday, March 21. Or call her at 253-3547.

In all towns, registration will be open on the final day, March 25, from noon to 10:00 P.M.

Eligibility: Citizen, over 18 by April 25, town resident six months.

French Lit Lecture Tonight

Professor Christian Garaud will speak tonight at 8:00 in Herter 231 on the cultural backgrounds of eighteenth century French literature. The eighteenth century is known as the "Enlightenment" to English readers, and as "L'Age des lumieres" to the French. Professor Garaud, a specialist in seventeenth and eighteenth century French literature, will examine the concept of man in the eighteenth century as a background to the literature of the period.

These lectures are aimed at a student audience, not an audience of specialists. They emphasize literary references drawn from the French 171-172 course, but students from other courses are welcome to attend.

Professor Garaud will speak in French.

Foster's Democrat Back

DOVER, N.H. (AP)-Foster's Daily Democrat published its editions on schedule Tuesday despite a fire which damaged its business office and left the entire four-story building drenched with water.

Buddy Jenkins, managing editor, said the afternoon paper was printed according to routine. "It didn't hurt us as far as production was concerned," he said. "It just affected the building, not the operation."

He said many rolls of newsprint were lost because the fire triggered the sprinkling system. "The loss was pretty heavy," he said, but added that a dollar estimate of damage wasn't determined immediately.

Up to eight inches of water collected in the basement where the newsprint was stored. The fire began at about 5:30 a.m. in electrical wiring, in the basement, he said.

The fire burned through a partition and reached the ground floor business office.

Mark Shedd Will Be At The School Of Ed.

Tomorrow, Dr. Mark Shedd, the former Superintendent of Schools in Philadelphia will speak on the general topic of "Politics and Education in Big City School Systems". The public is invited to hear this well-known educator. The presentation will be at 8:00 P.M. in the Auditorium of the Marks' Meadow School.

Dr. Shedd's one-day stay at the University is one of the highlights of an on-going distinguished visitor program sponsored by the Center for Leadership and Administration of the School of Education. Interested members of CLA and the School of Education are urged to join Dr. Shedd in a seminar meeting at 2:00 on Thursday in Room 903 of the Campus Center.

New Teachers Face Supply, Demand Law

By PHILIP SCHINMER

The supply of teachers from the elementary to the college level is rapidly equalling or surpassing the number of available positions. According to Joseph Froomkin, a former USOE associate commissioner, an excess of 400,000 teachers will exist in 1975. By 1980, the figure will approach 800,000.

The reason is, quite simply, a leveling-off of the population confronting a skyrocketing supply of qualified applicants.

Secondary school enrollments will continue to rise in the future, but less rapidly than in recent years while elementary school enrollments are expected to actually decline due to the recent drop in the birth rate.

At the same time, college graduations are continuing to reflect the upsurge in births after World War II. The situation becomes: more (and better qualified) graduates looking to teach fewer students in an equal number of schools. If young people aren't informed of this outlook and if current trends continue, by 1980 the supply of teachers will approximately double the demand.

The situation at the college and university level is basically the same, although less acute. The shortages in teacher manpower in the '60s is presently being remedied. Competition in the future will be intensified due to a 125% projected increase in the number of doctoral degree recipients (to 19800).

On the brighter side, an inevitable outcome of this situation will be a higher quality of education in the U.S. Communities may introduce or expand kindergartends, nursery schools and curriculum for handicapped or underprivileged children. Class size will probably be reduced to accommodate more teachers. Quality education will expand into ghetto areas and specialized education (the use of television media for instance) will receive more attention.

Preprimary education will be studied more closely by administrators if the number of employed mothers with young children continues to increase.

Nevertheless, the employment outlook for teachers in general and on all levels is still anything but favorable. If, however, you are determined to enter this field, the Career Planning and Placement Office in Whitmore may be of significant help in counselling you on the best course of studies. Come in anytime and speak to one of the counsellors or pick up a copy of "Career News" at the desk.

Taxes Asked To Be Lowered?

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts life insurance companies today asked the state legislature to temporarily reduce by one-half the 1 per cent gross investment income tax passed last year.

A. Peter Quinn, Jr., of Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., appeared before the joint legislative Committee on Taxation to speak in favor of a bill to reduce the tax.

In addition to his own company, Quinn told the committee he represented Berkshire Life, John Hancock, Monarch Life, New England Life, Paul Revere and State Mutual.

Quinn said the 1 per cent tax now in effect is "double the effective investment income tax of Connecticut, which is at a level much higher than that of the other...states."

The insurance companies asked for the reduction while a study is made of a "suitable formula for net income taxation."

"We wish to pay our share of taxes," Quinn said. "It must be realized, however, that our future growth depends upon an ability to compete with life insurance companies based in other states, and on our ability to compete in certain fields, such as pension fund management, with banks and other financial institutions."

"Unduly high taxes can undermine our ability to engage in such competition," he added.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Yvonne, the Ram, from Paramount, Calif., contributes this missile for inclusion in this column. Aries can yell and scream; Taurus can let off steam; Gemini can tantalize; Cancer can roll those eyes; Leo can scratch and claw; Virgo can fill you with awe; Libra can panic and charm; Scorpio can cause alarm; Sagittarius can laugh and play; Capricorn can slave away; Aquarius can steal the scene, but Pisces will never be mean.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Some may attempt to disrupt your plans, through legal means or otherwise. Key is to know that you have momentum. You need not be stopped unless you do it yourself. Strive for steady pace, with goal in mind.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Practical resolution of issues results in money gain. Be flexible. Have alternatives at hand. Bring yourself up-to-date by reading, communicating. Sense of humor helps convince one who is straddling fence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Friend may reveal dilemma. Results in broken promise. Be practical. Study Taurus message. Don't attempt to change others. Attitude of acceptance now is most constructive. Avoid forcing issues, decisions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Parental disputes could be featured. Change of scenery now might be healthy. Gemini and Virgo individuals figure prominently. You may have to set sights on different goal. Avoid obstinacy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Home environment is adjusted. You will be more at peace. Some startling ideas are proposed by neighbors, relatives. Key is to be interested without committing yourself. Puzzle will be solved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be wary in dealing with one who wants something for nothing. Avoid wishful thinking. Realistic attitude is now necessary. Financial picture is subject to abrupt change. Get legal, other clearances.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may have to tear down in order to rebuild. Marriage, partnership areas are affected. You will have more responsibility. Realize it and don't play games. Mean what you say--or pay the consequences.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Maintain even pace. Finish what you start. You are due to receive attention, recognition, publicity. Don't wait for others to reveal plans, secrets. Do it yourself. Apparent disadvantage boomerangs in your favor.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Creativity is featured. You make your mark. Style impresses. Be independent, sure and confident. Leo is in picture. Emtions tend to dominate. Give of yourself--but also get something in return.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Conflict may exist between duty and desire. Family member does deserve special consideration. Adhere to principles of Golden Rule. One who appears to be an opponent could eventually become ally.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Hold off on journeys. Take care with what you put in writing. One who makes many promises may be setting you up. Forces tend to be scattered. Get expert opinion. Read between the lines.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You help yourself now by aiding Aquarius. Know it and proceed accordingly. Emphasis is on money and how to hold on to it. Key is to be thorough. You can handle details, detect flaws. Do so and you win.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have an appreciation for music, the arts and have innate sense of drama. When you speak, people listen. You are beginning anew; this year you will feel like more of an individual. July could be your most significant month.

NFL Cheats Alumni

MIAMI (AP)-Pro football's oldtimers are a bit grayer, fatter and balder-and a heckuva lot angrier-than when they spent Sunday afternoons as national heroes.

"We're being cheated out of our pensions," says John Panelli, a Detroit Lions running back who quit in 1953. "Today's players are spoiled by money. They want a legacy instead of a pension."

National Football Leaguers who retired prior to 1959 received absolutely nothing. Complicated bylaws of the players union funnels every pension dollar to the moderns.

"We thought we were covered," said 280-pound Leon Hart, the most recent lineman to win the Heisman Trophy. "I was a charter member of the players association and I'll get not a nickel."

The 6-foot-5 former Notre Dame defensive end played eight seasons for the Lions, retiring in 1957.

"Marion Motley, Cleveland's great fullback of the early fifties, and I thought at one time we would sue for our pensions. But, now we've got 600 other guys willing to join forces with us."

The oldsters, feeling unwanted by the NFL Player Association, organized their own group known as the NFL Alumni Association. Panelli is president, Hart is vice president.

"This year of 1972 will tell the tale on our pension hopes," said Hart, new fleet manager for America Brakeblok Co. in Brimingham, Mich. "We have some moves, which we won't reveal at this time, and hope they can budge the current players association."

What the "alumni" want is a guaranteed $200 a month for each of its 600 claimants at age 65, less than 20 per cent of what the average modern NFL player will get at the age 55.

"What we're talking about is $507,000 for the NFL Players Association," said Panelli, also a Notre Dame graduate who is now in the heavy equipment business in Southfield, Mich. "that would give us $200 per man at age 65."

Hart sat forward in his chair and added..."the NFL players now have $10 million in their fund with another $19 million coming over the next three years."

Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players Association, said from his Washington office, "I am very sympathetic and think the alumni do deserve a pension plan, but we cannot dilute what rightfully belongs to our vested players."

Garvey said the Alumni had an idea of getting $10,000 from each of 26 NFL teams plus a matching total of $260,000 for the NFLPA. "That's peanuts for the individual teams but phenomenal for our group," said Garvey. "We just don't have it."

Garvey said he would "offer to negotiate with the owners on behalf of the Alumni," but admitted he would have no real legal muscle.

Garvey said his association had pledged an unannounced $10,000 for the Alumni projects. The NFL owners, Panelli said, have donated $210,000 the past few years.

Panelli said major league baseball made its pension retroactive to 1942 and the National Hockey League benefits stretch back to 1946.

"The more money they collect, the farther it will go back," he said. "I think modern pro football players are forgetting the historical facts of who created this great league they enjoy."

They pointed out that four Hall of Fame members in their association are out of luck as far as pension is concerned, too. That goes for Slingin' Sammy Baugh, Sid Luckman, Alex Wojciechowicz and all the other magic names of yesteryear.

Lou "The Toe" Groza, a 21-year man with the Cleveland Browns, was there with his family. "I feel like one of the lucky ones, hearing the rest of these guys," he said.

Groza played nine of his 21 seasons after the pension plan went into effect in 1959. He, therefore, is expecting about $700 a month beginning in 1979 when he hits age 55. "George Blanda, although still playing, will find himself similarly cut down.

"Today's players say the owners are greedy, but we've found them more sympathetic than the young people from an era when they talk love and helping their fellow man," said Panelli.

The Alumni have confronted the moderns but, Panelli said, "Their most lavish offer was to hold a banquet for us. Isn't that nice of them?"

Panelli claimed that while he was allowed to present his proposals at the 1971 convention of the NFL Players Association in San Diego, but was turned down for January's meeting in Miami.

"They don't want us around," said Hart.

K.C. To Have Two "Royals"

KANSAS CITY (AP)-The Cincinnati Royals, plagued by poor home attendance, climaxed a three-month search for a new territory Tuesday by shifting their National Basketball Association franchise to Kansas City.

Only the official approval of other NBA member clubs stands in the way of the transfer to this city which already has successful sports organizations in the Chiefs of the National Football League and the Royals of the American Baseball League. A National Hockey League franchise is also being sought.

Joe Axelson, Royals' executive vice president and general manager who appeared here at a news conference, said it was clear by last December the team "was not going to make it in Cincinnati" and that he was able to convince Max Jacobs, chairman of the board, of the need for action.

"We had only two choices-either sell the team or move it," Axelson said.

Axelson, who said San Diego had been among the other leading contenders for the franchise, labelled Kansas City "a great basketball city."

"Cincinnati is not."

Because of faltering attendance in Cincinnati, Axelson indicated team offifials anticipated no difficulty in gaining NBA approval for the transfer. The plan will require approval by 13 of the 17 members on the board of governors.

He cited the success of the NFL's Chiefs in selling season tickets as the area's primary selling point.

A statement said the Royals hope to play "at least 21 games in Kansas City's Municipal Auditorium during the 1972-73 season, and approximately 10 each in Omaha and St. Louis, depending on building scheduling availabilities."

The Royals, who transferred to Cincinnati in 1957 from Rochester, N.Y., had five winning seasons but never notched a division championship. Cousy, sixth coach since the transfer from Rochester, aroused the anger of Royals' fans by trading Jerry Lucas to San Francisco in October 1969, and Oscar Robertson to Milwaukee in April 1970.

In recent games in which the NBA's best teams played in Cincinnati, the crowds have been less than 3,000, Axelson said. "We have tried every promotion there is under the sun...But you can't build a crowd on gimmicks."

Axelson said he hopes to keep the team's nickname despite Kansas City having a baseball team with the same title.

Richie Goes Home To Mother

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP)-Richie Allen rejected the Chicago White Sox offer of a $120,000 contract Tuesday, asked to be traded and said he was "going home to my mother."

Allen, 30, whose penchant for stirring controversy has prompted teams to trade him three times in three years, hardly arrived at the White Sox spring training camp before he was on his way again.

The Sox acquired Allen in December from the Los Angeles Dodgers for pitcher Tommy John and infielder Steve Huntz. Stu Holcomb, Sox general manager, said he spent 15 minutes with Allen early Tuesday in the "first face-to-face" meeting between the slugger and the Sox.

Holcomb told writers that Allen rejected the estimated $120,000 pact negotiated between Holcomb and an agent and also asked to be traded.

"We weren't even close," Allen said as he left Sarasota, presumably headed for Philadelphia where his mother resides and where he spent his first seven years in the major leagues.

The Phils traded Allen to St. Louis for the 1970 season and the following year Allen, who has amassed 234 career homers, was on his way to Los Angeles.

"I thought we were close," Holcomb said, "I thought Allen would be easy to sign...We have no intention of trading Allen. We went to considerable expense to get him."

Allen was 21 days late in reporting to the Sox camp, but the team's officials and manager Chuck Tanner appeared unworried over his absence.

Tanner planned to play Allen either at first base or in left field and has been juggling players through the spring workouts in Allen's absence.

Holcomb said the contract offered Allen was more than fair and "anyone in his right mind would be happy with it." He added that he would make no attempt to contact Allen.

Holcomb added that Allen told him in the brief meeting that he was not happy in St. Louis or Los Angeles because he felt he was used only as a gate attraction.

"I told him he would be treated like any other player by the Sox," Holcomb said.

The Season That Was

By EARLE BARROLL

The basketball season that was to be...never materialized as had been expected prior to last April.

It's scope of interest stretched as far south as Virginia, as far north as Maine and as far west as Philadelphia (relatively speaking.)

And in this geographic maze the basketball season that was...materialized.

There is no doubt that Julius Erving's signing with the Squires of the ABA last April cast a tremendous shadow of doubt on this basketball season. UMass was rated ninth in pre-season polls in New England.

On a national scale the Redmen were being considered for pre-season top ten in Sports Illustrated's picks...until Julius left. And then it was...U-who?

But, this set the stage for what took place over the 26 games that have just past. The big question that confronted Jack Leaman and his team was: "Let's see what you can do now without Julius Erving."

And in analyzing the season, they came awful close, like eight games decided by a basket either way, of being in New York this week for the N.I.T.

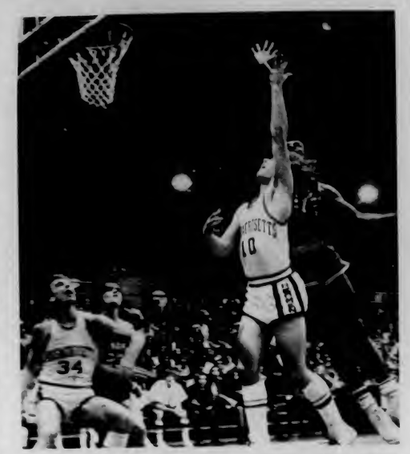
The Redmen finished with a 14-12 record, something that basketball fanatics around campus have not been accustomed to in recent years. However in only one of these losing efforts was UMass ever completely out of the ball game and this was against Villanova at the Quaker City tournament and yet at one time in the second half, the Redmen closed a 26 point deficit to eight before the Wildcats regrouped and went on to their 17-point final spread.

If a title had to be placed on this season the obvious choice would be: "Home and Away." The Redmen were 9-1 at the Cage and 5-11 on the road, the toughest road that any UMass team has ever had to travel.

The Yankee Conference was trouble in itself, but when you add Fordham and Syracuse (both N.I.T. teams), the Quaker City Tournament and the Boston establishment of Boston College and Harvard the emphasis is on consistancy on the road...and this is what the Redmen lacked during the season.

Surprisingly enough, they opened with six straight wins, which included a couple of last minute heroics to keep the string alive.

But then came Harvard and the season took an about face. Three times the Redmen had the lead in the last minute and each time Harvard got it back and finally won by two. This broke their back. As Leaman said: "This was the turning point of the season. It took the mental confidence that we had through six games away from us and it also took away our momentum."



In summing up the season Leaman said, "It was a little bit dissappointing, but not discouraging. We knew we'd have a tough time without Julius, but it was a year of being close...we just couldn't get the ringer."

Before this season got underway Leaman's main emphasis was to get his team running, the only way he felt he could compensate for the loss of Erving's power up front. But there was a dichotomy here as the season progressed...The Redmen performed this magic at the Cage, but on the road it was a different story.

Leaman's version goes like this: "When we ran we scored effectively and when the opposition got behind we were able to destroy them, but when we couldn't score and fell behind (on the road) we had to play catch-up, we couldn't run as the opposition slowed the game down and we had to play their game."

Which leads to another problem, the lack of offense which stems from an ineffective total effort up front. Since Leaman has been at UMass, his offense has been basically front court oriented.

But, as Leaman says, "Because we weren't scoring up front, we had to depend on the backcourt and this put too much pressure on Mike (Pagliara) and John (Betancourt) and my philosophy on this is if you have too depend on the backcourt you can't be a winner as it's too easy to stop the guards with the zone."

A MAN UNDER PRESSURE-John Betancourt drives for a lay-up in victory over Springfield. He and Mike Pagliara were both under pressure to produce to make up for lack of production up front this season. The guy under the basket is Peter Trow (34) looking for a possible rebound.

And the only remedy to this was "when Tom McLaughlin was playing well", Leaman emphasized. Al Skinner was the only consistant performer up front all season, but it was too much to ask of him to do it all.

This is what made this season the interest that it was. Outside of the Squires' incident, there was a long stretch when the Redmen were second in New England after that early season poll put them below eight other teams.

It was a season in which Jack Leaman and many fans found grey hairs intermingled amongst the rest. It was a season in which cardiograms became the in-thing.

Leaman tried furiously to invent the machine to amalgamate the aggression of Charlie Peters and the agility of Tom Austin to come out with the complete center.

Save for two free throws by Tom McLaughlin against Maine in the last home game, Peter Trow hit the hundredth point probably everytime the Redmen reached that mark this season. And yes, Peter did get an assist (or two) this year.

The little insides of this season could go forever, but in the end, it was the close ones that determined the outcome of this season.

Leaman's last thought: "We'll just have to win those close games we let slip away from us next season."

DOCTOR J-Julius Erving will be honored at a testimonial at Berkshire Dining Commons this coming Sunday. His number 32 jersey will be officially retired into the Basketball Hall of Fame, a replica of which will hang from the Cage rafters.

Erving To Be Honored On Campus, Sunday

Probably no other UMass athlete made such an impact on the campus than Julius Erving. This Sunday evening, the countless fans Julius made at UMass will have the opportunity to honor the former Redman basketball star at a testimonial banquet, at Berkshire Dining Commons.

The affair which has been organized by a committee of many of Julius' friends, will begin at 5 p.m. with a cocktail party, and a roast beef dinner at 7. Tickets will be $5, and can be purchased anytime at the Boyden ticket office.

The banquet will be highlighted by the official retiring of Julius' number 32, that he wore enroute to his record breaking two varsity season with UMass. A replica of the jersey will be hung from the Cage rafters. Also, there will be a plaque awarded to Erving.

The program will additionally include speakers who have known Julius, including former and present teammates and coaches. An additional honor will include the placing of Erving's uniform in the Basketball Hall of Fame, along with other college greats, such as Austin Carr and Cazzie Russell.

The program will hopefully be an interesting and enjoyable one for anyone who had the pleasure of seeing Erving perform over the past years. It is hoped that many students will turn out and honor one of their most illustrious colleagues.

Reorganized Athletic Council A Must For Student Voice

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Tomorrow the Faculty Senate will consider the reorganization of the Athletic Council. The way the council is set up now, any kind of reorganization will be an improvement.

At the present time the only qualified members of the council are Lee Sandwen, Acting Athletic Director David Bischoff, and Assistant Athletic Director Robert O'Connell. Sandwen is the only student voice on the Council, and Bischoff and O'Connell are the only administrators who really know the ins and outs of athletic affairs on campus.

The rest of the Council is made up of faculty who get the job by default and alumni whose only interest seems to be the blind school spirit of Joe College circa 1945 with little concern for reality. Both are grossly unqualified for the job.

A good example of the situation is the last meeting of the Council. After a debate dominated by a vociferous alumnus (this litany prompted one member of the Council to comment that there was no better argument against allowing alumni to sit on the Council than listening to this man talk) the Council voted 8-1 (Sandwen the only dissenter) to urge UMass President Robert Wood not to come out in favor of need as the sole basis for granting athletic scholarships until the NCAA should take such action.

This came in spite of the fact that the Student Senate had commended Wood for initially approving need at a recent meeting of Yankee Conference presidents. The students' previously expressed feelings, exactly opposite to the Council's final decision, is indicative of the situation on this body which makes so many decisions that affect us.

Daily Collegian SPORTS

Acting Chancellor Bromery has on several occasions had to veto decisions of the Council. One of these vetoes involved a decision of the Council to take $6,000 from the Athletic Trust Fund to build a stone memorial to a UMass football player who was killed in an auto accident. It's not hard to see why the Chancellor vetoed such an unnecessary expenditure.

Council member Sandwen had a few comments of his own after the last meeting of the Council. On some of the members: "They live in dream worlds. There's so many facts against some of the things they're doing."

Sandwen's consternation is certainly not unfounded. But all he can do at the present time is frustratedly pound his fist on a table as he did during the post meeting interview. As things stand now he's the only student representative on the Council and his vote is far from being a force against so many.

The Faculty Senate version of the revamping of the Council is now, after some student compromising, in the form of restructuring the Council to make it an eleven man body including five students. This form, although less than the students wanted, is vastly superior to the setup of the Council as it presently exists.

So now it's all up to the Faculty Senators. It can only be hoped that they will approve the resolution and give the students a measure of control over a body whose control should have been theirs in the first place.

Executive Branch Of Student Senate Reorganized

By MDC STAFF

The Student Senate passed constitutional and by-law amendments which will reorganize the executive branch of the UMass undergraduate government last night at their weekly meeting.

The moves call for a President of the Student Government Association who will be responsible for relations between SGA and the faculty, administration and Board of Trustees. The changes will take effect with the next officer elections which will take place on April 5, according to John Hogan, Administrative Vice-President.

Essential Changes

Essential changes include the following:

--The president will no longer have to be a student senator;
--The president will appoint special assistants to aid his work and appoint with Senate concurrence members of non-Senate SGA committees;
--With President's Council approval, the president may order a referendum on any issue, except impeachment;
--The president will have veto power over any Senate motion which may be overturned by a 2/3 vote of the Senate;
--A President's Council shall be appointed by the President, ex-officio members to include Speaker of the Senate, Chairman of the Campus Center-Student Union Governing Board, and Area Government
--A new position called "Speaker of the Seante" will be established to replace the Administrative Vice-President post now in use;
--If the President is impeached, he or she will be tried by an Impeachment Board appointed by the Speaker.

Candidates Announce

In other business, candidacies for constitutional officers were announced. These include, so far, Vice-President Larry Ladd and John Stevens, Budget Committee Chairman, for President; Administrative Vice-President John Hogan and Senator Bill Staton for Speaker of the Senate, and Chet Richardson, Financial Affairs Chairman, and Bob Chiller, Rents and Fees Committee Chairman, for Treasurer. Candidates have until election night to announce.

Richardson, Financial Affairs Chairman, introduced a special business motion early in the meeting which passed change in the budget of the Committee on Poverty. In question was the method of payment for a concert-lecture on poverty and strip mining in the Appalachian area.

Groups to Appear

Three groups have already been contracted to appear this weekend under sponsorship of the committee and the Coalition for Environmental Quality.

Staton commented during negative debate, "When was the last time you sat down and talked to your friends about strip mining?"

Also, the funds of the Young Socialist Alliance were unfrozen by the Senate, provided that all expenditures are under the auspices of the Financial Affairs Committee.

Budget Presented

The entire Budget Act was presented to each senator by Stevens, Chairman of the Budgets Committee. As it now stands, the budget calls for revenues and expenditures of $590,787; a reduction of almost $45,000. However, not yet figured in, he pointed out, is the Senate contribution to the CCEBS program. Also, a budget for the Index is not included, yet. Starting this Sunday at 7 p.m., special Senate meetings covering budgets only will be held.

The Sylvan Area will receive $1,500 from the Area Government Contingency Fund to build a snack bar, according to another motion passed by the Senate.

Also passed in category changes were transfers for Room-To-Move and the Senate 801 account.

A referendum on 72-S167 for Sororities and Fraternities will now be held in the Campus Center/Student Union instead of at the Fraternity and Sorority Houses.

Great Decisions

Guns And Butter XYZ Affair

By BARRY STAVRO

"Guns and or Butter: What Price National Security?" the topic for the Great Decisions Programs last night was really an X, Y, Z affair, as each of the three panelists held a different opinion on our national policy.

Mark Aldrich, of Smith's economic department, spoke first. He said the real question is: "Who runs the zoo?", stating that 2% of the population owns a third of the wealth in the U.S. This power elite, he said, has strong controls in the government due to its heavy campaign contributions, i.e., the I.T.T. case.

Aldrich said many of our government officials come from this elite group. He called the National Security Council "The richest collection of mass murderers in history."

Aldrich felt that "The Cold War was made in the U.S." and that there is no Communist conspiracy to take over the world. He said, "If there is an aggressive power in the world, it's the U.S.

He concluded his statement in favor of unilateral disarmament, believing that disarmament has to be an all or nothing affair. Aldrich said the current SALT talks are "Nixon's idea of a sick joke."

Harold Gordon, of the UMass History Department, felt that our role is hard to define today due to "A deliberate misleading of the American public" on the Military Budget. He questioned how you can tell whether the $75 billion budget is too high or too low without full information.

Gordon felt that research and development which consumes a third of the Military Budget is simply "Under the table tinkering with hardware." He cited a proposed $600,000 military tank which was only good for "Fighting on the country club lawns."

He called the Nixon supported B-1 strategic bomber "A totally useless gadget." Gordon pointed out that the costs for this project could run four times the projected costs for the defunct A.B.M. system.

Overall, Gordon felt that the budget is "A catch-all for all sorts of costs and bears little relation to true defense."

The third speaker, Henry I. Tragle from the UMass Graduate School, felt there is a menace to our security. He is against unilateral disarmament.

Tragle's policy is, "In matters of defense you're well advised to plan for the worst. I've always preferred to be embarrassed than dead."

Tragle based his judgment on the fact that the Russians have a secret military budget and also, "If you can't make N.Y.C. or even Amherst safe, then you're not likely to make the world safe either" by disarmament.

An open discussion followed after their individual statements with no general agreement on the priorities of our National Security.

Campaign Money The Best Lobby

(Editor's Note: The word lobbyist conjures up images of anonymous power brokers of whom the best is none too good. Who are these people? What do they do? How do they operate? Here is a report from the AP Special Assignment Team.)

WASHINGTON (AP) — Countless strings entwine Washington lobbyists with the federal government, but none more compellingly than campaign money, which the lobbyist often has and elected officials generally need.

For Dita Beard, celebrated Washington lobbyist of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., the sum of $400,000 reportedly pledged by an ITT subsidiary toward financing the 1972 Republican National Convention.

The question now being raised in Senate Judiciary Committee hearings is whether there was a connection between the alleged pledge and a subsequent Justice Department decision to abandon prosecution of three antitrust cases against ITT.

For Harold O. Lovre, the American Trucking Association lobbyist, it was $4,500 for the 1970 re-election of Rep. Gerald R. Ford, the House Republican leader. In this case, said Lovre, a former South Dakota congressman, it was personal, "we came down to Congress together. He's a friend."

If they didn't help fill campaign purses, said Rep. Chet Holifield, D-Calif., "the power of lobbyists would be practically nil."

The lobbyist is a major force in the U.S. government. As an ambassador to Washington from an interest group or business, he also is an accepted fixture along the corridors of power, and generally an honorable one. Yet nagging questions remain about the campaign dollars at his command.

Where, asks Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., does the legislator draw the line in dealing with lobbyists?

"Do you or don't you accept what purports to be a campaign contribution, or what purports to be a fee for a speech plus expenses?" Bolling asked. "What is its real meaning?"

"We are not talking about bribery. We are talking about influence that is almost subliminal. You don't know you are being influenced."

There are citizens today who associate lobbyists with bribes, high living and nefarious ways. In fact, all but a handful of the several thousand Washington lobbyists are regarded by the men who deal with them as honest, hardworking proponents of a cause or interest.

"Lobbying is a much misunderstood process, sometimes abused and often carrying bad connotations," said Rep. Charles E. Bennett, D-Fla., former chairman of a House Select Committee on Ethics.

"Lobbying is nonetheless a vital part of the daily interchange between the people and their government. "Put it simply, it is the represenation of a group's interests before governmental bodies, and it is not, of course, for anything that is other than good for the public."

Rep. Olin E. Teague, D-Tex., values lobbyists for their expertise.

These lobbyist-educators, as Teague views them, include lawyers, businessmen, public relations men, former government officials, and former senators and congressmen.

Some 1,200 are registered with Congress. They represent the interests of unions and corporations, local governments and trade associations, causes as various as world peace and population control.

All have an interest in what Congress or the executive branch can do to enhance, or harm, their interest group. The action might be tax legislation on Capitol Hill, a regulator proposal by the Food and Drug Administration, or a pending sewer grant at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

It is the lobbyist's job to know what's afoot, to make things happen, or to stop them from happening.

He may clean the paperwork pipeline to get that sewer grant, testify before a committee on Capitol Hill, state his case in private to a congressman, or stimulate letters from important senators in protest of a proposed regulatory action.

The Weather

Mostly cloudy with rain likely in the afternoon to late evening. Today's high will be in the 40's.

Wisconsin The Test For Muskie Effort

CHICAGO (AP) — Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, his front-runner status weakened by a fourth-place finish in the Florida Democratic presidential primary, now turns to the Illinois and Wisconsin primaries in the role of a challenger.

Muskie's first chance to regain his stature as his party's top presidential hopeful comes Tuesday in Illinois' primary, in which he is challenged on separate fronts by Sen. George S. McGovern of South Dakota and former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy of South Dakota.

Muskie and McGovern are competing for a share of the 160 national convention delegates who will be elected Tuesday. Ten at-large delegates will be selected later by party leaders.

In the non-binding preferential contest which heads the ballot, Muskie and McCarthy are the only candidates.

Wisconsin's April 4 primary includes all 11 Democrats who were on the Florida ballot, plus Rep. Patsy Mink, D-Hawaii.

Wisconsin voters will elect 56 of the state's 67 delegates. They will be chosen on a district-by-district basis in the state's nine congressional districts.

Richard D. Cudahy, Muskie's Wisconsin chairman, said, "He, Muskie, is the underdog, and he is going to come out fighting."

Muskie earlier was rated a favorite in Wisconsin.

Muskie won only 9 per cent of the vote Tuesday in Florida's 11-candidate contest. Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama captured 42 per cent, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, 18 per cent, and Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, 13 per cent. McGovern had 6 per cent, and McCarthy took less than 1 per cent.

The head of McGovern's Illinois campaign, William Rosendahl, said, "Wisconsin is clearly a battle between McGovern, Wallace and Humphrey."

This Tuesday is the first time Illinois voters can elect delegates committed to candidates, although at least half the spots are expected to be won by uncommitted delegates controlled by Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley's organization.

Muskie forces predicted early that their man would win 75 to 80 per cent but have revised their figures downward to 60 per cent.

McCarthy says that if he were to receive 40 per cent, it would be a victory.

McGovern and McCarthy forces are working together unofficially to halt Muskie. Daley's regular organization appears to be leaning toward Muskie, but the powerful mayor has not made any endorsements and is embattled in state and Cook County challenges to his organization.

Florida Opposed To Busing

MIAMI (AP) — Florida residents voted 3 to 1 Tuesday in opposition to busing of children to desegregate schools.

In two other nonbinding straw votes in Florida's presidential primary election, they approved by margins of 4 to 1 proposals to give every child the chance for a quality education and to permit prayer in public schools.

With 99 per cent of the vote in on the busing question, 1,097,620 said they favored an amendment to the U.S. Constitution to ban the practice, while 385,352 opposed it. The ratio was 74 per cent for an amendment and 26 per cent against.

Scanlon Opposes SUG Board By-Law Change

Gerald Scanlon, Assistant Dean of Students, and Director of the Campus Center was interviewed yesterday to get his feelings on SUG Board's recent attempts to gain "hiring and firing power" over management staff in the Campus Center.

By DON BISHOP

Assistant Dean of Students Gerald Scanlon yesterday made clear his opposition to the Student Union Governing Board attempt to gain control the power of hiring and firing of the "management staff in the Campus Center Student Union complex."

This attempt was begun at last week's meeting of the SUG Board. The Board adopted a by-law change which would give the Board power to hire and fire the management staff, always subsequent to the approval of the Chancellor.

This change in the by-laws is now on the desk of Acting Chancellor Bromery. He will decide whether to accept this change, which occurred in Article 7 of the SUG Board by-laws, or to veto the motion. The Acting Chancellor may recommend to the Board that it re-write this particular article along with others he has found objection with. The final decision on the SUG Board by-laws will come next week.

Mr. Scanlon, who directs the management staff of the Campus Center, submitted his written opposition to Article 7 to Dr. Bromery earlier in the week. This follows below:

"This action would totally dilute the responsibility and the authority of management at every level. Hiring, firing, promotions, etc., are essential ingredients to a managerial function. In essence, they are the fibre of the concept of management. In order to effectively and efficiently implement the policies of the Board, it is essential that management be equipped with the necessary tools to do so. On the other hand, it is equally essential that the Board be an integral part of the hiring process. Rather than recommend a vetoing of this Article, a rewriting of it is more desirable."

Scanlon's views on the role of the manager of the complex would appear to be considerably different from those of the SUG Board, as reflected in their changes in Article 7. An original draft acceptable to Scanlon was re-written by SUG Board into its present form.

Scanlon feels that student imput into the hiring of the professional personnel of the Campus Center has been, and should continue to be significant. He believes that all management professionals to be considered for hiring should be interviewed by committees of students.

To give student virtual power in the hiring of staff as the present Article 7 would Scanlon feels, necessarily meet with considerable opposition from the Board of Trustees and the State Building Authority, the latter of which technically owns the complex.

Scanlon also feels that opposition, (in addition to that coming from himself and other management personnel) would again be great from the Trustees and the Building Authority in response to any granting of power to fire management staff to SUG Board. For this reason and the primary reason that he feels that hiring and firing are an integral managerial function rather than a governing board function, does Scanlon oppose Article 7 as presently written.

Scanlon stated his opinion that good management people would feel impelled to leave the Campus Center if SUG Board gained control of the firing and hiring of management staff. The quality of the professional staff would in his estimation drop considerably and consequently so would the entire operation of the complex.

Scanlon feels that under the present Article 7 the SUG Board could extend hiring and firing power into the Food Services and the Physical Plant. This would be unacceptable to him.

It seems highly improbable to Scanlon that Acting Chancellor Bromery would accept Article 7 as written in that he feels Bromery realizes the legitimacy and validity of his arguments against giving SUG Board the power to hire and fire management.

Dr. Bromery will act on this matter shortly, probably sometime early next week. He will have to weigh carefully the arguments of both sides and probably affect some form of compromise to avoid alienating either side; thus creating a non-workable relationship between SUG Board management and administration.

ITT Admits Shredding Of Dita Beard Files

WASHINGTON (AP)-The president of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. Wednesday confirmed reports that security agents from his New York office shredded the files of ITT lobbyist Dita Beard two weeks ago.

Harold Geneen said that after publication of a controversial memo signed by Mrs. Beard, someone in his firm had ordered the files placed in a shredder and destroyed.

The memo published by columnist Jack Anderson drew a connection between a financial commitment to the Republican National Convention in San Diego and an out-of-court settlement of three antitrust suits then pending against ITT.

As Geneen prepared to testify before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Sen. James Eastland, D-Miss., announced that six committee members will question Mrs. Beard on Monday in Denver, where she is hospitalized with a heart ailment.

Geneen told the committee that the shredding "was a reaction to a belief that somehow our files were open to the public."

Anderson has testified sources other than Mrs. Beard passed the memo to him.

The first report of the shredding came from Anderson aide Brit Hume who interviewed Mrs. Beard and quoted her as saying also that ITT officials had told her to get out of town.

Geneen said a report on the shredding incident is under preparation and he promised to provide the committee with a copy.

Geneen said the sole purpose of ITT's financial commitment to the San Diego Convention and Tourist Bureau, and not the Republican National Committee as has been reported, was to boost the business and image of the conglomerate's Sheraton Hotel chain.

The company planned to build a new hotel in San Diego and Geneen said the Republican convention seemed to be an ideal means for opening it.

He emphasized that the ITT commitment for the convention totaled $200,000-$100,000 in cash and a pledge for an additional $100,000 if that were matched by $200,000 from other San Diego businesses.

The decision for six committee members to go to Mrs. Beard's bedside resulted from a conference call between her two heart surgeons and Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Marlow Cook, R-Ky., on Wednesday.

Kennedy quoted the doctors as saying it would be at least several weeks before Mrs. Beard, 53, could be brought to Washington and interviewed by the full committee in a neighboring hospital.

Committee chairman Eastland named Democrats Kennedy, Philip Hart of Michigan, John V. Tunney of California, and Republicans Cook, Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland and Ed Gurney of Florida to talk to Mrs. Beard for about an hour Monday.

Wednesday marked the ninth day of hearings into the nomination of Richard G. Kleindienst to be attorney general.

The committee unanimously approved Kleindienst's nomination before Anderson's accusations were published. The Senate has not acted on the committee report but Eastland says he considers the nomination approved in committee and he does not plan another vote

Classes Cancelled By Declaration

Yesterday's half day cancellation of classes resulted from a declaration by the university administration calling yesterday an "essential service day."

Work and classes were cancelled for the morning solely because of the storm. Due to the amount of snow that fell during the night, clearing crews were not able to make available nearly enough parking spaces for the students and staff. A large number of commuting students and workers would not have been able to get to the campus, as many streets had not been plowed until late in the morning.

Only those people necessary for the operating of regular university services were required to report to work as usual. Those persons not considered essential did not need to arrive until noon. An "essential" person to the university is, for example, an infirmary nurse or doctor, a dining commons worker, and the chancellor. One person was expected to be available in each administration office to take care of phone calls.

Regular full time personnel receiving a weekly salary can expect to be paid as usual. Part time help, including students, who are paid according to the hours they work, will not be paid for those morning hours they missed.

Essential service days are not merely limited to days cancelled because of snow, but are also certain predetermined days throughout the year. December 24, and the day after Thanksgiving are examples of other essential service days.

No specific date will be set on the academic calendar for the make-up of Wednesday's classes, but as it came from Provost Gluckstern's office, that does not mean students will not be held responsible for work due in yesterday's classes. Make-up procedures will be made according to each individual instructor.

Wednesday was the first day classes were cancelled because of snow for at least three years.

Wallace Called Formidable Foe

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Florida Democrats have sent their party a message in the Deep South accents of George C. Wallace, and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey conceded Wednesday the Alabama governor would be a formidable foe in primary elections to come.

"No doubt about it," said Humphrey, who claimed that a second-place finish in Tuesday's Florida primary had installed him as the top White House contender among progressive Democrats.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine was an also-ran in Florida, running fourth with a showing so weak that it tattered his mantle as the national Democratic front-runner and left him in desperate need of a comeback next Tuesday in the Illinois presidential primary.

The next big confrontation of the Democrats will come in Wisconsin April 4, when the whole field battles again. That looms now as the crucial early test, particularly for the battered Muskie.

In Florida, Wallace gained 42 per cent of the vote in an 11-way contest, and said that showed the people "want me to be the nominee of the Democratic party." Humphrey gained a far-back 18 per cent of the vote.

Wallace has bitterly opposed busing of school children for purposes of racial balance, and he clearly got a boost in Florida with that issue on the ballot.

In an overwhelming straw vote, Floridians marked yes on 74 per cent of the ballots cast on a proposed constitutional amendment to ban busing.

The count in nearly complete returns was 1,111,366 for an amendment to end busing, 307,193 against.

Sen. Henry K. Jackson of Washington who, like Wallace, campaigned in opposition to busing, ran third in the presidential primary, with 13 per cent of the vote.

He said he had gained a big boost by running ahead of Muskie.

Wallace swept the statewide primary vote, running strong almost everywhere, carrying every county, and capturing 75 of the 81 national convention nominating votes at stake. Humphrey got the other 6 by winning a congressional district that includes the Miami Beach area.

The Alabama governor plans at least 10 more primary contests and in a splintered field, he is sure to add substantially to his delegate strength.

In defeat, Muskie bitterly attacked Wallace, but avoided any assessment of the impact of his own showing, except to say that he had lost but would win some battles to come.

He called Wallace "a demagogue of the worst sort."

President Nixon, who swamped two rivals to gain a towering 87 per cent of the Republican vote was said by the White House to be "pleased at the strong support he again received."

Nixon won 40 delegate votes for renomination.

Here are the final vote totals in the Florida primary:

Wallace, 515,916 votes or 42 per cent.
Humphrey, 231,219 or 18 per cent.
Jackson, 167,667 or 13 per cent.
Muskie, 109,653 or 9 per cent.
Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York, 81,322 or 7 per cent.
Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, 74,880 or 6 per cent.
Rep. Shirley Chisholm of New York 44,786 or 4 per cent.

Four other entries drew scattered votes, but none got as much as one per cent.

In the Republican primary, the outcome was:

Nixon, 357,356 votes, 87 per cent.
Rep. John M. Ashbrook, of Ohio, 35,983 votes, 9 per cent.
Rep. Paul N. McCloskey of California, 16,985 votes, 4 per cent.

Commission Tightens Grip On Firms

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Price Commission, worried by computer studies showing it might not hit its 2.5 per cent inflation goa, tightened its grip Wednesday on big manufacturing firms.

The move appears to be a first step toward a general overhaul of commission policies designed to make them tighter, simpler and more acceptable to the public.

One staff member described it as a signal to businessmen to show more price restraint. Wholesale and consumer prices have been increasing sharply during the first months of the commission's regulations.

Specifically, the commission screwed down the lid on its Term Limit Pricing rule, called TLP. This optional rule gives big manufacturers blanket permission to raise prices in return for an agreement to hold their over-all average to a certain level for 12 months.

The old limit was a 2 per cent average. By unanimous vote, the commission reduced it to 1.8 per cent and imposed a new 8 per cent lid on any single price increase by a TLP firm.

The new policy won't affect the 120 firms that already have TLP agreements, or another 15 that are negotiating for them. It will affect any firms seeking such arrangements in the future.

The decision was made after staff economists, using computer models of the economy, figured that present price rules might not get inflation down to the commission's goal of 2.5 per cent.

Commission deputy executive director Peter F. Carpenter said the commission would review more of its policies in weeks to come.

He indicated the commission might simplify such policies as rent control to improve chances for public understanding and compliance. But he said if such simplification results in looser price controls in those areas, other areas will have to be tightened up to compensate.

Carpenter said the commission's new utility regulations, which are scheduled to be announced Thursday morning, would give further clues to the direction in which the commission is going.

Because the Term Limit Pricing policy is optional, Carpenter said the commission could not predict whether lowering the limit would discourage firms from using it or jolt them into seeking TLP agreements out of fear that the limit might go even lower.

Fuel Leak Forgotten

BELCHERTOWN, Mass. (AP)-A state water pollution official said Tuesday the state Department of Mental Health has been no help at all in cleaning up a fuel oil leak from storage tanks at Belchertown State School for the Retarded, first discovered in November.

"So far we have received an almost classical bureaucratic response that adds up to nothing," said William A. Doubleday, regional engineer in Amherst for the state Water Pollution Control Division.

He said his division has spent $50,000 of its own funds to curb the pollution of brooks and ponds while the Mental Health Department, responsible for Belchertown State School, has "stalled."

Defense Rests Case In Jackson State Trial

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — The defense rested its case Wednesday in a trial which has brought forth two conflicting versions of what prompted police to rake a Jackson State College dormitory in 170 with gunfire, killing two black youths.

The case may go to a federal court jury Monday. The trial has been recessed until then, when final arguments will be made.

The debate over whether police were justified in loosing a 200-or-so-bullet fusillade reached formal airing in court in the form of a $13.8-million damage suit filed by relatives of the victims.

State and federal grand jury investigations of the incident, which occurred shortly after midnight May 15, 1970 while police were trying to quell a campus disturbance, produced no criminal charges.

Police and state officials said the shooting was self-defense, in reaction to sniper fire. Critics, including the President's Commission on Campus Unrest, said the barrage was unjustified-even if there had been a sniper, a disputed point.

The civil suit trial lost its most prestigious defendant Wednesday when former Gov. John Bell Williams, who stepped down last January was dismissed.

Hussein Proposes Westbank State

AMMAN, Jordan (AP)-King Hussein proposed Wednesday the establishment under his rule of a semiautonomous state of Palestine on the west bank of the Jordan River, once Israeli occupation forces withdraw.

Premier Golda Meir of Israel rejected the plan, saying it "negates the cause of peace and puts obstacles in its path."

The Palestinians and most of the Arab world denounced the proposal.

There was little likelihood Hussein's statement would have any immediate effect on the 2,270-square-mile area. The Israeli army there has no intention of withdrawing until a final peace agreement has been signed by Jordan and Israel.

Hussein's plan calls for the establishment of two semiautonomous regions on either side of the Jordan River, both under his control.

Jerusalem would be the capital of the "State of Palestine" on the West Bank. Amman would be the capital of the "State of Jordan" on the east bank and of the "United Arab Kingdom", which would encompass both regions.

Each state would have a parliament, government and governor general. They would run internal affairs under the umbrella of the federal government in Amman, which would have authority over foreign affairs, defense and security.

British Bomb Experts Die In Bomb Defusion

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)-Two British army bomb experts were blown to bits Wednesday night by a bomb they were trying to defuse.

In Newry, civil rights leader Bernadette Devlin, a member of Britain's Parliament, got a suspended sentence for defying a ban on parades. Authorities in the Irish Republic to the south began a crackdown on guerrilla leaders.

The bomb experts had defused two bombs in parked cars in Grosvenor Road, a Roman Catholic district of Belfast, and were working on a third when it exploded. An army spokesman estimated 50 pounds of gelignite had been backed into the car's trunk.

Heavy sniper fire after the explosion delayed removal of the soldiers' shattered bodies.

Earlier Wednesday, machine gunners cut down William Logan, a 23-year-old Protestant policeman from an ambush in Belfast. He was the sixth policeman killed this year in Northern Ireland.

The death toll in Ulster's 31 months of violence now stands at 275.

A courtroom crowd in Newry Northern Ireland, cheered as Miss Devlin and 22 other demonstrators received suspended six-month sentences. They were convicted of defying a parade ban on Feb. 6 to protest the "Bloody Sunday" deaths of 13 Londonderry civilians killed in a clash with British paratroopers Jan. 30.

Nineteen defendants, including Miss Devlin and other Roman Catholic opposition lawmakers, also were fined 15 pounds, or about $39. Five said they would refuse to pay.

Asked if she would pay, Miss Devlin, at 24 the youngest member of the British Parliament, said: "I will see when the time comes. I've got more important things to worry about at the moment."

She was sentenced last month to six months for another illegal parade. The civil rights leader served four months of a six-month sentence in 1970 for incitement to riot.

In Dublin, a leader of the outlawed Irish Republic Army's Official wing was ordered to face trial on charges of belonging to an illegal organization.

He is Thomas MacGiolla, president of the Sinn Fein, the wing's political arm. He also was accused of having illegal documents on Feb. 23, That was the day after an IRA bomb squad killed seven persons at the big Aldershot paratrooper base in Britain. The documents were not described.

Part of a crackdown by the Dublin government, the move against MacGiolla came two days after the Official IRA chief of staff, Chatal Goupding, was charged with incitement to blow up a transformer in Cork. The Official wing wants to unite Northern Ireland with Ireland by force.

Anthony Doherty, a third IRA leader, was ordered to face a Dublin trial on charges of possessing firearms with intent to endanger life. Doherty escaped from Belfast's Crumlin Road Prison in December and was later seized by police in Ireland.

Angela Davis Ousts Potential Alternate Juror

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP)-Angela Davis, acting as co-counsel, succeeded in ousting a potential alternate juror Wednesday after he called her a "black racist" and said he doesn't trust Communists.

Miss Davis who took over questioning for the first time since her trial began, succeeded where her attorneys had failed. They had challenged Robert Doran for cause earlier and been rejected.

The exchange concerning racism came after lengthy questioning on whether Doran had known any blacks in his life.

"You know, I might look at you as a black racist," Doran told Miss Davis. He said she might be concerned for the plight of blacks but did not understand the problems of poor whites.

"You may not be able to see the other side of the picture any better than white people can see your side of the picture," he told her.

Startled, Miss Davis replied: "I've never been called a black racist before..." Then she added that she was concerned about blacks and others too, including Mexican-Americans, Indians and poor whites.

Apparently nervous, Doran explained to Miss Davis at one point, "You have put a strain on my 18-hour deodorant-I'll tell you that!" She laughed. He was excused after he admitted if she took the stand he might distrust her testimony because it came from a Communist. He said he'd feel the same about any other Communist witnesses.

"I might be prejudiced," he said.

With an all-white jury panel seated, attorneys were in the process of choosing four alternate jurors.

"Bloody Sunday"

BOSTON (AP)-A former Royal Air Force physician who watched the autopsies on 13 persons killed on "Bloody Sunday" in Londonderry said Wednesday it was "probably the most horrible experience of my life."

The 13 were killed when gunfire erupted between Roman Catholics and British troops in the Northern Ireland city.

U.S. Supports S. Viet Victory

SAIGON (AP)-U.S. B52 bombers demolished another North Vietamese base camp in eastern Cambodia Wenesday, and South Vietnamese ground forces claimed victory in a clash just a mile away.

The bombers, supporting a 7,000-man South Vietnamese drive, ripped up 500 small bunkers and destroyed two trucks 15 miles from the South Vietnamese border, government spokesmen reported.

The base bordered another camp where the B52s were reported to have destroyed bunkers, supplies and trucks on Tuesday. A U.S. adviser in the field said: "The whole area is a big base camp."

Field reports on the ground battle, about 85 miles northwest of Saigon, said South Vietnamese soldiers suffered one killed and 16 wounded while killing 30 North Vietnamese.

Ground fighting also flared along the demilitarized zone separating the warring Vietnams. In the biggest artillery action there in months, North Vietnamese gunners slammed more than 200 rockets into base camps Alpha 2 and Alpha 4, two government outposts guarding the DMZ.

At least six South Vietnamese soldiers were reported wounded in the rocket attacks Tuesday. But the casualties were considered light in view of the heavy barrage.

Field reports said the South Vietnamese returned the fire Wednesday with 105mm and 155mm artillery and called in shellings from the guns of the U.S. 7th fleet in the Gulf of Tonkin.

The third major front was in the central highlands of South Vietnam. Government airborne soldiers fought with a company of North Vietnamese troops five miles southeast of Fire Base 5 near the border. The South Vietnamese reported killing 28 of the enemy while suffering two wounded.

Sources in the field said the government troops found a document in a junior officer's pocket directing the North Vietnamese to begin their offensive in the highlands last Monday.

Senior allied officers have predicted for some time the Communist command would launch a major offensive in the highlands. Their prediction has yet to come true on a large scale, although action has picked up considerably recently.

The B52s also flew four missions in South Vietnam, all in the northernmost provinces of Quang Tri, Thua Thien and Quang Nam. Each raid includes from one to three planes.

In Quang Tri, the U.S. Command said one mission was flown against an enemy base camp three miles north of Khe Sanh.

In the mountainous jungles of Thua Thien, to the southeast, the B52s struck a suspected enemy troop concentration, the command said. Two other missions hit a suspected enemy troops concentration in Quang Nam Province, the command said, in an area 40 miles southwest of Da Nang.

Viet Cong terrorists set off an explosive device at a primary school for Vietnamese military dependents seven miles south of Da Nang. The blast killed seven children and wounded four others and a teacher, field reports said.

Sylvan-A Lot Of Potential, But—

By JEANNE BAUGE

"Potential" was the way in which Ken Burnham, Assistant Area Director for the Sylvan Area, described the future possibilities of the area. The Sylvan Area, the most recent addition to residential living on campus, is trying desperately to achieve a unique identity in and of itself.

The Sylvan Area has been bearing the brunt of much criticism lately as it struggles in its social infancy. Having the unique suite lifestyle, students are faced with its disadvantages as well as its advantages in attempting to set up a truly attractive social area.

The area's development depends entirely upon student support. In the words of Ken Burnham, "It's got to be the students to do it. If they make it. They've got it. But if it fails, it's their fault."

In Sylvan alone, the students have had to start from scratch in making the area the way they want it. Last semester was considered a growing and planning period by some and a period of mass confusion for others.

But the dreams of many of the students in the area do in fact seem to be materializing. Among the most significiant is perhaps a better cross-section of students with an increase in the number of female residents. The area still, however, is heavily freshmen.

The students living in Sylvan were originally limited to 3 groupings. There were approximately 900 freshmen, 200 upper classmen, and 200 graduates. Only 19.8% of its 1120 residents during the first semester were females.

Capable of housing 1508 students at capacity, Sylvan now houses approximately 1192 students. Female residence is up to greater than 35%. The area would appear to be changing its image.

The suite style of living is a different structural setup than the classical type of dorm. Some of the worst criticisms by students as to the area are concerned with the physical layout. Lack of space is a common cry among students.

Rooms are considered to be far too small and yet the number of singles in double rooms in the area is somewhat high: Cashin-60 singles in doubles; Brown-47 singles in doubles; McNamara-80 singles in doubles. This single occupancy in a double room is held by more females than males, owing to the number of females in the area.

Many students feel that the dorms are too much like an apartment house situation. As such, the physical location of the dorms in an area somewhat set aside from the rest of the campus, gives it a true off-campus appeal for some. Others, however, feel isolated from the rest of campus.

"The area is separate in itself," said Burnham, "and yet a real part of the University."

There were no provisions made in the original construction for recreational facilities but students are making attempts in a number of ways to change that.

Students have taken it upon themselves to renovate storage areas for ping-pong, etc. Plans are in the making for outside recreational equipment and a few picnic areas.

The number of years in which other residential areas have taken to develop themselves cannot be matched by the progress that this section has made since its beginning.

Relations Center. No longer do students have to feel that they are just one of the many in the crowd.

One of the accomplishments of the Human Relations Center is the new creation of a Learning Center. Occupying suite 02 McNamara, it has become an actual place as well as a concept. Colloquia have been started with 11 courses already underway. Many of these courses receive University credit as well.

The idea for an area radio station took a great deal of planning and prompting but with developments and student interest, the station hopes to get underway in approximately one week. Operating from one of the newly renovated suites for student groupings, this should give the dorm residents a feeling of closer unity in the broadcasting of local, area news and interests.

Another form of communication has also been established in the form of a local newspaper called "The Parchment". This weekly publication has dreams of expanding and giving Sylvan students the coverage they need. Once again, this project as every other organized, has been the result of student time and effort.

Renovating Storeroom A of Cashin, students painted and arranged things the way they wanted it. This has been the case in almost every instance.

Plans are in the working stage for a Snack Bar to be opened in the basement of McNamara. Using what used to be Storage Room A, this snack shop would be on the order of a variety sub shop. In this way, students would have some place to go for food instead of taking the hike to the other snack shops on campus.

A Woman's Center is currently one of the topics of discussion. Ron Platt and Joan Cavanaugh have inquired into the student desire for such a center and what it could be for the female population. Tentative plans are still under investigation and hopes are that something will be worked out shortly.

It has been noted that a large number of students in the area are Engineering Majors and that there is a desire on the part of many students to have a computer terminal. If such a terminal was installed in the area, it would prove to be a great convenience to many of the students. Whereas other areas already own a terminal, such an appropriation for Sylvan would have to be leased. For the present, no plans can be made due to lack of funds.

The Sylvan Area Government is funded by the Student Senate by way of the Student Activities Fee. For each of the other areas on campus, budgets are submitted each year for suitable appropriations. This year, the Student Senate arbitrarily gave the area a total of $4500 for which to fund student area activities. Considered a "fair" allotment, these funds are being tapped this semester with the various activities obtaining monies for their functioning. Budget committees have been established to review House Government finances.

But, despite some of the all-out efforts on the part of some of the dedicated students, there appears to be a number of obstacles still left for them to overcome. There is much that has been done by the students, but one freshman (who wishes to remain anonymous) said, "We can only do so much, the lot of us. There are things around here which we may never be able to change. Some here just don't even want to try."

Many students are disenchanted with the kitchen facilities presented to them in an area which is supposed to be the newest and most modern. Cashin, for one example, has a kitchenette which is one single compact unit which combines range, oven, and refrigerator. This unit is inadequate, many students point out, for the possible dorm capacity of 470 students.

Not having a large meeting facility, large group discussions appear impossible. Students are restricted to floor meetings which do not facilitiate dorm cohesion.

In an earlier article for the Collegian, Dick Polomba, graudate assistant to the coordinator of academic and social problems stated: "The most exciting thing is the acceptance of the part of the students in taking the responsibility of making Sylvan better." The majority of students seem to concern themselves with the area but the recent amount of garbage seen thrown from windows might seem to indicate otherwise. Students shudder at the thought of spring thaw and the emergence of a definite odor due to garbage decay.

On the issue of trash, Ken Burnham remarked: "I can't believe people do it...A lot of people talk a good ecological game, but don't play a good game." He further went on to state that it is a criminal act and if a student is caught, instant suspension may result. There will be an amount of grounds coverage once the weather permits but the garbage continues to pile up.

The largest thorn, however, in the side of the Sylvan students is the dug up area known as "The Pit". Students complain of inconvenience in access to the dorms inasmuch as the only means is through M-lot. Expected to be completed sometime around Thanksgiving, students are now told that it may be completed sometime around June.

Further disgust is voiced when students are informed that the remainder of the road will be dug up when the first half is completed.

Student parking for the area in M-lot is another complaint by many. Inasmuch as there is no money left for paving it this year, drivers can look forward to a long time of driving around, over and through the seemingly uncared for potholes in the lot.

Students are finding that the Sylvan Area may in fact offer a truly unique lifestyle, but it is up to them to decide whether it is to become a garbage dump or a superior residential area.

Day in and day out, area students have to face the artistic unfinished attempts by others to make the area more efficient. Original plans hoped for completion around last Thanksgiving, but now students are hopeful for June. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton)

Perhaps the most significant developments made have been in the elections of a young Area Government and individual House Governments. Although just getting its feet off the ground, the new organizations have attempted to gear all their efforts towards student needs.

Response to these needs has led to the development of the Human Life ain't a bed of roses, nor a field of clover. Why not join us in the BRIAR PATCH.

The Above-Ground Plot To Ruin The Capitol

Nathan Gorenstein

Do You Hear A Hump?

There is an animal creeping around the corners of our political vision that keeps making noises (hump, hump) sounding reminscent of the '68 presidential elections.

Humphrey came in second in Florida, Muskie crying on the steps of William Loeb's palace of righteousness, George McGovern's brave smiles of confidence, and Handsome John failing in Florida.

Are we about to witness the return of Humphrey? He lost in 1968 for complex reasons. But one wonders if he might not have gotten in if a few more people in a few precincts had gotten out and voted. True, Humphrey isn't much better than who we have now, but it's probable that he would at least have kept the country standing still, instead of greasing the path back to the stone age.

Come August, Humphrey may be the one Democratic candidate to leave Miami smiling. While it's not a comforting possibility, it may well happen. If Muskie doesn't win enough delegates in the primaries to give him the nomination on the first ballot (which is good possibility) Humphrey, supported by the Democratic old guard, could drag more and more votes from Muskie till, on the third or fourth ballot, he is nominated the Democratic candidate.

Which puts all of us in an uncomfortable position. The first reaction would be to vomit over the television (after kicking in the picture tube), and take the first plane to Miami with a hoard of high explosives and small arms. But that's self-defeating and no doubt the security will be a ball-buster.

So once the nausea passes you're left with a hard decision. What the hell to do.

Who knows? But the return of Humphrey is the best reason imaginable for going out and registering to vote. (Don't turn the page now.) Look it. There's going to be a primary in Massachusetts April 25. If you vote, it's one blow in favor of America. (Assuming you don't vote for Nixon.) And America needs as many blows in her favor as she can get.

If you vote on the 25th, it can give McGovern, Chisholm or whomever you favor the edge he or she might need at the convention in August. It's no good to wait until November to vote. If we vote at every opportunity we have, it smooths the way for the next step, if only by a little. So register, and vote, vote, vote.

Think of four more years of Nixon:

*Feds tripping over the heels of anyone who calls Nixon what he really is.
*Another few hundred thousand lives in S.E. Asia.
*The continuing ecological destruction of America and the world.
*The beginning of the end of freedom.

Four No? Five Spades Seven No!

It was Labor Day, just after Chicago, just before checking in here to be a college student for the first time. Carl offered to teach the three of us the game of bridge. We tried a few hands. With only one real player and three hopeless beginners, we didn't get far. Within an hour, I forgot everything.

Then I came to college, where I discovered a lot of people playing whist, but no one playing any bridge. Maybe the Marijuana Generation just didn't have any interest in playing a game his parents enjoyed. But for two and one-half years here, I never saw a bridge game.

Maybe they came from the woodwork. Some say they came from the third and fourth floors. They seemed harmless at first, just college kids taking long study breaks. Their tactics should have given them away, but it was spring, and no one feared their presence. Little did anyone suspect that within one year, they would have reduced half of Pierpont to a state of addiction.

Too late, the tell-tale signs were noticed. People walking around in groups of three, withdrawing, until they found one more person. People who once were likely to say, "I'll bid four, I want to see what's in the kitty" saying things like "one heart" and "three no". Nothing to be done but to look oneself in the face, upon retiring at five a.m., and saying, disgust mingling with sorrow, "You know what you are, dummy? You're a bridge junkie."

Have you ever asked yourself why there isn't a daily poker column in The Boston Globe? Or maybe a daily Risk column, Monopoly column, Frisbee column? The answer is simple: none of these games is capable of creating in one person the insanity which makes it necessary to devote his life to the game. Surely, Charles Goren enjoys not having to work for a living, but he couldn't if he tried. Bridge is, let me warn you, very quickly addictive.

Beware the "friend" who offers to explain to you "point-count bidding." Watch out for the one who offers to tell you the difference between the Dilley Convention and the Teso Trump. Unless you want to be walking the streets in a few months, looking for a fourth to support your habit.

There is, of course, another side to this question. It can be summed up as follows: "Try it, you'll like it!" Excuse me, I must find a fourth. Shalom.

A List Of Demands Made On...
Women's International Day, March 8, 1972

(The following demands were made at the Women's International Day Rally, March 8th. The demands were drawn up by women of the University and the community. They reflect the concerns of women regarding the conditions of all oppressed people throughout the world. These demands are printed in full to clear up any misconceptions, which have previously appeared in the Daily Collegian.)

To the New York State Legislature:

We demand that you end your plans to reapportion the Congressional District now represented by Bella Abzug.

—From an open letter by Representative Bella S. Abzug, Democrat of New York's 19th Congressional District, commenting on the reported reapportionment plan slated to be passed by the State Legislature in March.

"This is to alert you to a plan in Albany to completely dismember the existing 19th Congressional District while leaving intact or expanding the other Manhattan districts. The politicians call this Congressional reapportionment. I call it outrageous discrimination against the residents of the 19th C.D., who have existed as a political and social entity for years and whom the political bosses are now planning to deprive of effective representation...The gerrymandering of the 19th C.D. is also outrageous discrimination against women, who represent 53 percent of the electorate but have been shut out of political power."

Richard Nixon:

We the undersigned, demand that you withdraw the promised aid to Portugal and instead use that money to help feed and home those remaining of the families in the Buffalo Creek Valley near Logan, West Virginia. We demand the end to strippmining. We demand that the families who lost so much in this disaster be reimbursed by the coal companies who were negligent.

To Judge B.M. Miller Childers, Juvenile Court Judge of Greene County, Albama:

We, the undersigned, support Ms. Virginia Blair in her effort to retain custody of her five children. The personal and political life of an individual cannot determine the fitness of a mother.

*See NYT, 3/5/72, p. 57.

We demand of ourselves, our sisters, to remain aware and learn of the sources of oppression and to fight that oppression. We demand of ourselves a commitment to liberation, not only for ourselves, but to those who are oppressed, yes, by their sex, by their race, their class, their work, and their government. In short we are committed to a personal and political struggle!

Topic: Free Child Care:

Whereas 53% of all non-white working mothers have children age 5 or under as compared to 38% of white working mothers, we demand of the state legislature that they legislate resources to the setting up of free, non-restrictive, non-discriminatory child care facilities, with double the number in black and Hispanic communities where they are needed most.

We demand free child care facilities at UMass to accommodate the many children in this community, some of which should be staffed beyond the regular working hours as many working mothers and student mothers need the facilities during evening hours.

To Federal Judge R. Dixon Herman in Harrisburg, Pa.:

We, the undersigned, petition Judge R. Dixon Herman to lift the contempt of court charge and release Ms. Zoia Horn. We agree with her position to abstain from lending herself to the evil charade of the Harrisburg Trials. We recognize that she has been incarcerated without the right to bail and we demand that this right be given her immediately!

We, the undersigned, want the UMass administration to form a search committee comprised of 1/3 women support personnel, 1/3 women students and 1/3 women faculty to locate a woman lawyer who could provide legal council to women in the University of Mass. and community.

We, the undersigned, want all departments of UMass to offer courses with subject matter generated by, written by women. Despite the emergence of a Woman's Studies Program, men in this University should have access to a curriculum liberated from male chauvinism and dominance.

We, the undersigned, want half the buildings on UMass Campus to be renamed commemorating women of our history: E.G., Sojourner Truth lived in Northampton for awhile as did Anna Louise Strong.

We, the undersigned, support the efforts of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee. Cesar Chavez has announced the resumption of the boycott of non-union lettuce. We demand that the UMass Food Services specify in their bids for lettuce that they will only accept unionized lettuce, labeled with the Farm Workers' Eagle.

We deplore discrimination in any form including that which is based on sex, race, class, lifestyle or politics. We demand that economic and procedural barriers be broken down so that black, Hispanic, native-American, Asian, poor and other women be admitted in substantial numbers to UMass. We are sick of the mono-male-monopolized culture of which UMass is a microcosm!

We demand the end of aid and selling of arms to all oppressive governments some of which are named in the following: South Vietnam, South Africa, Portugal, Greece, Brazil, Bolivia, Ecuador, Guatemala.

We again demand, as women in this country have for years, that the U.S. government end its public and secret wars against movements of liberation. We demand the dismantling of its 3000 military bases. We demand life for our sisters and their families wherever they are on this globe.

Puerto Rico is a colony of the U.S. Their Independence Movement is strongly rooted. Many have been jailed for their participation in this movement and for their refusal to fight Uncle Sam's War in Indochina. We support the Puerto Rican Independence Movement and we demand the immediate release of Lolita Lebron, imprisoned in Alderson for 17 years because of her contribution to the liberation struggle.

CC/SUGB Writes

To the Editor:

At the last meeting of the Campus Center/Student Union Governing Board we passed unanimously a set of by-laws which I believe to be a significant first step in alleviating a problem which has plagued the Campus Center complex for altogether too long. The by-laws would, if not vetoed by Acting Chancellor Bromery, give the students greater control of the building they financially support. The SUG Board, for the most part, believes that students not only have the right, but also the ability to govern the complex. I believe that the desires of SUG Board very closely approximate the wishes of the student body.

The SUG Board is the body that represents, expresses, and attempts to provide for student needs; therefore, I feel that it is most important that all actions we engage in be performed as openly as possible. In this way we can remain responsive to student input. But we cannot fulfill the needs of the community until we shed our present advisory role and assume a true governing capacity.

Acting Chancellor Bromery has forestalled the by-laws from going into effect for nine working days for the purpose of more study and to rewrite to his liking certain critical areas of the document. In particular, he will rewrite Article 7 (concerning the hiring-firing procedures as discussed in the Collegian on March 10). The Board expects that his wording of this Article will not differ conceptually from the original copy because Dr. Bromery has previously expressed sentiments very similar to those written into the original copy of the by-laws; however, if agreement cannot be reached, he will veto them. In my opinion such an action would be contrary to student wishes.

I urge the Acting Chancellor not to relegate SUG Board to anything less than a true governing capacity. The students have the right to govern that for which they pay. I also urge the students to make their feelings known to the Acting Chancellor. The issue will not die with student support.

Are You A Virgin?

To the Editor:

A friend and I stopped into the Pub Friday night. For those who frequent the Pub it was one of those times when, after a long week, you enjoy a drink with friends. D.J. was singing the same old songs. Most of the time when we've seen and heard D.J. perform our preference has been to half listen to some phrases. Friday night his songs hit a particular note, his words were crystal clear to some. Women were obviously being referred to on a biological or functional level. The songs "Hokey Pokey Pussy" and the "in out in out" finale with the closing statement, "Is this how it is with your girl friend?", were particularly disturbing.

You say well why go to the Pub? We say why should we put up with such attitudes no matter where it happens to be? Are men asked if they are virgins? Would they raise their hands if they were?

This is not directed at D.J. who is merely entertaining and directing his performance toward the needs and desires of some of his audience. It is however directed toward women of this universty who like us have "half listened" and just "put up" with such reference to our minds, bodies and souls. Perhaps another look at what the Pub has to offer Friday night might prove eye opening if not mind opening.

Responsibility

To the Editor:

I would like to comment in general on the repercussions of Women's International Day, and specifically to Zoe Best's letter of 3-15-72.

First, Ms. Best undoubtedly wishes to draw criticism from anti-feminists by her letter so that she can then use those "male chauvinists" as a punching bag for her frustrated ego. What useful purpose could possibly be served by such literary reading of insults I don't know. In any case, I am not going to give Ms. Best the opportunity she is yearning for.

I think the feminist movement has sound basis for protest of employment practices of many businesses in this country. Although it would be difficult to prove, most males or females who have worked in an office with the opposite sex will recall instances of real or implied sexual discrimination. Whether that discrimination is degrading to either sex is an issue that neither Ms. Best nor I have the qualifications to decide, unless Ms. Best is a trained sociologist.

Second, it seems to me that Ms. Best is directing her critical efforts to the wrong group. Why doesn't she (?) talk to the secretaries, maids, and cooks she refers to in her letter? If, when she has conferred with them, they feel that they have legitimate grounds for claiming employment discrimination, then perhaps she could help an individual bring suit against the University. Preaching to students via "The Collegian" will do nothing to remove the sexual bias of the administration, if indeed there is any!

Third, and I quote Ms. Best, "We merely wanted to express our understanding of how an administrative secretary administers for an administrator...(and) is expected to know all there is to do and does his work. He signs his name and rips off the title and salary." Ms. Best leaves out the key concept of responsibility in her analysis of the secretary-administrator relationship. No matter how much of the work the secretary may do, the administrator will be the one who is fired should there be a gross error. The administrator is paid for carrying around the weight of the hassles inherent in his job, and although the best secretaries will be as concerned as their bosses that the right decisions are made, she doesn't bear the ultimate responsibility for those decisions.

Ms. Best you have the right idea, but you're running in the wrong direction.

Brogan Rereplies

To the Editor:

Frank McDonough's conception of democratic dialogue is like that of the John Birch Society: "If you don't like it here, go back to Russia!" There is to be no room for difference of opinion on Orchard Hill.

Most readers no doubt noticed that he did not dispute any of the irregularities which I reported in my communication of March 14th, nor did he pretend that the position of the faculty on Orchard Hill was in harmony with University regulations or with approved professional practice.

He is quite wrong in supposing I attack Master Barron personally, as both he and Larry Hurwitz have attacked me. Though I strongly disagree with Master Barron's policy toward the Fellows, I have no quarrel with him personally. In fact, I think he has fallen into these present difficulties from being so good-natured and so student-oriented that he finds it difficult to resist student pressure, even when not to do so is unwise.

In fact, he himself did not think establishing a student dominated Personnel Committee was a good idea. He called the second meeting to reconsider the matter, and I attended in order to support his alternate proposal.

As for the failure of other Fellows to speak out, most of those formerly active are so no longer. Those who remain may not care to subject themselves to the kind of personal abuse which some students so liberally pass out.

Women On MDC On Women

To the Editor:

The Collegian coverage of the Women's International Day rally was offensively poor. Not only was the news article covering this event on Thursday, March 9 lopsided in its emphasis on a few of the last events of the rally, but in place of some thorough, neutral description of the event, we are subjected to the "subjective" account of Frank Baglione in the Friday Poor Richard section. Imagine the uproar if at the Angela Davis rally a month ago the Collegian had as its sole coverage a subjective account introduced by the following:

"Everyone has their day. Italians have Columbus Day, Lovers have Valentine's Day. Patriots have V-J Day, Groundhogs have Groundhog Day, and now Blacks, Communists, Women and Political Prisoners have one of their very own."

The irrational nature of Baglione's arguments to show that the women's movement and women at this rally were irrational are really so ludicrous as to require no rebuttal. Instead, one is reminded of passages in Virginia Wolff's essay A Room of One's Own, where, taking as her example "Professor von X", the author of a book entitled The Mental, Moral and Physical Inferiority of the Female Sex, she says: "When I read what he wrote about women I thought, not of what he was saying, but of himself...If he had written dispassionately about women, had used indisputable proofs to establish his argument and had shown no trace of wishing that the result should be one thing rather than another, one would not have been angry...But I was angry because he was angry." (p.34, Harbinger Press)

Explaining to herself why the professor is angry she suggests that life for both sexes is difficult and to edure it requires self-confidence, which one can attain by thinking other people, "half the human race indeed" are inferior to oneself. This explanation obviously extends to Mr. Baglione, who shows his own insecurity and worries about his virility by projecting them onto men who sympathize with the women's movement; in particular, those who joined the rally. His crude attempts to explain away participation by older women in the rally as due to "their desire to remain with the young" clearly illustrates his lack of understanding of the women's movement to all women, young or old. To say that they had abondoned "maturity, discretion and dignity" point only to the inanity of his own conception of these qualities. He does not even report the speeches which connect the women's movement to systematic problems like poverty, medical care and racism, and tunes out on the evidence that the women's movement in the area is really dealing with these issues by action-oriented projects. His feeble attempt to spoof the whole procedure by treating it as a fashion show and his paternalistic comments on the issues involved are so ridiculous that they defy response.

As grown women who yet still think of other women as our sisters, we'd be glad if requested to point out other obvious blunders in the few arguments that are presented in this article, but we're optimistic enough to hope that not many people were taken in by them. However, we must hold the Collegian responsible not only for the poor taste and juvenile response of one of its major staff members, but for an almost complete lack of news coverage of the events of the Women's Cultural Festival week. Women on this campus deserve better service from their newspaper, and we the undersigned, demand it.

An Inquiry

To the Editor:

Everything humans do is human.

This includes war, killing, committing suicide, hate, stupidity, cruelty, even polluting the earth.

Everything humans do, they have a good (valid) reason for it. Radicals bombing schools. Sure, we say we believe in change, we are radicals and all that stuff, but violence–no, violence we cannot condone. Hurting other people cannot be excused. What baloney! Those radicals bombing and burning buildings, they believe they have a reason. Be it what it may. Some principle like 'When it hurts somewhere, apply pressure; make it hurt more, so that it comes to a violent head that can then be treated. Blow the problem out of proportion, so that it will get acted on'. Or any other such reason. And who is to judge that their reasons are any less valid than our reasons for condemning violence????

What humans do is human.

By definition. Doesn't it strike you that everything we talk about and deal with, we insist on defining precisely, except when we are talking about that holy, divine, miraculous homo sapiens? Why is that, eh? Let's define the term 'human':

what
do.

Presidential Primary Voter Information

Partisan Voting Required: The Presidential Primary is the one election when a voter must vote in the party in which he is enrolled. At the polls he must specify his party enrollment, at which time he is either handed the ballot of the party in which he is enrolled or directed to a voting machine programmed with ballot strips containing candidates of his party. In the case of an independent voter, he must also specify the party for which he wishes a ballot, following which he becomes a member of that party, and will remain so unless he cancels his enrollment in writing at the Town Clerk's office.

If a voter wishes to change his party enrollment before the primary, he must do so thirty (30) days before the primary. Election laws specify that a voter is not enrolled in a party until such 30 days have elapsed.

Absentee Voting: Effective January 1, 1972, absentee voting has been allowed in state and presidential primaries, and at city and town preliminary elections and primaries. A voter desiring to vote by absentee ballot in a primary must specify on his application for the ballot the party with which he is enrolled or, if an independent voter, the party in which he wishes to become enrolled. In no case will the voter be supplied with the ballot of more than one party. Again, if the voter wishes to resume independent status following the primary, he must do so in writing at the Town Clerk's office.

Registration Sessions Before the Primary: There will be a voter registration session, open to all residents, at the University Campus Center on Thursday, March 16, from 12:00 Noon to 6:00 P.M. On the last day to register before the primary there will be a long registration session in the Town Clerk's office from 12:00 Noon until 10:00 P.M. - March 25, 1972.

Debt Ceiling Hiked

WASHINGTON (AP)-Congress gave hurry-up approval Wednesday to a hike of the national debt ceiling as the fiscal minutes were about to run out.

Without the raised ceiling the authority of the Treasury to issue so much as a savings bond would vanish.

The $20-billion ceiling increase to $450 billion was approved by the Senate 55 to 33 after the House approval 237 to 150.

The old ceiling was $430 billion and the national debt stood at about $24 million short of that as Congress acted.

Before the House vote, Democrats attempted to tie tax reform to future administration requests for hikes in the ceiling.

The House Democratic caucus adopted by voice vote a resolution telling President Nixon that the next increase, due before June 30, would be jeopardized unless he backs legislation closing tax loopholes.

MDC OK's Fluoridation

BOSTON (AP)-The Metropolitan District Commission voted Wednesday to fluoridate the water supply of the 32 cities and towns within the metropolitan water district.

The commission acted after receiving an opinion from State Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, stating that the MDC has the authority to fluoridate and it can order fluoridation if a majority of the boards of health among its communities "vote an upward adjustment of fluoride content of the water."

The commission, in a statement, noted that 23 of the 32 boards within the district have voted for fluoridation during the past four years.

The MDC said Winchester has been fluoridating since 1965 and Newton has been since 1963.

The MDC also voted to ask the legislature for a $1 million deficiency for an engineering study of the fluoridation system, construction and equipment costs of the original installation and the first year's operating costs.

The MDC announced it also has voted to ask whether "the action of the commission...must be published in newspapers of general circulation of the water district, and whether and how a referendum in the water district may be structured if one becomes necessary."

Industry Hard Hit By Costs

WASHINGTON (AP)-Small plants in the paper and pulp industry and the fruit and vegetable processing industry will be hit especially hard by antipollution costs, says a report to federal authorities.

Reports on these industries were part of a general study of the economic impact of antipollution measures, issued Sunday by the Environmental Protection Agency, Council on Environmental Quality and the Commerce Department.

A study by the Arthur D. Little consulting firm of Cambridge, Mass., told the federal agencies that antipollution efforts would cost the paper and pulp industry some $3.3 billion from 1972 to 1976.

The study said about 85 per cent of the impact would be felt in New England, the Middle Atlantic region and the North Central states.

A report on the fruit and vegetable canning and freezing industry was submitted by the Agri Division of Dunlap and Associates, consultants in Kansas City.

Students Elect Fake

STORRS, Conn. (AP)-University of Connecticut students have elected a "phantom" candidate as president of student government, apparently in protest over the way the government is set up.

A candidate named Bill X. Carlson was elected by a margin of 1,641 to 737 over a student senator to be president of the Associated Student Government. The runner-up was David G. Kaplan of Bloomfield.

But there's no Bill X. Carlson listed as a UConn student.

Linda Sokolowski, chairman of the association, noted it would be up to the student senate to validate the winning candidate and since there is no Carlson at UConn Kaplan probably would get the nod.

An editorial in the student newspaper, the Connecticut Daily Campus, said Monday it would consider the election of Carlson as a vote of "no confidence" in the student government.

"We're tired of endorsing a system of government which perpetuates elitism and senatorial cliques. Why is it, for example, that only student senators are qualified to become president and vice president of the government?" the editorial said.

Incumbent Paul Devine of Wallingford recommended that the university withdraw support of the Associated Student government.

Saul Alinsky Here Monday

Radical organizer Saul Alinsky will speak here Monday, March 20, sponsored by the Distinguished Vistors Program.

His talk at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom will be followed by coffee in the Colonial Lounge. All members of the Five-College community are invited.

Alinsky has made a 30-year career of organizing people--workers, small businessmen, blacks, labor leaders--against the power elite. His tools included picket lines, boycotts, demonstrations, rallies, and stock proxies.

He is 63 years old. A former student of archaeology and criminology, he joined John L. Lewis and helped organize the CIO in the 1930's. By 1940 he had left the labor movement to organize the Back of the Yards community in Chicago--the area near the stockyards. He united the community on a self-help program and made it a model of community-controlled power.

His Industrial Areas Foundation, founded in 1940, has helped depressed communities from California to New York to build effective organizations. Cesar Chavez is one of the trainees. In 1968 he set up the Industrial Areas Training Institute. He calls it "a school for radicals" directed at work in white middle-class communities.

In 1969 he entered Rochester, N.Y., and helped that community organize, using a new weapon against the Eastman Kodak company--stock proxies. Out of this came Proxies for People, a group to help the middle class seize its share of power through stock proxy pressure.

Clay Appointed To Assist UT's President Spurr

President Stephen H. Spurr of the University of Texas at Austin Thursday announced the appointment of David Clay, director of libraries at the University of Massachusetts, as assistant to the president. He will move to Austin this month to assume his duties.

Dr. Spurr said Clay's primary duties will be in the general areas of academic planning, programs and development.

"Initially, his main responsibility will involve continued analysis of the management of the university's general library system," he added. "That responsibility extends to the planning for new library facilities and to further analysis of the various branch libraries to determine the extent to which consolidation might be desirable."

Clay also will serve on a special assignment basis under various vice presidents "as issues evolve concerning academic priorities and long-term planning within the University," Dr. Spurr said.

At the University of Massachusetts, where he has taught philosophy since 1961, Clay has been director of libraries for more than five years. He had responsbility for general library operations, building up collections, and design and construction of a new 28-story general library building.

For the past two years, he also has been special assistant to the chancellor. In that capacity, he worked on budgeting, program planning, institutional studies and facilities planning.

Also during the past two years, Clay has been responsible for the large-scale, statewide, cooperative program of library acquisition for all the 27 public institutions of higher learning in Massachusetts. Acquisitions during the last fiscal year amounted to $4 million.

"The University of Texas at Austin is now a mature campus, and fewer options are open. It is necessary to begin thinking very carefully about the long-term future role of the library, its location and the kinds of collections to be developed.

"The University is building on the basis of great strength in terms of the quality of its collections and general library operations. Before all options are closed, we must think of where we are going."

Clay was on the campus as a consultant for one week during the interval between the fall and spring semesters. During that time, he talked with senior administrative officers and professional staff members of the Library, attempting to "get a sense of what the problems were, the strong and weak points" of the Library.

He said by far the strongest point is the collections-"some very, very distinguished, others excellent and first-rate."

He tempered that statement with a warning that the University is not spending enough on "bread-and-butter" acquisitions.

"The quality of the collections can be eroded very quickly if we don't keep up," he said. "Of the 4,000,000 items published every year, Austin is not buying a high enough percentage."

Julius Christ To Speak

Julius Christ, who claims to be the son of God, will speak tomorrow afternoon at 2:00 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The 47 year old preacher, who has been preaching for over 20 years, will attempt to turn all hearts back to God. Brother Julius has great power to heal and bless all people who are true believers in his faith.

Julius is from Dover, New Jersey and is one of two witnesses revealed in the last book of the Bible, said a follower. The other witness is his wife, Joanne.

During his speaking engagement, Julius can be expected to speak on the past prophesies he has fulfilled. He will also relate to the next 12 years, which a follower of Julius calls the "years of tribulation". These years are expected to include catastrophes, wars and widespread famine and disease, according to this particular follower.

Julius now has 300 to 400 true followers as well as 70 apostolic prophets. He also now has four of his expected twelve disciples. Julius expects to have millions of followers within the next three-and-a-half-years.

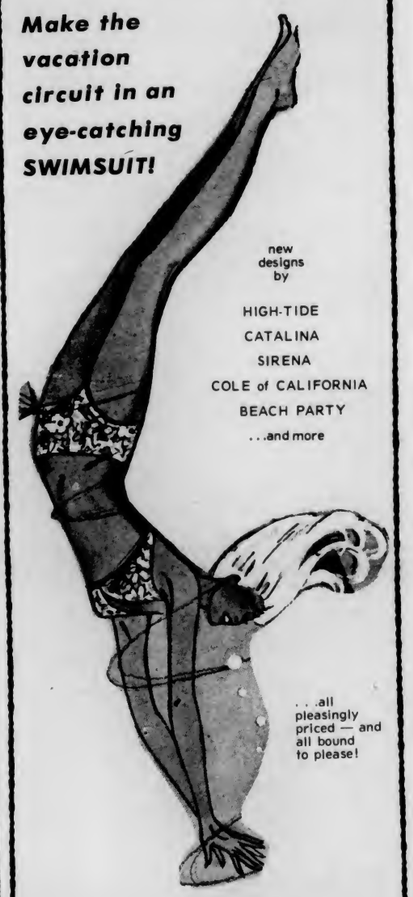
Phantom Outlaw Foils Polluters

CHICAGO (AP)-He's a phantom outlaw to polluting industries and a hero to those who would protect the environment.

"The Fox," a resident of northeastern Illinois Kane County somewhere near the river from which he takes his name, works incognito.

Over the last three years he's gained attention through his antipollution exploits, which have included clogging smokestacks, plugging sewer outlets and pouring dung on the floors of corporate offices as startled secretaries shriek.

But "The Fox" may be switching tactics.



Preserving his anonymity, he spoke on a conference telephone call Tuesday to a subcommittee of the secretary of State's Advisory Committee on the 1972 United Nations Conference on the Human Environment.

"I'm not going to say I'm never going to plug up another sewer or stuff up another chimney," he said. "But I'm getting more and more into what I wanted to do in the first place-to educate."

"The Fox" said he's been working with youngsters recently, organizing writing campaigns to political representatives and generally working within the system. He said he hopes to continue in that direction but bases any success he's had working with youth on his previous exploits.

A Russian salvage tug comes to the aid of a Soviet nuclear-powered submarine about 600 miles northeast of Newfoundland. The boat, apparently disabled by propulsion system difficulties, is being towed to the Soviet Union. This class of submarine is usually armed with three ballistic missiles and carries about 90 officers and men.

OSCAR Pre-registration Next Semester Available

By SUSAN HUBBARD

"OSCAR (Optional Section Choice with Assignment Regulation) is a modification in the procedure for pre-registration which will allow students to construct their own schedules," states UMass Registrar, Ralph D. Jones.

Under this new system, each course section will have a unique six-digit number and students will use these numbers to indicate exact section preference when selecting courses.

"The student," says Jones, "instead of merely asking for a course, has the option to request a specific section of a given course through the new six-digit course coding. As far as possible, the student's request for specific course sections will be honored."

Jones feels that more interest in class scheduling will be called for on the part of students if they wish to take advantage of the new system. Presently, it is only suggested that students construct a timetable of the courses they wish to elect in order that they avoid choosing courses that conflict.

This timetable formulation would be a necessity once OSCAR is initiated, in order that students avoid being dropped from courses because of section time conflicts. If a student has no preference as to course sections, he would still have the option to let the computer do his section selection as in the present system.

Additional changes will be made in the procedures for registration in the fall. More information is due to be issued on OSCAR when Fall 1972 pre-registration materials become available in April.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ by SYDNEY OMARR ☆

Dorothy, a Pisces from Chicago, shares her convictions with us declaring: "I find Taurus and Cancer men at the bottom of the zodiac. I think they are the dullest, most boring in the world. I find Aquarius the most irritating and unpleasant. I don't care for Taurus and Cancer people: they bore me and the men are just too stubborn and bossy. The women aren't so bad--but the men! Sulk and pout like babies! I worked for several Cancer attorneys and they thought I was wonderful. But that sulking and pouting any time they got their feelings hurt--which was often--for no reason at all. My favorites are Libra and Capricorn."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Overcome obstacles by being versatile. If you insist on only one way, you invite problems. Emphasize personality, original methods. Be ready to break with some accepted procedures. Room is being made at top echelon.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Tread lightly. Heavy-handed methods now cannot succeed. Check fine print. Perceive hidden meanings, detect subtle nuances. Aquarius individual can provide answers. You aid yourself by being thorough.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Special relationships are intensified. Friends tend to be argumentative. Avoid becoming involved in family dispute. Be perceptive, analytical. Some hopes, wishes are subject to revision. Be ready.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get help from source that may previously have been indifferent. Home environment can be improved. Key is to be diplomatic. Don't force issues. Review ambitions. Talk of property, residence is featured.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Maintain steady pace. Going here and there could be waste of time. Sift through rumors, reports. Stick to fact, not fancy. Some, who went to appear important, try to sell rumors. Don't fall for sob story.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pleasant surprises due. Affects financial status. Avoid jumping to conclusions. Wait for other. You may be worth more then imagined. Self-esteem rises. You obtain needed backing. Accept extra duty, assignment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You get into difficulty by acting on impulse. Unorthodox approach is okay, but be sure you are aware of potential--and consequences. You will be completing a project. This is time to finish, not initiate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Work, health areas are emphasized. Pace is stimulating. Be sure if isn't recklessly quick. Study Leo message. You gain now through new contacts. Adhere to individual style. Ignore one who forever complains.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friends act in way which causes some to raise eyebrows. Maintain sense of humor. What appears lost is merely misplaced. In actuality, gain is shown. Financial picture will be brighter.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be aware of tendency to go to extremes. Recall diet, health resolutions. Home environment may change suddenly. You come out of any rut, emotional or otherwise. Social life accelerates. Have fun, but take care.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Confusion may appear to be par for the course. Neighbors, relatives make accusations. Key is to pay attention to facts. Let rumors go by wayside. Another Aquarian figures prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be ready for change, travel, variety of experiences. Protect valuables. Friend may be sincere but misinformed. Realize this and be cautious where money is concerned. Gemini and Virgo persons are in picture.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are sensitive, poetic, often withdrawn, but basically attectionate. June should be one of the most significant months of 1972 for you. New start, contact will begin to bear fruit. Some ambitions are due to be fulfilled. If single, marriage is on horizon.

Duane Thomas: "I am deserving"

DALLAS (AP) — Duane Thomas is optimistic about continuing his career in professional football but not, he insists, at the sacrifice of his individuality and personal pride.

"I'm going to be my own man," the controversial running star of the Dallas Cowboys said in an exclusive interview with The Associated Press, breaking a seven-month silence.

"Life is give and take. I'm not going to give every damn thing and not get anything in return. Money is only part of the problem. There are also recognition and respect. You can do the job or you can't. If you can't, get out."

The 6-foot-1, 220-pound ball carrier who came from a Dallas ghetto left no question that he felt certain he could do the job for the Cowboys or any other team in the National Football League.

"I am deserving," he said. Thomas was a pro football sensation from the moment he came out of West Texas State to join the Cowboys in 1970. He averaged 7.3 yards a carry his rookie season, ran for 793 yards and 11 touchdowns last year and ripped off 95 yards in 19 carries to help lead the Cowboys to a 24-3 victory over the then Miami Dolphins in the Super Bowl last January.

During a large part of this period-through most of last season and up to the present time-Duane placed himself in a virtual isolation booth, refusing to give press interviews and declining to answer the simplest questions.

The Dallas interview by The Associated Press over the weekend was the first of its kind since the troubled player adopted his policy of silence.

The lengthy conversation took place in the suburban home of Thomas' old coach at Dallas' Lincoln High, Floyd Iglehart, a trusted friend. Thomas, attired in sports clothes and wearing only a slight trace of his familiar Fu Manchu mustache and beard, was loose and relaxed.

He spoke in low, measured, tones, picking his words carefully and at times making allusions to music and art, in which he is deeply interested. He smiled often.

The solid, thick-necked running back described his early days in Dallas' predominantly black south side; his career at West Texas State, marked by discrimination and loneliness and almost cut short by the deaths within a year of each other of his mother and father; then his plunge into the big, suffocating world of professional football.

Discussing his long-time silence, Thomas explained that it resulted from no outside advise, such as that of ex-Cleveland star Jim Brown, as reported. He said he basically was a loner and during this period was beset by personal problems.

"People are different," he insisted. "Some guys like to get before a television screen and talk. I don't. If I read the Constitution right, it gives me freedom to do as I please.

"There is no stipulation that says if you play football you have to talk. I don't have anything against reporters. I just don't like people because they're narrow-minded on things."

Thomas admitted that some of his anxieties have been provoked by money pressures, principally resulting from family expenses and an inferior three-contract which fixed his base pay at $20,000 to $22,000 a year, well below the going rate for a super star.

"Because of the things that were happening in my own family, I thought I'd get a guy to negotiate for me," Duane said. "I got hold of one of these slick dudes from New York and he was too slick for me."

Thomas' younger brother, Burtrand, had severed three fingers on his right hand in a shop accident. His older brother, Franklin, was suffering a kidney ailment, requiring heavy medical expenses. Besides, Duane was paying for the support of a wife whom he married in high school and two children-a marriage later annulled.

Thomas said when he joined the Cowboys he had been assured by Gil Brandt, director of player personnel, not to worry, that he would be taken care of.

So, after his good rookie season, Duane said, he went to Brandt to ask for a new contract.

"He suddenly lost all memory," Thomas said.

He said he then went to Tex Schramm, Dallas general manager, but was sloughed off with the remark: "Sorry, boy, you're stuck."

"I figured they didn't dig me," Duane said. "I wasn't the stereotype of nigger who comes in and says, 'Please, Mr. White Man, do this for me.'"

Thomas said he was disturbed also to read in the paper that Tom Landry, the Cowboys coach, had said he must change his attitude if he is to play with the Dallas team next season.

"There is nothing wrong with my attitude," he added. "My attitude is a winning attitude. I have felt my attitude coincided with the goal of the team."

The powerful halfback said he got along well with all the Dallas team members, but found "prejudice and jealousy" among the administrators.

"I saw no appreciation from them for my hard work, my dedication and my sincerity," he said. "All this is being exploited. They're trying to brainwash and castrate a person's life."

Doctor Erving Tribute This Sunday

Remember, Doctor J fans, Julius E will be on campus this Sunday to be paid tribute to. The festivities will begin at 5:00 p.m. with cocktails, followed by a roast beef dinner at 7:00 p.m. The place is Berkshire Dining Commons.

As most of you giraffe fans know, Mr. Erving was the greatest Redman hoopster ever, and his contributions to this school are innumerable and invaluable.

Therefore, it is hoped that UMass people will turn out to see #32 retired officially. Many sports figures will be there. Tickets are $5.00 at Boyden Ticket Office.

UMass Gymnasts Second In East

By JANE CROOK

STATE COLLEGE, Pa.--The 1972 UMass Varsity Gymnastics team closed out their competitive season with a decisive second place finish in the Eastern League, as the 45th Annual Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastic League championships came to a close this past Saturday at Penn. State. The three-day season finale decided individual champions, finalized league standings, and determined the league representative to the Nationals, as well as selecting individuals from the East for the NCAA championships. Only the top three place winners qualify for the NCAA's in April.

In team competition, UMass placed second in the league for the first time, scoring 153.2, finishing behind an overpowering Penn. State total of 164.65. As was expected, the junior sensation Marshall Avener turned in some stupendous performances to pace the Nittany Lions, winning the All-Around, and placing in all six events. Penn. State, under Gene Whettstone, has now shared or won the League title seven times in the past eight years. This year, in addition to winning the League crown, and the right to represent the EIGL in the Nationals, PSU took the top three all-around positions, qualified for 25 spots in the finals, took 21 medals, and won 10 out of 12 event totals in the compulsory and optional scores.

In the all-around event, two of the six trophy winners were Redmen. Co-captain Tony Vacca and Steve Scuderi finished fifth and sixth, respectively in this competition, as they continued to represent UMass well in this event. Both of these men have been a solid part of the Redmen lineup all season, as evidenced by their strong finish against such established champions as Penn. State's Avener, Kruest, and Mitchell. Avener's amazing 107.4 two-day total easily won him first place.

In the individual championships, UMass fared better than they ever have in the past., qualifying eight men for the finals, and winning six medals. Highlighting the individual honors for the Redmen was junior Jay Aronstein, who placed third on the still rings with a 17.85 total. By qualifying for the Nationals, Aronstein will travel to Iowa to compete at the beginning of April.

Other finalists for UMass included Danny Spier on rings, Tony Vacca and Jay Thompsen in vaulting, Dave Genest on parallel bars, Tom Myslicki and Vacca on high bar.

The first two events concluded without Massachusetts producing a finalist Senior John Calabria, the Redmen's top floor specialist, got off to a shaky start, scoring a 6.3 on his compulsory on Thursday night. His strong 8.95 exercise on Friday just wasn't enough to make up the difference necessary to make the finals, while Junior Jack Berner's more consistent scores of 7.15 and 8.6 fell short of the qualifying mark by .85. Mell Hill, of Temple's, smooth exercises won him first, with Avener and Young of Penn. State placing second and third.

Pommel horse was a surprisingly strong team effort for the Redmen, as they scored an optional total of 25.55, their highest this season. Rich Seikunas had a beautiful optional routine Friday, hitting for an 8.85, which coupled with his 7.25 compulsory fell short for qualifying by .4 of a point. Steve Scuderi also had impressive 7.65 and 8.6 routines, as were Steve Nelson's 7.95 and 8.1, but Navy's Worthington and Swanson duo made the space at the top pretty tight. Avener took third.

Still ring enthusiasts were treated to quite a demonstration of ability as Mitchell and Avener, both of Penn. State, tied for first with 18.025 totals. The Redmen's Aronstein had strong, well-controlled performances on all three days. Scoring an 8.6 compulsory, and a 9.1 optional, he entered the finals in second place, and held onto third with a 9.0 final exercise. Besides Aronstein on the rings, the Redmen got some strong, pressurized routines from Junior Danny Spier. With a 6.5 compulsory and 8.25 optional, Spier qualified for the finals, and came through with a final 8.5 exercise, good for sixth place.

Longhorse vaulting saw two more finalists from UMass; Tony Vacca and Jay Thompsen, the same two Redmen who qualified at the New England's. Thompsen, suffering from a painful knee injury, had to vault without warming up, but still totaled a 17.60, good for sixth place, while Vacca after a 9.0

compulsory, had trouble sticking his second final vault, ending with a 17.50 total for seventh place.

Parallel bars turned out to be UMass' most disheartening event, as co-captain Dave Genest missed qualifying for the Nationals by .075 of a point. After an 8.6 compulsory and an 8.5 optional, Genest went into the finals in second place. With a grossly underscored 8.3 final routine, where he was admittedly unfairly denied any ROV points (out of a possible .6) by the judging, Genest dropped into fourth place behind Avener, Mitchell and Kruest, all of Penn. State. It was disappointing only because the color of his jersey seemed to play an all too important part when it came down to those decisive extra tenths. Granted Penn. State has a fantastic gym team and outstanding performers, but a blue jersey or a big name shouldn't guarantee an extra .5 or .6 pt. before they're even up on the piece'

High bar was pretty exciting for the Redmen, with both senior "pipe-men" making the finals and placing. Tom Myslicki turned in a beautiful 8.15 compulsory, with an equally strong 8.95 optional before advancing to the finals, where his 8.5 routine earned him fourth place, missing the Nationals by .225 of a point. This past weekend Slick ended his competitive career with three sensational performances, despite an incredible back injury which has hampered him all season. Vacca placed fifth in the event, .325 pt. off the mark, after an outrageous 9.1 optional routine, and an 8.9 final. His 7.0 compulsory score on Thursday was just a little too low, a recurring UMass fate, and killed his chances of a qualifying position for the NCAA's, as Penn. State's Avener, Kruest, and Kimmel captured first, second, and third.

High bar and p-bars told the story for UMass. The whole team performed well all weekend, and gave 150%, only to have the breaks not fall their way. Consistently producing strong 8's, the 9's were too few and too late. It hurt to come so close, and miss.

The gymnasts will continue their daily workouts preparing for the USGF's in May.

Wrestlers Finish High In NCAA

By JOHN BOCK

Last Saturday night the largest crowd to ever witness an amateur wrestling match in the USA (12,500 fans) saw Iowa State University crown three champions and walk away with the team title that signifies dominance in national collegiate wrestling.

The crowd at the finals was part of a total of 44,000 in attendance at the tournament that saw, in the three days of wrestling at the University of Maryland's Cole Field House, UMass wrestlers Bruce Buckbee and Carl Dambman prove the worth of New England wrestling as they grappled with the best wrestlers from many parts of the country. Their total points amassed and the places they finished in were the best ever for UMass in the years they have been at the tourney.

For Coach Homer Barr, it was a weekend of tense excitement and emotion as he saw his boys wrestle conference champions, NCAA runners up and kids that were just plain picked to wipe the New England boys out.

"Their performance was very excellent at the tournament. Considering the size of their opponents and other factors, they came through in great form. We had Bruce, wrestling at 190, weighing in at 180, and wrestling kids that were a good deal bigger and of course heavier. Then Carl was one of the lightest heavyweights and he wrestled two of the heaviest."

The tourney was divided into five rounds for both regular and consolation brackets and to advance to the consolations a boy had to lose to someone that made it to the semi-final round.

Bruce Buckbee drew Berg of Fresno State in the first round and found he had drawn a Pacific Coast Champ. That didn't stop him and he advanced to the first round preliminaries by virtue of a 7-6 decision. His next opponent was Johnson of Air Force, winner of the Western Regional Tourney, and Bruce pinned him in 5:28. Fate dealt the tough New Yorker a rough hand because his second round preliminary nemesis was Emil Deliere of Princeton, winner of the Easterns and eventual runner-up at 190. Deliere beat Bruce 4-1, but pushed him into the consolations where he lost his first match 4-1 to Paulsen of Missouri.

Carl Dambman was hesitant about going to the tournament at heavyweight and if behad known how his draws were to come out he might not have gone. Before it was over, Hesse was to have wrestled two conference champs, last year's NCAA runner-up and a 27-year-old Canadian Champ. In his first match, Carl was down by four points to Summerfelt of Northwestern and then came from behind to win 8-5 and advance to the preliminaries. It was here that Carl met 27-year-old Harry Geris of Oklahoma State, second in the Big 10 to Iowa State's NCAA Champ Chris Taylor and several times Canada's Nation 1 Champ.

When asked what Geris did to him, Carl replied, "What didn't he do to me? He was all over me and ended it in the second period with a pin. But at least he put me in the consolations and I managed to rally for a while."

His first consolation match was against Middle Atlantic and former National Junior College Champ Joel Kislin. Kislin, it might be noted, bested Coach Barr in his last appearance in active competition last summer at a New York tournament. Carl, to his and Barr's delight, handed Kislin a 4-0 loss.

That was about as far as Carl went as his next opponent was Penn State's two-time Eastern Champ and last year's NCAA runner-up, Dave Joyner. For those football fans that were glued to the TV New Year's Day, they might remember Joyner as the All American lineman that played a large part in the Nittany Lions victory in the Cotton Bowl.

"Stranger than Fate" is how this draw should be described because both Dambman and Joyner have been coached by Coach Barr. Barr coached Joyner to the Pennsylvania State Championship at Heavyweight and has coached Carl to two NEIWA titles.

"I saw Joyner warming up and I asked him if Andy (PSU's two-time NCAA 167-pound Champ and a high school teammate of Carl's) had told him all my secrets and he said he had. It was okay, though, because Coach Barr told me all of his."

That was probably the last time Joyner will listen to Matter because close to the end of the second period and four points ahead, he found himself in on his back for the first time since junior high, the victim of a far side cradle applied by Carl. It was only good for three points, however, and Carl ended up on the short side, 8-3. This loss was good enough for a tie for ninth place in the nation. This went well with Bruce's fifteenth place finish.

In the finals, there were four sensations, two brothers winning national titles, two teammates from a small Pennsylvania state college winning, two national champs going at it, and Iowa State's four-hundred pound heavyweight showing who is the best.

In summary of Bruce's and Carl's stellar performance, Coach Barr said, "Take away Penn State's placers, Clarion State's, Navy's and Deliere from Princeton and you find that Carl and Bruce finished better than anyone in the East."

And that is quite a finish.

Hockey Rink Hopes

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Two of the key figures in potential plans to build an ice hockey rink at here at UMass spoke on the possibilities of the rink in separate interviews with the Collegian yesterday.

Athletic Director David Bischoff and Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives David Bartley both expressed a somewhat cautious optimism as to the future of the rink.

Bischoff stressed that as far as athletics is concerned, the rink is "top priority", but he cautioned that at this point proponents of the rink should be "careful with procedure" in approaching the administration since a rink is not top priority university-wide.

He conceded that although it is "improbable and improper" for the largest university in New England to have no facility of their own, the only route to a rink in the near future is through alternative sources of funding. Some alternatives suggested by Bischoff include:

1) Alumni. Bischoff feels that asking alumni support of the measure "offers a unique opportunity to get alumni concerned."

2) A $5 increase in Athletic Fee with the stipulation that it can never be raised to more than $5 for support of the rink.

3) The legislature. Bischoff considers the ideal solution to be a combination of alumni funds and a matching amount from the legislature.

Whether or not the idea of legislative funding for the rink is feasible was the topic of an interview with House Speaker David Bartley. Contacted by phone at his Holyoke home, Bartley was queried as to the possibilities.

"I'm concerned with the lack of an adequate hockey facility at UMass" was Bartley's statement. He explained that there was no way to tell whether legislative funding was feasible until the Board of Trustees at UMass submitted the rink request to the legislature for consideration.

Bartley, a UMass alumnus, has been a long time friend of UMass on Beacon Hill. He hinted at future support of the rink in reminding the Collegian of his "99.9% track record" in supporting UMass on the Hill.

As far as physical characteristics of the proposed rink go, Bischoff's aim is a 6,000 bench-style seat ("Spartan, but a quality rink" in Bischoff's words) rink located north of the lights on the Intramural field. He would also like to include some varsity team dressing rooms for the teams that practice in those fields (lacrosse, tennis, track).

The rink would also serve the purpose of housing intramural hockey and skating for the student population. With these included, Bischoff feels that the rink could be used for twenty hours a day from November to April.

But the big concern of Bischoff's is to act now. His primary goal is to bring ICE to this campus as soon as possible. This may entail building an outdoor rink and putting a building around it later, but as far as Dave Bischoff is concerned, anything is a step in the right direction.

Nixon Halts Busing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Declaring that some federal courts "have gone too far," President Nixon urged Congress Thursday night to legislate an immediate halt to all new pupil-busing orders. And he proposed to channel $2.5 billion into poor-neighborhood schools.

In an address prepared for live television-radio delivery from the White House, Nixon coupled his appeal for an end to busing with a proposal to "concentrate federal school-aid funds on the areas of greatest educational need"-the rural and central-city school districts which do not match suburban standards.

"The great majority of Americans, black and white," said Nixon "feel strongly that the busing of school children away from their own neighborhoods for the purpose of achieving racial balance is wrong.

The chief executive, who for two weeks had been pondering what he termed "one of the most difficult issues of our time," did not spell out exactly how long his proposed "moratorium on new busing" would continue. Nor did he give details of the " equal educational opportunities act" he is submitting to Congress.

The fine print will be filled in Friday when Nixon sends Congress a special message on busing and educational opportunity.

The President made a direct appeal to citizens to put pressure on Congress in behalf of his program.

The President outlined his stand 48 hours after Florida residents voted against busing by a 3-1 margin, and George C. Wallace, campaigning against busing, swept the Florida Democratic presidential primary.

The White House said Nixon, who often has spoken out against busing, had made his decision before Tuesday's vote in Florida.

Asserting that states, cities and school districts "have been torn apart in debate" over busing Nixon said:

"What we need now is not just speaking out against more busing but action to stop it. Above all, we need to stop it in the right way-in a way that will provide better education for every child in America in a desegregated school system."

Nixon said some "courts have gone too far-in some cases beyond the requirements laid down by the Supreme Court-in ordering massive busing to achieve racial balance. The decisions have left in their wake confusion and contradiction in the law-anger, fear and turmoil in local communities and worst of all agonized concern among hundreds of thousands of parents for the education and the safety of their children who have been forced by court order to be bused miles away from their neighborhood schools."

Nixon said he is certain his proposals will not satisfy those on the left and right extremes on the busing issue. But he added: "I believe I have expressed the views of the majority of Americans."

Nixon said the possibility of enacting a constitutional amendment to deal with the question "deserves a thorough consideration by the Congress on its merits."

However, he said that "as an answer to the immediate problem we face of stopping more busing now the constitutional-amendment approach has a fatal flaw-it takes too long."

Estimating it would take at least a year to 18 months before an amendment could become effective, he said, "what we need is action now-not action two, three or four years from now."

In outlining his program, Nixon said:

"First I shall propose the legislation that would call an immediate halt to all new busing orders by federal courts-a moratorium on new busing." As for his companion measure, Nixon said administration-drafted legislation "would require that every state or locality must grant equal educational opportunity to every person regardless of race, color or national origin."

He said this would mark the first time that "the cherished American ideal of equality of educational opportunity would be affirmed in the law of the land..."

In reporting that his proposal would "concentrate federal school-aid funds on the areas of greatest educational need," Nixon said, "That means directing over $2.5 billion in the next year mainly toward improving the education of children from poor families.

He said everyone knows that there are central-city schools "so inferior that it is hypocrisy even to suggest that the poor children who go there are getting a decent education, let alone an education comparable to that of children who go to school in the suburbs."

Rent Increase Proposed

By STEVE TRIPOLI

A rent increase of at least $64 and possibly as much as $130 is on the way, according to Chuck Hampton of the Housing Office. He made the prediction at last night's meeting of the Rents and Fees Committee. Robert Chiller, Chairman of the Committee, doesn't see things that way.

The two argued the point during the meeting, which was attended by a few other administrators including Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services Thomas Campion.

After an introductory statement by Campion in which he stressed that the rent hikes in their most expensive form ($130 for the Quad and most of Central, $107 for the rest of the dormitories) could probably be reduced, Hampton presented the facts and figures behind the requested hikes.

For the Residence Hall Trust Fund Dormitories, which includes the Quad and all of Central except for Gorman and Brett Houses, the projected increase is $130 a year per student, with an absolute minimum of $69 in hikes which are "out of the University's control" according to Hampton.

The Building Authority Project dorms, the remaining dorms on campus, show a projected increase in Hampton's figures of $107 a year per student, with an absolute minimum of $64.

Hampton suggested a number of possible alternatives aimed at cutting corners where possible to ease the financial burden on the student. The major possibilties were:

1) The closing of one or two dormitories in order to reduce out-of-pocket operating costs.

2) Charging a premium on single bedrooms in order to raise additional revenue. The suggested premium is $100 a year, with the Sylvan Area not included.

3) A change in the 21-year-old policy, making it impossible for a 21-year-old student to move off campus until the semester following his 21st birthday. The system now allows the student to more off campus for the semester in which he will turn 21.

Other possibilities included a charge for dormitory damage, allowing single occupants of a double room in Fall Semester to keep it for Spring Semester at the premium rate for a single room, and utilizing student rooms during intercessions and Spring vacation to house conferences.

At this point a somewhat angered Chiller placed before the assembled administrators a rather strong statement of Committee policy. The statement allowed for discussion of Hampton's suggested dorm closings and the premium charge for a single room, but put the possibility of a change in the 21-year-old policy "100% out of the question", in Chiller's words.

Chiller also put forth the possibility of a long-term plan which would make dormitory living and the buying of meal tickets optional to all students.

But the highlight of Chiller's policy statement was a demand for the administration to "present us a tighter budget." Campion objected to this demand on the grounds that the budget being presented was one with all money requests included and that he had brought it in this form so that the committee could help pare it down.

All of this cutting begins Saturday in Hampton's office in Whitmore where he will sit down with members of the committee and work on the budget. Housing will be the topic before the committee once again next Thursday and on a regular basis until all fees, including such things as the Campus Center fee and possible Food Service increases are discussed and settled on.

Fac-Sen OK's Vet Study, Individual Concentration

By JIM DEMPSEY

Approved by the Faculty Senate yesterday were motions providing for the formation of a committee to study Veteran's problems on campus and the permanent establishment of the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration.

A motion by Professor Howard Brogan concerning personnel appointments on Orchard Hill was withdrawn and a new credit evaluation policy for transfer students was adopted.

Henry Bouffard, Veteran's representative, won the Senate's endorsement for the formation of a committee to study Veteran's problems and recommend changes. This action came as the result of more than a year of efforts by Bouffard in behalf of the veterans.

Bouffard said that he and his group are interested in the financial, academic and psychological problems of the returning veterans--problems which he feels are serious and cannot afford to be neglected. Supporting the need for such a committee, Bouffard cited the differences between the veterans and non-veterans on campus. Veterans are older, have different goal desires and are here to get as much out of schooling as they can.

What a Senate member termed, "One of the better educational programs on campus," was permanently established by the Senate, following an overwhelmingly successful two year trial period. The Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration (BDIC) was described by Professor Joseph Burroughs, a participant in the trial program, as one of the most exciting, challenging and stimulating programs he's ever been involved with.

Under this program, any person is allowed to choose the fields or combination of fields he wishes to major in, studying independently under the supervision of a sponsoring advisory professor.

Professor Howard Brogan withdrew his motion requesting the administration not to process any recommendations from the Orchard Hill Personnel Committee, until these issues have been studied. This action came after Vice-Chancellor Robert Gluckstern assured him that the Residential College committee faculty appointments would not be favored by the Administration.

Gluckstern encouraged the Residential College to identify and provide information on faculty appointments they feel would be desirable, and to work together with the existing Departments on campus to recommend to the University the appointment of those people to the Residential College.

He further encouraged all units on campus to identify such requests and bring them to the Administration's attention.

Brogan then announced that in the future, the Orchard Hill Personnel Committee will deal only with promotions, dismissals and evaluation of the staff.

All incoming transfer students with an Associate Arts Degree from an accredited community college will be given junior status and full credit for the University core requirements. Under this new policy, a student can transfer to UMass from a Massachusetts community college without losing credit or time. This also includes current Massachusetts residents, who may have attended out-of-state community colleges.

This new policy will not be retroactive, however.

A motion concerning teaching loads and the proposed standard of twelve instructional contact hours, was referred to the Rules Committee, when it was discovered that the Committee acted illegally. Apparently they were supposed to acquire information, not make recommendations--as they did.

Sending it back to the Ad Hoc Committee on Teaching loads for action, would legitimize their proposals.

President Robert Wood is due to discuss the proposed budget cuts, at next Thursday's meeting of the Faculty Senate.

Decision On SUG Board By-Laws Expected Soon From Bromery

By MDC STAFF

At the close of last night's regular SUG Board meeting, it appeared that the current difficulties with Article 7 of the SUG Board By-Laws would be resolved shortly. Certain members of the Board along with a representative of Acting-Chancellor Bromery reached a compromise which they feel will be acceptable to the other members of the SUG Board, Dr. Bromery, and the management of the Campus Center.

The Acting-Chancellor will review the new draft of Article 7 today, and will probably communicate his approval or disapproval of it sometime today also. The SUG Board will take up Article 7 along with the rest of their By-Laws at their next meeting this coming Thursday night.

The original draft of Article 7 was vetoed by Bromery yesterday. It had given SUG Board the power to hire and fire the management staff of the Campus Center, always subject to the approval of the Chancellor and technically the Board of Trustees.

The new proposal for Article 7, drawn up last night, follows below:

Article VII. Personnel Procedures: The Board Chairperson will receive from the Director notification of openings of any professional positions.

The Chairperson will at that time appoint a search committee of not less than three (3) Board members to nominate to the Board the candidates to fill the position.

The SUG Board shall have the major role in the recruiting and selection process for all professional positions. If the Chancellor should reject the nomination of the SUG Board, the reasons will be stated in detail to the Board.

No appointment will be made without the approval of the Board or its properly designated committee.

Procedures for dismissal of a staff member may be considered by the Board. The Board may, if it chooses at this time, create a committee of not less than three (3) Board members to investigate the pending dismissal. A staff member may be recommended to the Chancellor for dismissal by a two-thirds (2/3) vote of the Board members.

If the Chancellor should reject a dismissal action, the reasons will be stated to the Board in detail.

No dismissal will be made without the approval of the Board or its properly designated committee. Such actions are to be considered in executive session if requested by the staff member under consideration.

'The Game' Is Coming

By ANNE SMITH

After some discussion, a motion was made by SUG Board Management Committee and passed by the Student Union Governing Board last night to allow application for a license to sell lottery tickets at the Campus Center at the general meeting. These tickets, sold by SUG Board will bring a 5% revenue income.

Also discussed at the regular meeting were the SUG Board By-Laws, which were vetoed by Acting Chancellor Bromery. Chancellor Bromery's letter concerning the By-Laws was read, and it was decided that the By-Laws and some amendments be discussed at next week's meeting.

The Space Committee made a motion to move the Pool Room from Rm. 218 to 208L (the old University Store opposite the Hatch) and that Rm. 218 will be utilized as a card room and lounge. The motion was passed, after little discussion.

Other Committee minutes were read during the meeting, and the problem of stray and unleashed dogs in the Campus Center was brought up. A decision was made to see about giving the CC employee currently removing the dogs, legal sanction to remove the dogs from the building. There was some question concerning the legality of the current policy, which is assigning the job of removing dogs to a Campus Center employee, who has not been duly appointed by any authority such as the Town of Amherst.

Nixon Proposes Bills To Help Business

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon proposed to Congress Thursday a sweeping program of tax aids, credit help and liberal application of the antitrust laws to stimulate a partnership effort of government and business to develop new and usable technologies.

In a special message to Congress, Nixon said the fruits of accelerated research and development should be applied to solving the nation's social and economic problems and bolstering American leadership in trade competition.

The message listed some of the targets:

—New sources of energy without pollution.

—Fast, safe, pollution-free transportation.

—Measures to reduce the loss of life and property from earthquake, hurricanes and other natural disasters.

—Improvement of drug abuse rehabilitation programs and curb drug trafficking.

—Increasing research efforts aimed at cures for cancer and heart disease and other killer ailments.

Today Is The Equinox

Today is the vernal equinox. Night and day are the same length, to the minute. Throughout man's history it and the autumal equinox have held great meaning culturally and spiritually for man.

Five thousand years ago a tribe of Druids built in England what we know as Stonehenge. It has three circles of stone arches inside one another, each stone weighing an average of five tons. On the two equinoxes, the first ray of light at sunrise and the last ray at sunset travel through three arches and strike an altar at the exact mathematical center of the three circles. The ray holds on the altar for a moment, only long enough to acknowledge the gods.

Weather

Eastport to Block Island--Winds increasing to 20 to 25 knots today. Cloudy with showers continuing throughout the day. Variable visibility to less than one mile in rain and fog. Heavy fog later today. Caution: Good Ship Lollipops sighted off Nantucket in shipping lanes and may cause problems to merchant ships.

Athletic Council Passes First Hurdle

The amendment to the Fac-Sen's constitution to reorganize the Athletic Council passed its first presentation to the general faculty yesterday.

Another amendment, which would have limited Fac-Sen powers to academic matters only was killed.

The Athletic Council motion will now be presented again to the University Faculty for final approval in mid- April.

The 90 faculty members in attendance also heard the first readings on two additional amendments including the one which would change the composition of the Athletic Council.

The faculty did adopt two motions concerning the calling of general faculty meetings.

Professor Robert R. Wellman, secretary of the Faculty Senate, said in an interview that in order for an amendment to become constitutional law it must first come before the general faculty for a first reading.

He said that after the first reading the amendment will be brought up to another general faculty meeting, where a simple majority of the members present, is necessary to make the amendment constitutional law.

Wellman said April 13 or 20 has been set as tentative dates for the next general faculty meeting.

As was expected, the main discussion of the morning session centered around the Athletic Council proposal. The amendment would essentially change the professional staff-student ratio on the council from ten-one to six-five.

The director of athletics under the proposal would be a member without voting privileges. Council meetings would also be open to the campus community, except in extraordinary circumstances.

The amendment provides for a five-member alumni committee, which would make recommendations to the Athletic Council, and promote ways of obtaining greater alumni support for the university's athletic interests.

Much of the discussion concerning the council amendment emphasized the fact that alumni were being thrown off the Council. The amendment cuts alumni representation from four to one, the Executive Vice-President of the Alumni Association being the sole representative.

Fac-Sen member Bernard N. Bussel made a motion to amend the Athletic Council motion. His amendment would have retained the Alumni representation while including three more students on the Council. Bussel's motion was defeated.

Lee Sandwen, President of the Student Senate, said the purpose of the amendment is not to cut down on alumni support, but to insure that students receive the type of representation in proportion to their own interests and financial support of the athletic program.

The other amendment, which would add the president of the University to the Senate as an ex officio voting member, met with no negative debate from the faculty, and was sent to the next general meeting for a vote.

The first motion adopted at yesterday's meeting would authorize that meetings of the general faculty may be called by the president or chancellor, by motion of the Faculty Senate, or by petition of 10 per cent of the faculty to the president, chancellor, or secretary of the Faculty.

The second motion authorizes that an agenda for meetings of the general faculty be published by the secretary of the Faculty at least five working days prior to the meeting.

It also stipulates that emergency meetings of the general faculty may be called on 24 hours notice to faculty members through department heads or chairmen.

Another motion, which would change the responsibility of certifying baccalaureate and graduate degrees from the general faculty to the Faculty Senate, was not brought up for consideration since it was not placed on the written agenda.

Wellman said the motion would be brought up for consideration at the next general faculty meeting.

Draft Call-up Announced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Draft Director Curtis W. Tarr today directed his 4,100 draft boards to order men born in 1952 who have lottery number 1 through 15 to report for Army duty on dates from mid-April through May 31.

The action is expectedto fill most, but not all, of the 15,000-man request for April, May and June. Tarr said he will issue the June call no later than early May.

One reason for the uncertainty of how much of the 15,000-man call will be filled, Tarr said, is that this is the first time the Uniform National Call has been used. Under this, men are ordered into service on a nationwide basis.

Previously specific quotas were levied on individual states and local boards. As a result, all boards did not reach the same lottery-number ceilings.

Selective Service officials estimated between 11,000 and 12,000 will be called in April and May, with the main men involved classed ay 1A or 1AO conscientious objectors. The latter includes those willing to do noncombat military duty who were in the lottery held last August for men turning 20 this year. It does not affect those in the recent lottery, who were assigned numbers for next year's callup.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal judge has ordered all California draft boards not to assign conscientious objectors to civilian duty before they would have been inducted had they been 1A registrants.

U.S. District Court Judge Alfonso J. Zirpoli's temporary restraining order came Wednesday in a class action suit filed by Lawrence Remley Levi of Riverside County.

It followed on the heels of a similar order in which U.S. District Court Judge Charles B. Renfrew barred San Jose Local Draft Board 62 from ordering two-year work terms for conscientious objectors in a suit filed on behalf of Thomas Edward Piercy.

Newspapers which printed A207 of Jan. 4 from Monrovia, Liberia, about the celebration of the inauguration of President William Tolbert, may wish to use the following.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Associated Press reported erroneously from Liberia last Jan. 4 that Billy Graham, the Evangelist, danced the cha-cha during an inaugural ball for President William Tolbert.

Graham attended a banquet after the inauguration of Tolbert, an ordained Baptist minister, but he left the state dinner to visit with missionaries when the after-dinner production began.

The erroneous report that he had danced the cha-cha resulted from a garble in the transmission of copy from Monrovia.

Young Republicans Anti-Nixon

NEW YORK (AP) — Politically conservative young people will not work or vote for President Nixon's re-election, says Ron Docksai, national chairman of the Young Americans for Freedom. Nor are they likely to support Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, he adds.

"Most YAF people I talk with say they will work for local candidates or sit out the election," Docksai said in an interview. "Nixon has completely disavowed the 1968 Republican platform and everything we thought he would do."

While YAF's 60,000 members across the country do not constitute a large voting bloc, they are hard workers.

Wallace winner of the Democratic party in Florida, would not be acceptable to young conservatives as a presidential candidate, said Docksai.

"I could not under any circumstance vote for him," he said. "He is not a conservative. He is a reactionary. If conservatives support Wallace, it would eventually undermine the conservative movement."

Where else can young conservatives go?

In the rank of Democratic presidential contenders, Docksai said, Sens. Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota probably would be more acceptable than Nixon to young conservatives.

"The main rationale for Jackson," said Docksai, "is that he would not be more liberal than Nixon. On national defense, he comes closer to representing our views. On economics, though, we don't agree with him, at least we know where he stands."

Were Humphrey elected president, he said, "his policies would not be much more liberal than Nixon's."

Many YAF members are working for Rep. John Ashbrook of Ohio, a conservative challenger for the Republican nomination. But Docksai said the best that can be hoped is that Ashbrook's candidacy will point out to Nixon the unhappiness of the party's conservative wing.

Ashbrook, who remains the only challenger to Nixon for the Republican nomination, received 10 per cent of the votes in the New Hampshire primary and nine per cent in the Florida primary.

Due to the increased number of applications being processed for the fall semester, staff limitations, and the extra burden imposed by a quota system, the Graduate School has found it necessary to close the Graduate Admissions Office one day a week. Effective February 25 the Graduate Admissions Office will be closed for business ON ALL FRIDAYS THROUGH APRIL 14. Telephone inquiries and requests for admissions materials will be handled on those days by the receptionist in the second floor lobby of the Graduate Research Center.

Pay Board Trims Longshoremen Raise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Braving threats of a renewed West Coast dock strike, the Pay Board Thursday trimmed a 20.9 per cent longshoremen's raise by about one-fourth.

There was no immediate comment from Harry Bridges, president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, who had repeatedly promised to shut down Pacific ports if the board trimmed so much as a penny from the pact.

In Los Angeles, President John Pandora of ILWU local 13 said his members are under orders to take no action until Bridges gives instructions.

The ILWU struck West Coast Ports for 134 days to win the contract. Both the union and the employer group, the Pacific Maritime Association, had urged the Pay Board to approve it to reward dockers for past increases in productivity.

The Pay Board staff said stevedoring firms saved up to $1 billion in reduced labor costs since the union leberalized work rules in 1960.

Nevertheless, business and public members of the board outvoted labor members 8 to 5 to reject the new contract as inflationary.

By board calculations, the longshoremen now receive an average of $7.43 an hour in wages and fringe benefits. The board figured the first year of the new contract would increase that by 16 per cent in wages and overtime, and by 4.9 per cent in management contributions to pension and welfare funds.

By a second vote of 8 to 6, the board empowered Chairman George H. Boldt to approve the settlement if the wage figure is reduced from 16 per cent to 10 per cent. The entire 4.9 per cent fringe package would be approved.

Thus the board said it would approve a total increase of 14.9 per cent in both wages and fringes. This is higher than the 8.9 per cent increase that would have been allowed under the board's standard guidelines, including standard exceptions above its 5.5 per cent basic guideline.

"The extra allowances were made in recognition of the necessity of producing the income and retirement security which has helped to foster efficient industry production leading to significantly greater output with a continuously declining work force," Boldt said in announcing the action.

Boldt read a statement and declined to answer newsmen's questions.

Bridges had said that the International Longshoremen's Association would join him by striking East and Gulf Coast ports, but ILA officials have not confirmed any pledge of joint action.

The ILA has settled its own contract disputes in many East and Gulf ports with a basic agreement calling for roughly a 15 per cent increase in wages and fringes in the first year. The ILA contracts also must be decided by the Pay Board.

Two Die In N. Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Two persons died Thursday night in more violence in Northern Ireland. The deaths on the eve of St. Patrick's Day brought Ulster's toll in 31 months of bloodshed to 278.

A woman was killed in the explosion of a bomb in a public bathroom. Casualties from separate shooting incidents were one dead and four wounded.

Muskie Changes Game-Plan

(AP) — Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine reportedly is planning a tougher stance in coming presidential primaries following his poor showing against Democrat George C. Wallace in Florida's primary this week.

Muskie's image as the front-runner for the Democratic nomination was damaged when the Alabama governor, who hit hard on busing, received 42 per cent of the Florida vote compared with Muskie's 9 per cent.

Accident Kills 9

LUTON, England (AP) — About 150 vehicles crashed in a chain of pileups on a fogged-in major highway Thursday. Nine persons were killed and 51 others were injured, police said. Some of the victims were trapped for hours in wrecked cars and trucks.

Crashes occurred along six miles of the motorway that links London to the north of England. At least 90 vehicles smashed into each other in one of the crashes.

Nevada Wants to See Howard

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The Nevada Gaming Control Board demanded on Thursday a face-to-face meeting with Howard Hughes before it will recommend approval of licensing for top-level executives of the Hughes Tool Co.

Control Board Chairman Phil Hannifin said past state dealings with the recluse billionaire "have diminished the integrity and dignity of the state of Nevada."

Arabs Protest New Plan

(AP) — Arab protests mounted Thursday over King Hussein's plan to make the occupied west bank of the Jordan River into a Palestinian state once the Israelis withdraw. But the Arab governments appeared unable to agree on a joint course of action against the plan, which envisages joining the new state to Jordan under Hussein's rule.

In Beirut, the Palestinian guerrillas rejected the king's plan and called on the masses to "take immediate steps to meet this grave challenge to the entire Arab nation."

A spokesman said they differed on the question of establishing a guerrilla-sponsored Palestinian government in exile.

"The idea was shelved, at least temporarily, to avoid intimidating some Arab regimes," he said.

The semi-official Cairo newspaper Al Gumhouriya hinted Egypt might break off diplomatic relations with Jordan, but the government remained silent.

In Jerusalem, the Knesset, or parliament, adopted a resolution which neither supported nor rejected the king's plan.

Adopted after a speech by Premier Golda Meir, in which she dismissed the proposal as a gimmick, the resolution said of the plan only that Mrs. Meir's speech asserted "the historical right of the Jewish people" to the state of Israel. Israel was created from what formerly was known as Palestine.

Moscow Trip May 22

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon has set May 22 as the starting date for his visit to Moscow for his second summit talk with Communist leaders aimed at "enhancing the prospects for world peace."

The White House announced the date Thursday and said Nixon probably would spend a week in the Soviet Union-about the same time he spent in Red China last month.

Few details of the visit have been announced, and it has not been said whether the President and Mrs. Nixon will travel to any other cities in the Soviet Union.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said there has been no decision on whether Nixon will also visit another country. So far, though, Ziegler said, there were no such plans; and he would not discuss speculation on any particular country, including reports that Nixon might go to Poland.

Because of an eight-hour time difference, Ziegler said, the President might make a rest stop en route to Moscow as he did on the way to Peking but the visit in Moscow itself starts May 22.

A working delegation will accompany the President, including Secretary of State William P. Rogers and National Security Adviser Henry Kissinger.

Ziegler said Nixon would meet with Russia's three top leaders and "will review all major issues with a view toward further improving bilateral relations and enhancing the prospects for world peace."

The leaders Nixon will see are Leonid Brezhnev, Nikolai Podgorny and Alexei Kosygin.

While discussions are expected on a broad range of issues from the Middle East to European security, Ziegler said he would not comment on whether there would be any agreement reached on strategic-arms limitation or any other subject while the President is in Moscow.

Unlike the visit to China, which has no diplomatic relations with the United States, Ziegler said there would be no need for Kissinger or other top-level officials to make any advance trips. But a technical team will go in to make arrangements.

On the Chinese trip, 87 members of the news media went along. This time, Ziegler said, "our objective will be to have as many members of the press go as possible, including represenatives of newspapers, magazines, television and radio."

The actual members will depart in part on what the Soviet Union will allow, he said.

V.C. Launch "Heavy" Drive

SAIGON (AP) — South Vietnamese forces reported Thursday they had destroyed another base camp in their drive into eastern Cambodia. In South Vietnam, the enemy launched the heaviest attacks in a month.

Field reports said the camp, the fourth destroyed in the week-long sweep, was a training center for about 600 enemy troops 15 miles inside Cambodia and 85 miles northwest of Saigon.

The Saigon command claimed that so far in the drive, its forces have killed 187 enemy troops, with South Vietnamese losses at 5 killed and 51 wounded. Most of the enemy casualties were from air and artillery strikes, it added.

The government's 7,000-man task force was sent into Cambodia a week ago to destroy enemy bases and upset any North Vietnamese plans for attacks in the Saigon area.

The Saigon command said there were 41 enemy attacks in South Vietnam during the 24-hour period that ended at dawn Thursday, the highest number since Feb. 7.

Most of the assaults were in the coastal lowlands province of Quang Ngai, where informants in the field said a high point of enemy activity was reached in the past 24 hours.

There were at least 10 different attacks in the province, informants said, and most of them were along main national Highway 1.

For the most part, the targets of the attacks appeared to be local militia units, such as the popular and regional forces and home guard units known as the peoples' self-defense force.

North Vietnamese forces Thursday shelled a South Vietnamese army outpost guarding the demilitarized zone in the 12th consecutive day of such attacks. Alpha 3, an outpost along the DMZ, received three rounds of 122mm rocket fire but no casualties were reported.

U.S. B52 bombers flew six missions in South Vietnam, three of them in northern Quang Nam Province and the others in Kontum Province in the central highlands.

POW Demands Ignored

PARIS (AP) — The United States put six demands to the Vietnamese Communists Thursday for liberalizing prisoner of ward conditions, but received no specific response.

The Communists insisted that the prisoners are being humanely treated. The North Vietnamese added that if the United States "responds seriously" to the Communist peace plan American prisoners could return home before Easter.

At the first peace talks in three weeks, U.S. Ambassador William J. Porter asked the Communists to permit impartial inspection of prisoner of war camps. He also made five other demands, all based on the Geneva convention on war prisoners.

He added a new twist to the inspection demand. He asked the Communists: "Would you be prepared to accept impartial visits to prisoners in return for a firm undertaking by both sides to refrain from efforts to liberate prisoners from the locations visited?"

The North Vietnamese have said they fear that if even neutral inspectors are permitted into the camps, they will provide the United States with information permitting new commando raids in an effort to free the prisoners. Such a raid was made by the Americans at Son Tay in North Vietnam in late 1970, but no prisoners were found.

The peace talks were last held on Feb. 24 but the Communists walked out after 17 minutes to protest U.S. air raids on North Vietnam.

The United States and South Vietnam refused to attend the next two weekly meetings in protest against the walkout and an anti-American peace meeting at Versailles.

Porter made these other demands:

Repatriation of the seriously sick and wounded prisoners; full information "on those of our men whom you hold captive or known to be dead;" regular information on seriously sick and wounded prisoners; permission for the prisoners to correspond regularly with their families, and internment in netural countries of sick and wounded prisoners and those who have undergone a long period of captivity.

Porter read into the conference record President Nixon's proclamation March 10 making the period of March 26 through April 1 "national week of concern for prisoners of war and missing in action." The proclamation said there are 1,623 American servicemen and some 50 U.S. civilians "either missing in action or being held captive by North Vietnam and its allies."

North Vietnam has acknowledged holding 349 American prisoners. The Viet Cong have permitted 18 American prisoners to write home, but have never provided a list of prisoners.

Asked about this, a Viet Cong spokesman indicated it was impossible to provide such a list because of the continuing American bombing raids on South Vietnam which create communication difficulties. He said that if the United States responds favorably to the Communist peace plan, the prisoner issue "can be settled rapidly."

Wallace Ready For Wisc.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Gov. George C. Wallace, victor in the Florida primary, moves into Wisconsin next week for the first of 12, and perhaps 13, more primaries in his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination.

He is counting most heavily, his campaign people say, on seven key states where he figures he can make the best showing-Wisconsin on April 4, Pennsylvania April 25, Indiana May 2, Tennessee May 4, North Carolina May 6 and Maryland and Michigan on May 16.

They have a total of 623 votes at the nominating convention in Miami Beach.

Wallace is running also in the Rhode Island primary April 11, Massachusetts April 25, Nebraska and West Virginia May 9, and New Mexico June 6. He is on the ballot in Oregon, but whether he will campaign actively for the May 23 primary there is undetermined.

The Alabama governor-who ran far ahead of 10 other candidates in Florida's primary Tuesday, getting 42 per cent of the votes and 75 of the state's 81 convention delegates-returned Thursday to the usual chores of his office.

Wallace's first campaign appearance of the year in Wisconsin will be on the night of March 23 at a rally in the City Auditorium. It was in Wisconsin where he ran in his first presidential primary eight years ago and made a surprisingly strong showing.

Bangladesh Aid Tied Up

DACCA (AP) — Rice and wheat are so piled up in the ports of Bangladesh that shipments from abroad have virtually halted. Relief officials say the clogged grain pipeline stems from congestion in warehouses at the ports.

U.N. officials report 229,000 tons of food grain-a six-week supply-is backed up in the ports, unable to move inland because of disrupted communications and lack of transport. Another 66,000 tons of grain are in government warehouses in the interior, where the bulk of the new nation's 75 million people live.

The relief officials say 11,143 tons of wheat from Switzerland and the United States, and 18,300 tons of rice from the United States are all that is scheduled to arrive in the ports of Chittagong and Chalna in the next 90 days. With the officials hoping to keep at least 150,000 tons of grain moving each month, this 29,443 tons will amount to only a 10 days' supply. There has been slow response to a world-wide appeal three weeks ago for $626 million in aid for Bangladesh.

Toni Hagen, Swiss director of the U.N. relief program in Dacca, has met Prime Minister Mujibur Rahman twice this week to discuss the faltering program.

A week ago, Hagen said the U.N. program and the two dozen voluntary relief organizations operating under its umbrella would pull out unless the government started unloading and moving more grain. He says he has noted some improvement.

Relief sources say the government has rejected a U.N plan to spend $6 million clearing sunken ships from the harbors of Chittagong and Chalna, and apparently agreed instead to accept a Soviet salvage proposal outside of U.N. auspices.

They also say that rice in private stocks has been depleted by widespread smuggling across the border to India where prices are higher. Sheik Mujib has called for the formation of citizens' committees in the northern border areas to combat the smuggling.

ITT On Good Business

WASHINGTON (AP) — Harold S. Geneen, president of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. testified Thursday his company's commitment to help underwrite the cost of the Republican National Convention was "a damned good business investment."

Geneen said ITT's subsidiary, the Sheraton Hotel chain, would have been just as willing to help underwrite the Democratic National Convention or a gathering of road builders as a means of opening its new hotel in San Diego with a flourish.

The GOP convention will be held in San Diego next August.

Geneen told the Senate Judiciary Committee a $200,00 commitment to the San Diego convention bureau was "not by any means a political contribution."

The committee is reconsidering the nomination of Richard G. Kleindienst to be attorney general and probing his role as deputy attorney general on July 31, 1971, when ITT reached an out-of-court settlement of three antitrust suits with the Justice Department.

Kleindiest, who asked that the hearings on his nomination be reopened, has denied any improper role in the settlement or any knowledge of the ITT commitment before the case was decided.

The committee plans no new vote on his nomination, but the controversy has delayed approval by the full Senate.

The hearings began after columnist Jack Anderson published a memo written by ITT lobbyist Mrs. Dita Beard, which draws a connection between the ITT settlement and the conglomerate's convention pledge.

In Town

On Landlords And Tax

By CHARLEY BERKOW

The members of the Amherst Town Meeting were asked to play judge as well as legislature and rule on two articles of questionable legality: farmland tax assessment and potential landlords.

They did that, and more, as they plowed through the last 23 articles on the warrant for this year's Town Meeting.

Wednesday night's meeting was the completion of Monday night's meeting. It lasted three hours and was held in Amherst Regional High School.

A controversial bill to change the farmland tax assessments despite claims that it is unconstitutional was passed at the meeting.

The change is intended to preserve farmed lands in Amherst by assessing them at their agricultural value, rather than at their development value.

The bill would probably be ruled unconstitutional by the state, according to Attorney Stephen Mankin. This is because it provides preferential tax treatment to farmers.

However, the bill will become effective only after approval in November of a state-wide referendum. This referendum will cover substantially the same ground as the bill passed by the Town Meeting.

The bill also will not become effective until the town receives a statement from the state Attorney General saying it is legal in his opinion.

The main result of the bill is to show farmers in the area that the town supports them. The farmers will get no actual relief, if they get any, until 1974.

The Town Meeting later amended a Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee bill, which would have amended the Zoning by-laws.

Developers considering building apartments in Amherst would have been required to meet with the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee to discuss Amherst apartment standards.

The measure passed allows the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee to request meetings with developers to discuss local apartment-letting standards and procedures.

The meetings between the Committee and the developer will be non-mandatory and non-binding.

The Town Meeting passed an article which will require landlords owning land in Amherst but not living in Hampshire County to designate an agent living in town.

Landlord's not designating an agent living in town will "be deemed to have designated the Town Clerk as such agent..." in the words of the bill

Attorney Richard Howland explained that the agents, or the Town Clerk, would serve only as mechanisms through which tenants or town inspectors could serve legal papers to landlords.

He said the measure would place little additional burden and no legal liability on the agents or the Town Clerk.

He said that the bill would help to even out the legal imbalance between landlords and tenants.

In other business, the Town Meeting:

—Defeated a proposal to hire a professional consultant to make an extensive survey of the town's personnel classification system, salary schedule, personnel by-law and personnel record system;

—Appropriated $25,000 for final planning of the Center School Complex; —Made several amendments in the zoning by-laws including rezoning a piece of land north of UMass to allow light industry.

—Directed the Town Moderator, William Field, to appoint a committee of people to study town meeting procedures and practices;

—Authorized the Counsel on Aging to operate a transportation project for senior citizens;

—Appropriated $108,000 for new vehicles and vehicle improvements; and —Voted to hold town meetings every October.

So I said to him, "Look Fred, for once in your life listen to me. I know I've been wrong before, but after working a farm for 35 years you just get a feeling that your right in a case like this."

But you know Fred, he just mumbled something about senile old man, and kept right on plowing. I said, "Go ahead, you fool. You'll see. A half-tank of gas 'll never finish that field." (Photo by Al Chapman)

Busing Halt

Without going into details, Nixon said the legislation also would "establish an educational bill of rights for Mexican-Americans, Puerto Ricans, Indians and others who start their education under language handicaps to make certain that they, too, will have equal opportunity."

On one point, Nixon did not have to wait for congressional action. He announced he is directing the Justice Department to "intervene in select cases where the lower courts have gone beyond the Supreme Court's requirements in ordering busing."

Here is a summary of President Nixon's statement on busing Thursday night:

MORATORIUM—He wants Congress to pass legislation halting all new court-ordered busing, and requiring every school district to provide equal educational opportunity for all children.

LITIGATION—He wants the Justice Department to intervene in desegregation cases where lower courts "have gone beyond the Supreme Court's requirements in ordering busing."

MONEY—He wants Congress to appropriate more than $2.5 billion over the next year to improve education for poor children.

GOALS—He wants a national commitment to upgrading central-city schools and providing better educational opportunity for all.

Hub Drug Program Challenged

BOSTON (AP) — A Boston city councilor charged Wednesday that there have been 10 deaths in five months among young people participating in the city's methadone maintenance programs and challenged proposed increases in appropriations for the city's drug treatment program.

Councilor Joseph M. Tierney opposed the proposed $128,000 increase in the drug program and budget. The city "should not be in the drug-pushing business," he said.

Methadone is a synthetic heroin substitute used to allay the addict's craving for the drug. In theory, methadone maintenance programs eliminate the addict's need to resort to crime to pay for his habit and avoid some of the debilitating effects of heroin use.

Tierney said the city's drug programs have failed.

Program to Help Drunk Drivers

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Convicted drunken drivers may get back on the road at the end of the automatic year's driver's license suspension, and may be better drivers when they do, under a new program sponsored by the Springfield Rotary Club.

District Court Judge Charles D. Sloan is promoting the program, in which volunteer faculty members from Springfield College will teach a four-week course called "driving after drinking." Convicted wet drivers will pay $15 for the course, which begins April 3.

"We hope we can prevent them from becoming alcoholics, and also save lives," said Judge Sloan.

Instead of the punitive approach, course graduates will be given a crack at returning to the road immediately after the automatic suspension. It is patterned after a pilot program in Phoenix, Ariz.

Living by Thievery

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — "With a great deal of reluctance," a special judge today appointed a public defender for a man who admitted in court he has made his living for two years by thievery.

When asked by Special Justice Joseph Goldberg in District Court how he had made his living the past two years, James R. Barrett replied, "I stole."

Barrett was arraigned on charges of non-support and larceny, and on a March 1971 complaint of assault and battery on Worcester policeman Joseph Guittar.

Goldberg, saying he was reluctant to do so, agreed with a probation officer that Barrett was eligible for a public defender.

Schools Reopen After Storm

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Schools reopened throughout western Massachusetts today after an unexpected late-winter snowstorm dropped from 8 to 14 inches of snow Tuesday and Wednesday, forcing school cancellations.

At least three deaths were attributed to the storm Wednesday. The victims all apparently suffered heart attacks while shoveling snow outside their homes in Wilbraham, South Hadley and Northampton.

Many traffic accidents were reported, but no fatalities. A tractor-trailer truck skid on Route 20 in Wilbraham, and ended up dangling from an overpass abutment Wednesday, where it was struck by a passing Penn Central freight train. No injuries were reported, and the truck's load of 40,000 pounds of potatoes was largely undamaged.

While this winter has been marked by mild, snowless periods, weather officials say temperatures have averaged near normal, and some areas said this week's storm makes above-normal snowfall.

U.S. Weather observer David Parrett in Chester said 116 inches have fallen in that hill town, compared to about 90 inches in a normal year.

Sarge "Inept" in Hakim Case

BOSTON (AP) — St. Louis officials said today they are investigating the "inept handling" by Gov. Francis Sargent and others of the extradition of convict Malik Hakim to face rape and attempted murder charges in Missouri.

Hakim, whose legal name is Albert Bradford, disappeared shortly before he was to surrender himself last Feb. 18 for extradition to Missouri to face the charges which are tied to an alleged act in 1968.

St. Louis Prosecuting Atty. Gene McNary said Sargent, Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn and Boston Police Commissioner Edmund L. McNamara had been "inept" in their handling of the case.

A spokesman for McNary said several attempts to have Hakim placed on the FBI's "10 most wanted" list have met with no success. He said federal agents have been scouring the country for Hakim but have produced no clues.

Hakim's attorney, William F. Homens, said he has not heard from his client since he disappeared.

Lotter Operation Questioned

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — One week before tickets go on sale for the new state lottery, questions abound over the operation of the lottery in western Massachusetts.

Selectmen here have questioned what Town Clerk John F. Crean will do with the 50-cent fee the state will pay him to validate winning tickets. Crean has refused to meet with the board tonight because being an agent is "about as big a deal as being a notary public," he said Wednesday.

Selectmen say it could be illegal for him to use town office for his own gain, if he keeps the fees.

Meanwhile, Springfield Mayor Frank H. Freedman is irked by the failure of state lottery officials to ask his city clerk, William Sullivan, to serve as a validation agent. Instead, the Springfield lottery office will validate winners' tickets, and the West Springfield validation center will serve the rest of the greater Springfield.

Lottery spokesman David R. Ellis said validation points were selected geographically.

Others are to be Northampton, Easthampton, Amherst, Ware, Greenfield and Orange.

Maple Syrup Price Doubles

ASHFIELD, Mass. (AP) — "There has never been a time when the prospect was as good to sell your product," according to an Ashfield maple sugar producer looking forward to a bumper crop this year.

Linwood Lesure, a director of the Berkshire Pioneer Maple Producers Assocation, said sap season begins during the next two weeks and he has about 4,000 taps connected to New England's famous maples.

He said Canada's supply of maple syrup is short this year, opening up the market for New England producers. He said he plans to sell syrup for $9 a gallon this year, more than double what he got for it last.

Springfield Serviceman Dead

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Funeral arrangements are incomplete for Air Force Sgt. Peter J. Ford, 21, of 435 Porter Lake Drive, who died Tuesday as the result of a motorcycle accident in Bitburg, Germany. He was a Brockton native and graduate of Technical High School here.

Budget Chairman on WMUA Tonight For Senate SATF

John Stevens, Chairman of the Student Senate Budget Committee will be on WMUA tonight at 7:15 discussing the 1972-73 SATF budget. He will be taking phone calls on the air.

The SATF budget is the money collected from the Student Activities Tax and given to RSO Registered Student Organizations) by the Student Senate. The total amount of money budgeted for next year is well over a half million dollars.

Stevens will explain how the money is allocated, how the groups go about applying and receiving the money, and the way in which the Budget Committee and the Student Senate decides who gets what.

The Student Activities Tax for this year was $35.50. The projected tax for 72-73 is $30, a five-dollar reduction. However, this figure is not final, as funds for Index and CCEBS have not been appropriated.

The budgets for some of the RSO groups are as follows: Area Governments, $88,661; Boltwood, $1,575; Draft Counselling, $6,850; WTOY, $60,595; Index, $1.00; JOE, $3,175; Room To Move, $2,885.

Stevens will discuss the entire budget tonight on WMUA.

Sex On Campus

The following fallacious information was written in the diary of a local journalist. It has been passed to me by reliable confidential sources.

"The telephone rang early on April 6. It was the Man and he said that the kids at Collegetown University were giving him a lot of static lately and he needed some justification for his recent budget cuts. He suggested I dig into the sex lives of the student body and find something that would outrage the taxpayers. I took the assignment since I was concerned if students were really breaking old moral barriers and creating a brave new world at the university, or if they still adhered to the "Big Bang" theory and saved themselves for the weekend orgy as I did in the old days. A few minutes later I received another call from a friendly FBI informer who informed me that he had learned of my acceptance of the task and that there was an empty room at the end of a corridor in Grayman Dorm and that no one would mind if I moved in for a couple of days. With this knowledge I packed my bag, left the secure confines of my Amherst apartment, and invaded the fast paced world of Joe College and Sally Coed.

Subjects for my interviews were easy to find. No sooner did I drop my suitcase on my bed than a typcial Collegetown coed walked into my room and jumped onto the other bed. I knew she was a typical Collegetown coed because of her distinctive uniform of faded jeans, grey T-shirt, barefeet, and absence of bra.

"Hi! What are you doing?"

"I'm just moving in," I said.

"No, I mean what are you moving in for?"

"Well, I have some work to do. You see, I'm interested in sex."

"Do you want a roommate?"

"No, no! You don't understand. I'm not interested in sex for myself. I'm interested in observing the sexual practices of students here at Collegetown U."

"Are you some kind of pervert? We don't do anything like that here. You'll have to go to Southeast. They're much more liberal there. It's the big city atmosphere."

"Wait, we don't seem to be communicating too well. Why don't I ask the questions?"

"Sure, go ahead and ask."

"Are male and female students on campus living together?"

"Yes, they have been for years."

"No, I mean living together in the same rooms."

"Why sure. Right on this corridor there's Jack and Mary, Bob and Alice, Henry and Sylvia, John and Joanne, and Dick and myself."

"But that's only five rooms. Who lives in the room across the hall from me?"

"Oh, I forgot. Sam and Michael."

"My goodness, only one normal student couple on the whole floor."

"They may be coupling, but they're not normal. They're homosexuals."

"Oh, I see."

"Are you sure you don't need a roommate for a few days? You could always call the Grayman Girls."

"Grayman Girls?"

"Yes, they're like geisha girls, only instead of serving you fried rice, they give you a hot tamale instead."

"I bet they do, but I'll pass this time. Back to the questions. Are you enjoying sex more and more?"

"Well, I haven't enjoyed it any less. What's your angle anyway? Why are you interested in the sex lives of students?"

"I'm trying to see if students are breaking down old moral barriers and are creating a new life style. Besides, if I dig up enough dirt here, I can write a real sleezy article and sell it to one of the Boston newspapers. The citizens of this state are concerned with the extracurricular activities that student are engaging in."

"I bet the Governor is, too!"

"How did you know he sent me!"

"I saw the Slarget for president sticker on your suitcase." I think I'll leave. I thought you were a nice guy, but you're too materialistic. Don't try to snoop into anyone else's private life either. It's no concern of yours. I'll tell them what you're after, and no one will give you any information. It's too bad. You've got a nice body but a messed up mind. See you around."

Well, after that she ambled out of my room and I decided to pick up my bag and go back to my apartment since the prospect of receiving honest data for my report seemed remote. What do these kids know about sex anyway? It's never any good unless you sneak around to get it. That's what I did in college. The rest of this bunch are probably just like her.

With that I left Collegetown U. I still wrote my article, however, and got it published in the paper. The Man called me after it was published and offered me a $300 bonus. I told him I couldn't accept it, however, because I had to protect my objectivity."

Bureaucracy: Ask and You Shall Find Out

The Board of Higher Education scholarships which were entitled to UMass applicants have obviously been delayed for a month now. And affected students across the campus are starting to cry out. "When do we get the scholarships money?!"

Financial Aid sources at Whitmore reported last week that the wait should go on until the end of March. The sources said that the original target date for distributing scholarship checks had been established for early February. "But being one of the most undermanned offices in the Commonwealth, the arrival of the scholarships can be anticipated much later."

The Financial Aid sources were as cooperative as they could be in revealing what they knew in regard to the delay. They openly pinned the blame on the Board of Higher Education and even hinted at one of the major reasons for the delay--that being the lack of their own computer system and the shorthanded staff.

But there are obviously other reasons, such as the long and dragged out "red tape" process. Financial Aid Office's knowledge of how the Board of Higher Education operates in its awarding of scholarships was scarce. So they suggested that Conrad Kohler, director of Financial Aid for the Board of Higher Education in Boston, be approached on the matter.

When asked in a phone conversation by this Collegian reporter about the nature of the delay and the administrative procedure which is conducted in the awarding of scholarships, Kohler snapped back impatiently and in a very cold tone of voice: "You must realize that we've been having administrative difficulty, but we're working on it."

"I can't give you a blow by blow description of what goes on here, if that's what you're asking for. You must realize that we don't operate out of our own computer system. We're working on it now and have made all the necessary arrangements. What more do you want?" Kohler replied.

Kohler was asked the same question again because this reporter was unsatisfied with his answer. This time he sarcastically asked a question of his own.

"Don't you know anything about administrative procedures? Apparently you're not familiar with administrative procedures."

Kohler, by this time, seemed quite anxious to break the conversation. A moment of silence passed before he pieced together his version as to why the scholarship money has been delayed.

"I just can't go to the bank and ask for so many thousand dollars to pay off scholarship funds. There's a complicated process whereby the scholarships are documented and approved through the governor's council and the checks are in turn initiated by the state treasurer."

Certainly there's more to it than that, Mr. Kohler.

Before the conversation ended, Kohler said that the Financial Aid Office in Whitmore has already been informed of the delay. "We will send the checks out as soon as we get them back from the State House."

'How soon?', can only be asked. A scholarship which was originally intended to knock $200 off the second semester bill, now in the middle of March, has yet to come. Many students had been counting on that money for educational costs.

Yet, despite the delay, those at the top remain unreceptive to the inquiries and resent having to formulate legitimate explanations which the respective students are entitled to hear. Why conceal the answers and pretend that there's no problem? Why be so secretive in dealing with scholarship procedures? If you lay out all the cards on the table, the circumstances could be better understood by all involved and corrective measures could be taken.

Fire And Brimstone

By REV. DR. JEREMIAH TAYLOR and REV. DR. PAUL D. RAKEFORD

It is our belief that everyone is entitled to his or her opinion, and it is therefore our opinion that the advocates of Women's Liberation should spread their communist subversive garbage where it belongs, (like in Russia or in China). These people have nothing better to do with their time than to pollute the minds of decent American girls who believe in hard work in the homes and schools of our country where it counts. I would like to see one of those dyke-loving perverts, who couldn't find a man if she baited him with a diamond mine; hold a job like secretarial or waitress work or even get it on as a housewife with loving devotion to family and husband, without hiding behind the [illegible] dogma and leading [illegible] girls astray. Do [illegible] the Bible that wo[illegible] man to serve hi[illegible] that c[illegible] communist countries there ain't no religion.) It really balls me to continually be confronted with these deluded glory-seeking fugitives from an enslaved society trying to bring their venom into our free minds and homes.

Just for the record, you will find that the greater majority of those creeps with the loudest mouths and so-called dedication are ugly, deformed or rejected divorcees who are blaming their misfortunes and inadequacies as Christian women on the very qualities of American life that makes democracy such a precious thing. Again I reiterate that everyone is entitled to their own beliefs and opinions, but to use democracy and freedom of Speech as a weapon to corrupt the very moral fibres ordained by God (like the institution of marriage and the sanctity of the home) is but another Communist plot hatched by the devil to lead us down the path of destruction. It further reads in the holy scripture that the head of every woman is man and the head of every man is Christ. It goes on to add, (according to St. Paul) that women should be in subjugation to man completely ruling out the absurd concept of equality. Man was made in the image of God placing upon him and NOT THE WOMAN the responsibility and dominion over the Earth. What then is this blasphemous notion of so-called sexual equality. Obviously nothing more than Satan's last ploy to join with Mao Tse Tung, Joe In Lie, Kosigin and all those other traitors to the kingdom of God to graft all the souls they can for more fuel for the embers of hell.

If it were not for the saving grace of God's love for man those of us who desire decency and love for our fellow man would have fallen victims to the forces of Satan. Fortunately in the light of the Lord, salvation is once again offered. It is written in the Bible and prophecized that "Indeed these are the last days and the handwriting is on the wall". It is a very easy thing to become confused and frustrated when we think of what horrible conditions mankind finds himself in today. The current problems of overpopulation, famine, disease, and war are all but mere signs of the return of Christ. However, unfortunately there are women who is seeking refuge but not in God, have given themselves up to their own vain imaginations and have in fact yielded to the temptations of the Devil. Instead of asking God's mercy they have attempted to find other solutions like that of birth control pills and abortion. These decadent, diseased emissaries of Satan have not only condemned themselves to hell but seek also to condemn with them our virtuous maidens of rightousness. Remember, salvation is offered only to the pure in heart and anyone who would advocate abortion and not consider it murder are condemned forever to burn in the LAKE OF FIRE AND BRIMSTONE.

Letters To The Editor

What's Brogan Up To?

To the Editor:

I'm very sorry that Howard Brogan took my comments about him and his relationship to Orchard Hill as a personal attack. Brogan has been the primary antagonist to Orchard Hill in the past few years, as I can remember it. To make a statement concerning his antiquated views on education and experimental colleges is to make a statement about the man. The fact that he considered my comments a personal attack disturbs me greatly, but at the same time reinforces my previous views about the man.

I was equally disturbed when I read "Brogan Replies" Brogan has presented many half-truths, misrepresentations, and inadequately backed allegations concerning the governance and curriculum of Orchard Hill. It is to these falsehoods that I direct my comments here.

Brogan charged that "new courses were set up and staffed with teachers unqualified by the usual standards". Furthermore, on the same topic he remarked that Fellows were not consulted about these courses. Presumably, he referred to the Fellows' approval of these courses. In the case of all curriculum committee meetings, all Fellows who were active in the College were sent written notices informing them of the dates of all meetings.

Over forty Fellows have presently been called and sent such notices to inform them of these meetings. There is no discrimination policy concerning membership on the curriculum committee, so perhaps Brogan's charges concerning it are merely a reflection of his feelings concerning the rejection of his ideas at these meetings.

Besides being an untrue allegation, Brogan's charge that the O.H. courses were taught by unqualified personnel was completely lacking in any evidence. His philosophy on education and faculty is that no one is competent to teach unless he holds a Ph.D. In the same way this reasoning is completely absurd, so is his argument concerning the quality of the Hill courses.

Brogan also erroneously stated the composition of the Orchard Hill Personnel committee as well as the situation in which it was created. There are seven student members on the committee, not eight as Brogan believes. Furthermore, the group (curriculum committee) that set up the Personnel committee was not "predominantly students" as he claims. All faculty who were even remotely associated with Orchard Hill were informed through the mail that there was going to be a meeting concerning the Personnel committee. There is no reasonable excuse that Brogan can offer why more faculty did not show up other than the fact that he wished they had.

Probably the best demonstration of Brogan's short-sighted reasoning was the following. "I respect students. However, I do not consider them to have the qualifications of faculty members on matters of curriculum and personnel". Orchard Hill, as even Mr. Brogan will attest, was set up as an experimental Residential College. Over the past ten years, the concept of the HILL as a residential college has changed as have many concepts of higher education.

It is logical that as time passes, ideas that will better accommodate newer philosophies of education will come about. The University is changing, Mr. Brogan. Orchard Hill is changing and developing both intellectually and educationally. Are You?

Larry Horowitz

School Of Ed.

To the Editor:

At present the School of Education needs (figuratively speaking) $100,000 worth of resources to deal with undergraduate advising.

Implementing the Completely Modularized Curriculum in the Fall of 1972 will add but a few thousand dollars to that burden increasing the resources necessary to $103,000 (figuratively speaking). Thus, whether or not the CMC had been passed, there still would exist the overriding problem of undergraduate advising. What is important, therefore, is that 1) whatever the undergraduate advising situation is has little to do with whether or not the School of Education goes to CMC, and 2) although there has been significant improvement over the last year, there is still a huge need for undergraduate advising at the School of Education.

In passing the CMC by a 20-0 vote the School Council understood this. It also knew that Dr. Dick Clark has been named Assistant Dean Designate for Undergraduate Education with a focus on advising. Also, the entire School of Education owes a debt of gratitude to Barbara Boulden who forced us to become aware of the magnitude of this problem by writing her letter to the Collegian and speaking out boldly at our School Council meetings.

One of the main problems at the School of Education has been the absence of undergraduate voices. More are needed and welcome. Barbara has become a member of the CMC Planning Committee and is working very hard to assure improvement in undergraduate advising and to see that undergraduate concerns are acted upon. She could use some help. If you are an undergraduate at the School of Education and would like to participate on this committee, you can contact Barbara (219 Butterfield, 5-2418) or the CMC Office (Room 227C, 5-0944).

To the Editor:

The Student Government Association of the University, through the Student Senate, has decided to initiate its own Lecture Note Program. The decision of the Student Senate to undertake this venture was largely in response to several unfortunate problems associated with the former note service.

One of the fears voiced by faculty members has been in the area of copyright to the materials given in lecture. The Student Senate's legal counsel Attorney Richard Howland has composed an agreement which would ensure that all copyrights will remain with the faculty member. Another area that has been under discussion is the fear that the students will use the notes in lieu of attending class. This is not the intent of the note program, but rather it is meant as a supplement to the course text and other materials given in class. The primary function of the Senate is to allow the student attending a class which is covered by the note program, the opportunity to devote his or her full attention to the lecturer and not to the task of writing notes for fifty minutes.

It is the hope of the Provost's Office and the Student Government that the faculty will cooperate fully with the Student Senate in this endeavor. We view this program as one which can serve as a viable assistance to the students in their class work.

If there are any objections to the Student Senate Lecture Note Program, please forward those objections through me so that I may communicate your dissatisfaction to those who are running the program. I cannot emphasize enough the willingness of the Student Senate to cooperate with the faculty in this matter so that together we might find ways to provide a better education for the students.

Editorial Points

With all the snowball fights happening around campus last night, we wonder if everyone really wants the end of Winter to come to UMass.

So the ITT admitted shredding some of its Dita Beard files. That's almost like asking the Faculty Senate to show its file of names of those faculty members committed to paying students for the Collegian, Campus Center, and other assorted goodies.

Renewal Of Faith

To the Editor:

Picture religious fellowship among Christian, Moslem, Jew, and Buddhist! Picture, if you will, religious fellowship among the various sects and schisms within each of these great religions! "Impossible!" you say.

Baha'u'llah, the Promised One of all Prophetic Cycles, reveals that the essential principles of love, peace, unity, and cooperation are renewed as divine commands in every Manifestation of God's teachings. A Manifestation is one who manifests the Attributes of God (i.e. Jesus, Moses, Muhammadan, Buddha and so on). The essence of religion is the same for a Christian, and a Moslem a Jew and a Buddhist.

Each Manifestation of God brings a second part of His teachings which are concerned with social order and are appropriate for the time and place of His Revelation. These divine laws consist of external practices such as diet, marriage, and similar ordinances.

A Manifestation of God has come to our World with direction to build a New World Order based on justice and love among all of the human family.

Baha'u'llah tells us in one of his books, Book of Certitude, about the station of each Manifestation:

> "Each manifestation of God has a distinct individuality, a definitely prescribed Mission, a predestined Revelation, and specially designated limitations. Each is known by a different Name and is characterized by a special attribute." (p 176)

In the second part of Baha'u'llah's teachings, the social teachings, Baha'u'llah tells mankind how they can have world unity and bring into fruition The Kingdom of God on Earth. The followers of Baha'u'llah are dedicating their life energies to establishing The Kingdom of God on earth. The Baha'i Faith is the instrument through which Baha'u'llah's followers are working toward world unity.

The Baha'i Fiath is an independent religion embodying two essential facts. The first is that the teachings of Baha'u'llah created a reality in the world of the soul never before existing and could not have existed apart from Him.

The second fact is that the Faith of Baha'u'llah, the Baha'i Faith, is a religion, standing in the line of true religions: Christianity; Islam; Judaism; and other Prophetic Faiths. The existence of the Baha'i Faith, like that of early Christianity, marks the return of faith as a direct and personal experience of the Will of God.

Today in over 56,000 communities on our planet, rich and poor, young and old, Arab and Jew, black and white, Hindu and Moslem are working together to build the Kingdom of God on Earth. They call themselves: Baha'is.

Sylvan Pit-Gouge

To the Editor:

The MDC "expose" on the "Sylvan Pit" (3/16/72) strikes a responsive note with me. For 15 years from 1952 to 1967 I worked in "watchdog" agencies in local communities, and I came away from that experience with a very negative reaction to the planning-contracting game. Local governments contract out all sorts of public works and 90% of them are completed late in spite of severe penalties for failure to complete projects on time, written into contracts as awarded.

I read in the Springfield Union in January, an article in which the contractor on the Sylvan pipeline job attributed slow progress to (1) "bad weather" and (2) slow delivery of needed material because of strikes. In the case of the UMass pipeline, the first excuse is phony in point of fact. Except for two weeks immediately after Thanksgiving, December and January were unusually mild and snowless. Not once since I came to Amherst in 1959 has this area lacked snow cover for most of December and January until this year. Furthermore, we had one of the latest first frosts on record in 1971.

It seems to me that the Sylvan pipeline job is tailor-made for an investigation by local Nader enthusiasts. If they do their homework, they might come up with all sorts of interesting information about how the University goes about planning and building, about how contractors are paid, whether the University enforces terms of its contracts, who makes contruction decisions, and whether or not the system as practiced conforms in general to the system as it is supposed to work. Such a research project would be a worthwhile educational experience as well as making a contribution to the science of managing capital investment.

A Word Of Warning

To the Editor:

A word of warning.

For the past week or so there have been many ads and signs posted around campus and in the Collegian telling of a wondrous movie called Zachariah, "A feature film written by Firesign Theatre in color with Country Joe and The Fish, The James Gang* George Tirebiter" to be shown this Saturday, March 18. This is a gross misstatement of fact.

The Firesign Theatre is responsible for writing one scene in the film which lasts about two minutes. As for the claim the George Tirebiter, well, I would certainly love to see the Firesign's fictitious character come to the screen, but he is absolutely not in Zachariah.

I don't know whether the sponsors of Saturday's showing are conscious or not of the lies they are spreading, but they should certainly be prevented from giving the Firesign any more "credit" than they deserve for their tiny part in the making of this bomb.

Bust Victims Get Support At Brandeis

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP)- Brandeis University students voted Wednesday to contribute $2,000 in Student Council funds toward the defense of eight students arrested in a dormitory drug raid.

Waltham police arrested six students in the raid near midnight March 4, and two others named in warrants surrendered later.

Their cases were continued to March 22 in Waltham District Court. The charges include illegal possession of drugs, being present where drugs are found and possession with intent to sell.

The student vote Wednesday was 449-336 in favor of appropriating the council funds to defend the eight, and 316-304 to make the sum $2,000.

Third World Alliance Begins

Through a concerted effort on the part of members of the Black, Asian, Chicano, Puerto Rican, American Indian and Third World foreign students in the Amherst community, a Third World Alliance has materialized on the UMass campus. The Alliance has been organized to articulate interests and to implement changes as defined by its constituents.

A meeting was held on Monday, March 13, 1972. In attendance were representatives from a cross-section of the Third World community. The meeting was held to establish the administrational and organizational structure of the Third World Alliance. The Alliance will resolve around three levels which will be responsible for policy- making, management and operations.

After the discussion of the organizational structure of the Alliance, the remainder of the meeting was spent on issues presently confronting Third World people in the community: these are the major issues discussed at the meeting.

1. It was suggested that the Alliance strive for more Third World Represenation on the University Fine Arts Council. This is an effort for Third World students to have more control of social events on this campus.
2. After hearing of proposed termination of funding for the on-campus COP program, the Alliance discussed possible moves against this decision, and aid for students unable to sustain themselves if the COP program seizes funding the on- campus students.
3. The Alliance feels strongly that Third World Students should have a voice in the Chancellor Search Committee. Third World Students concerned with this committee are asked to contact Jackie Berryman. (545-2751)
4. The Southwest Residential area has no Third World Head Residence or Resident Director. The Alliance will be working in this area to obtain positions for Third World posts.
5. Also discussed was the fact that Foreign students becoming more related to the Alliance because there is a lack of communication (between them and the University machinery).

The Alliance will welcome any and all active participation from Third World Peoples. Those interested should contact us at 310 Mills House, phone 545-0980 or see Acklyn Lynch 319 Mills House ext. 5-0815, Ingrid White ext. 5-2751 or Paul Chandler ext. 5-0031.

Gorman House Goes Foreign

Gorman House will have 65 language majors and language students living in the dormitory next semester.

Jim Cunningham, a freshman majoring in Russian is the originator and organizer of the Foreign Language Dorm Project. He says the purpose of the living arrangement is "to facilitate the everyday use and pronunciation of foreign languages."

Cunningham would also like to see the development of closer contacts between language majors and their departments and advisors. His program calls for the holding of classes and seminars in the dorm. Faculty would also be invited into the dorm and to the cultural activities sponsored by the group.

About 85-90 percent of those who have already signed up for the project are majoring in French, Russian, German, Spanish or Italian, Cunningham said.

He stated that originally, members of the project had hoped to use one of the smaller dorms but their residents were opposed to the idea. Their chief objection was that they might be forced to move out of their dorms.

"Gorman is suited to the project because it will have a larger number of vacancies in the Fall. Members of the project will only be moved into existing vacancies," Cunningham said.

Due to the increased number of applications being processed for the fall semester, staff limitations, and the extra burden imposed by a quota system, the Graudate School has found it necessary to close the Graduate Admissions Office one day a week. Effective Feburary 25 the Graduate Admissions Office will be closed for business on all Fridays through April 14. Telephone inquiries and requests for admissions materials will be handled on those days by the receptionist in the second floor lobby of the Graduate Research Center.

Health Education

Question: What information from students' medical records does the Health Services give out, with or without their consent?

Answer:. The Health Service does not give out information without the students' informed consent. A students' medical records are confidential and are not released without his written permission unless there is a clear danger to himself or to others in the community.

Question: What about information necessary for graduate school or employment applications?

Answer: No medical information is given to graduate or professional schools, government agencies, corporations, parents, faculty, administration, etc. Because written permission is sometimes obtained as a prerequisite for application to a graduate school or place of employment, it is in effect a coerced acquiescence.

Therefore, no information is provided for screening purposes even after the written permission has been received until the student has been consulted as to whether or not he really wishes even the minimum amount of information supplied.

Discussion with the individual student usually will lead to clarification of his wishes and the manner in which his best interest will be served.

Questions may be addressed to the Health Education Division of the Health Services.

Due to the increased number of applications being processed for the fall semester, staff limitations, and the extra burden imposed by a quota system, the Graduate School has found it necessary to close the Graduate Admissions Office one day a week. Effective February 25 the Graduate Admissions Office will be closed for business ON ALL FRIDAYS THROUGH APRIL 14. Population Control Urged

WASHINGTON (AP)-A presidential commission, in a dramatic series of recommendations to control America's growing population, advocates an easing of laws restricting abortion, sex education and fertility control.

The report, issued Thursday, stirred dissent even among the 24-member commission which includes four Roman Catholics.

In the first part of its final report to the President and Congress, released last week, the Commission of Population Growth and the American Future detailed reasons why America should slow, and gradually stop the growth of population.

Toward that end it now recommends:

—Public and private health services should pay the full cost of contraceptives; of prenatal, delivery and first-year pediatric care; and of voluntary sterilization, abortion and medical treatment of infertility. The total cost could be $8 billion a year, a $1 billion increase over all present expenditures, public and private.

—States adopt laws which will permit minors to receive contraceptive and prophylactic information and services.

—ALL restrictions on access to voluntary contraceptive sterilization be eliminated.

—That "with the admonition that abortion not be considered a primary means of fertility controll...present state laws restricting abortion be liberalized along the lines of the New York statute, such abortion to be performed on request by duly licensed physicians under conditions of medical safety.

Smith Offers Social Work

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—The Smith College for Social Work is encouraging applications to a special undergraduate program from Puerto Rican college juniors interested in a professional social work career.

The school offers to eligible students a summer training program designed to help prepare for entry into a graduate social work school. Provided are transportation expenses to and from Smith College, room, board, tuition, and a weekly cash stipend. Assistance in securing admission to a graduate school of social work also is provided.

The special undergraduate summer program (June 19 to August 11, 1972) is open to students who will complete their junior year of college by June 1972. After the summer program students will return to their own college to complete the requirements for a bachelor's degree. Those showing aptitude for professional social work and interested in studying for a master's degree would be assisted in securing admission to graduate school Eligible students may be accepted by the Smith College School for Social Work with full scholarship stating in June 1973.

For further information contact the Special Undergraduate Program, Smith College School for Social Work, Northampton, Mass.

See Italy This Summer And Get Credit For It

Applications for the UMass 1972 Summer Program in Italy will be accepted until April 7, according to Prof. Zina Tillona, program director.

Classes during the seven-week session will be in the Bologna Center of John Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies in the heart of the University of Bologna and close to the center of the city of Bologna.

Enrollment is limited to 65 students and the Program attracts applicants from many colleges and universities. Application materials may be obtained from Prof. Tillona at Herter Hall 320, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Although the Summer Program in Italy is not geared to any one discipline or language study, Italy--its language, its history, and its people--is the focus of all courses. Of the five courses offered, only one, intermediate Italian, is taught in Italian. All others are in English.

The courses are: Italian Art of the Early and High Renaissance, Conflict between conscience and country in Italy (history), field course in cultural anthropology, intermediate Italian, and Classicism and Anti-Classicism in Renaissance art and literature. Italian majors and other qualified students may arrange to take independent study in Italian literature.

Teachers will include UMass Asst. Prof. of Italian Frank J. Fata and James West Shaw, associate dean of the UMass College of Arts and Sciences.

Students will arrive in Bologna June 20 for a brief orientation period. The seven weeks of study will include field trips to nearby cultural centers. After August 10, students will be free to explore Italy and nearby countries on their own. Departure for the United States will be August 26.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

In politics, the Pisces woman tends to be conservative. She feels that in her heart she is right. Her kind of candidate is one who has charisma but also is down-to-earth about basic issues. Pisces women are loyal to their party, but once disillusioned they can do a complete about-face. It will be a wise candidate who encourages the vote of Pisces women.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Practical approach to budgetary matters is necessary. Don't be in too much of a hurry where money enters picture. Analyze and file. Get on solid footing. Check addresses, appointments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Lunar cycle high; your judgment, intuition are on target. Take initiative in making necessary changes. Put forth ideas. Write, read and advertise. You will be more active than usual. And you will be stimulated.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Family member may rattle some skeletons. Maintain aplomb. Be diplomatic. Ride with tide. Co-operate in project which aids hospital, charitable institution. Work behind scenes. Do necessary research.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on friendships, fulfillment of desires. See persons, situations as they actually exist. Avoid self-deception. One in position of authority may be reluctant to loosen purse strings. Don't argue.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are tested. Utilize past experience. By aiming toward goal, you heighten chances for success. Ignore one who would sidetrack you. Stick to task at hand. Co-operate in civic project. Accept responsibility.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Plan for future travel. Look beyond immediate indications. Project. You get what you want by obtaining overall view. Special relationship may be finished. Don't hang on to past. Build for future.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23): Investment procedures, practices come under scrutiny. Mate, partner is much involved. See what is there, not what should or could be present. Stress practicality. Take inventory. Get accounting.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lie low. Play waiting game. Be sure of legal resources. Joint effort is stressed. Be receptive to partnership proposal. Follow your own hunch. You may have to utilize unorthodox approach. Be a keen observer.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be congenial to co-workers, those who perform special services. Accept social invitation. Best now to leave details to others. Get rid of tension. Obtain second wind. Experiment. Do what comes naturally.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Good lunar aspect now coincides with romantic interests. Relationship is intensified. Be ready for change. Travel. Bring forth creative resources. Obtain hint from Sagittarius message.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): One close to you may be stubborn. Patient approach brings desired results. Purchase or sale of property is favored. Investigate. Find motives. Take nothing for granted. If thorough, you are successful.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Relatives are in transit. You may be receiving surprise visitors. Check messages. Extend hospitality. By giving now, you ultimately will receive. Taurus and Libra persons figure prominently.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have natural executive ability. You are regarded by some as a mass of contradictions. In actuality, you can be poetic yet practical, self-assured yet sensitive to moods of others. Opportunities abound. May will be your most significant month. Contacts of value will be made through social affairs.

Baha'i Thing

Saturday, March 18, there will be an all-day Festival (Like last years' CAMPUS UNITY DAY). It is sponsored by the UMass Baha'i Association, and the entire campus community is invited to attend.

From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Student Union Commonwealth room, there will be Talk, Music (With a tremendous Jazz band) and two new films, with Seals and Crofts, Dizzy Gillespe, and Geraldine Jones.

The purpose: to present the Baha'i way of life. That evening, from 7:30 on, in the S.U. Council Chambers on the second floor, there will be more discussion and music with DAWNING the new five-college "road show".

New Look Red Sox; Can They Win?

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)-Manager Eddie Kasko, starting his third season as field boss of the Boston Red Sox, thinks this year's team is the best he has had, but it's open to strong argument.

The Red Sox long have been known as a fence-busting team, always short on pitching, speed and at times defense. Now they appear strong on pitching, speed and defense, but shy of power.

In 1967, under then rookie manager Dick Williams, the Red Sox won the pennant at 100-1 odds. It was "an impossible dream." Now, five years later, it probably will take the same to even stay close to Baltimore in the American League East.

Never a man to stand still with a lose, General Manager Dick O'Connell has made sweeping changes, with Carl Yastrzemski, Reggie Smith, Rico Petrocelli and Sparky Lyle the only holdovers from the 1967 champions.

Pitching, speed and defense have replaced Boston's No. 1 attraction over the years-sheer power.

O'Connell swung a 10-player trade with the Milwaukee Brewers. He shipped out 1967 Cy Young Award winner Jim Lonborg, first baseman George Scott, outfielders Billy Conigliaro and Joe Lahoud, lefthanded pitcher Ken Brett and utilityman Don Pavletich. In return, the Red Sox received veteran pitchers Marty Pattin and Lew Krausse, outfielder Tommy Harper and a minor leaguer who has quit baseball.

Pattin, 14-14 with the weakhitting Brewers, steps into the starting rotation with righthanders Ray Culp and Sonny Siebert. Krausse, a one-time big bonus baby, was acquired for long relief, but is trying to prove he belongs as a starter.

Veteran southpaw Gary Peters 14-11 and lefthander Rogelio Moret, a hot 22-year-old prospect, also are in the fight for starting berths.

Veterans Ken Tatum, a right-hander, and Sparky Lyle and Bill Lee, both southpaws, are due back in the bullpen, barring a possible trade.

Duane Josephson, Bob Montgomery and rookie Carlton Fisk, all right-handed hitters, are battling for the No. 1 catching job. The first base position is up for grabs, with veteran Mike Fiore and rookie Cecil Cooper fighting it out.

The Red Sox are set at second base with sophomore Doug Griffin sparkling after an injury-plagued rookie campaign. Luis Aparicio, now 38, is aging, but is still spry and the regular shortstop. Petrocelli, once a home-run hitting shortstop, should be more at home in his second year at third.

Yastrzemski, a six-time Golden Glove winner in left as well as a three-time batting champion, hopes to bounce back from a nightmarish season in which he hit only .254 with 15 homers.

Harper slumped with Milwaukee last year after hitting 31 homers and batting .296 in 1970. The Red Sox are counting on him to provide right-handed power, as well as speed.

Smith, who has hit 107 homers while driving in 393 runs in five major league seasons, is a fixture in right field.

Sox Vote For Strike

MIAMI (AP)-Major league baseball players will decide whether to strike within the next two weeks and Baltimore Oriole's superstar Brooks Robinson says, "We'll do whatever we have to do."

"Our team voted, like most others, to empower our player representative to do whatever is necessary before the March 31 deadline," Robinson said, "whether it be to extend negotiations or to strike."

The issue keeping the two sides apart is pension benefit increases.

Frank Cashen, general manager of the American League champions said a players' strike might possibly shutdown major league baseball-or at least cripple it-for the year.

About half the teams had reported player votes. The Boston Red Sox became the latest Thursday.

Pitcher Gary Peters, the Red Sox players representative, said the vote was taken by secret ballot and that he did not know who voted against the strike authorization.

Peters originally announced that the vote was 19-3. However, when he returned to the clubhouse veteran Rico Petrocelli handed him his ballot. Peters explained that he had already reported the vote, and that Petrocelli's vote would become known.

"I don't give a damn," Petrocelli said as he handed over the ballot which was against the authorization of the strike.

The final vote was 19-4, with the four opposition votes being the first recorded in balloting by 12 major league clubs so far.

Others believed in opposition included veterans Carl Yastrzemski and Reggie Smith, a couple of high-salaried stars.

Peters said: "It shouldn't have anything to do with it, but I think the four "no" votes reflect on the best owner in baseball."

He added that Miller told the Red Sox that the vote was not to be considered any reflection on owner Tom Yawkey.

The players are demanding the owners kick in $372,000 towards the health program. The owners have offered $250,000.

The executive board of the players association will decide final action.

Cooney Fifth At Cornell

By ADAM COHEN

Last weekend, the National Collegiate Olympic Weightlifting Championships were held at Cornell University. Representing the University of Massachusetts in the middle heavyweight division was Doug Cooney.

As for the competition itself, the first event was the olympic press. Doug opened the press with a good lift of 250 lbs. On his second attempt of 265 lbs., he was unable to negotiate the lift as the bar was lost forward. His third attempt with 270 lbs. was also missed forward Thus, Doug was only given credit for his lift of 250 lbs.

The next event, the olympic snatch, Doug opened with a comfortable 225 lbs. For his second try with 235 lbs., a strong pull resulted with the weight solidly overhead. For his third effort, Doug requested the bar to be loaded to 245 lbs., 15 lbs. more than he had every done before that day. The crowd was behind the UMass lifter, as with a fierce determination, he pulled the bar to arms length for a splendid success. This earned Doug Cooney a bronze medal in the olympic snatch.

The final lift to be staged was the clean and jerk. Opening at 275 lbs., Doug was equal to the task. Next, taking 290 lbs. on his second lift, he made a strong squat clean followed by a solid jerk which characterizes his great lifting ability. Doug called for 305 lbs. on his last try, which would earn him fourth place in the overall competition. He squat cleaned the weight, but was unable to hold the bar as it slid off his shoulders and crashed to the platform.

Doug's final total of 785 lbs. was a personal best, ranking him fifth in the nation.

NCAA Hockey

BOSTON (AP)-Wisconsin, owning a size advantage, takes the ice here tonight to face defending champion Boston University in the semifinals of the National Collegiate Athletic Association hockey tournament.

The game, scheduled for Boston Garden, will pit Wisconsin, 26-9-1, and its size against B.U., 24-4-1, suffering from the loss of injured goalie Dan Brady.

On Friday night, Cornell meets Denver in the other semifinal match.

The winners meet Saturday night for the NCAA title.

While in Europe, pick up an ugly European.
We can arrange your rendezvous with a bug for any other Volkswagen in 40 cities in 15 countries.
And that includes the handling of those nasty details like insurance, registration and licensing.
So all that's left for you to do is enjoy the benefits of driving your own VW in Europe. The low operating costs, for example. Or being able to go where tour buses fear to tread. (And still be only a stone's throw away from one of Europe's 5,000 VW Dealers.)
Then, after the tour's over, we'll arrange to have your car sent back through something we call TASP (Tourist Automobile Shipping Program).
So you can keep on enjoying that ugly European you picked up while in Europe.
While in America.

Mulcahy's Munchies Feature MacConnell

Skiers Got It Together

By EARLE BARROLL

March 15, 1972 will be remembered as the day Bill MacConnell prayed for snow...and got enough of it to paralyze the campus into Essential Service Day procedures.

But while the classrooms were at a standstill and the snow freaks were doing their flake dances across campus, MacConnell put on his skies, got his team together (students, not huskies) and went over to the Newman Center to present his program at the Varsity M Club luncheon.

Bill MacConnell is a name this page has not seen this year. And yet, he's the most successful coach at UMass in terms of wins and losses. Now he's added another laurel to his trophy case: the students MVP award for clsoing down the school.

MacConnell and his team do their thing a long way from Amherst. Madona, Sugarloaf, Killington. Doesn't ring a bell like the Cage or Orr Rink.

Mountains, the toughest terrain in New England.

This is where Bill MacConnell and his team are at home. Where the slopes are iced over, the winds are howling and the temperatures plumet to chill factors in the vicinity of 90 degrees below zero.

Bill MacConnell is the UMass ski coach (if you didn't know by now). He thrives on winning, his teams are the kings of the hill. This year his record slipped a bit, 53-3. Pretty bad when you figure last year's team was 64-0.

But then again the skiers only have to contend with 80 mile an hour speeds on the downhill, poles ready to spear them on the slalom and polar cold hitting them in the face on the way down the mountain.

All this is spread out over a mile and a half...the only people who see these guys deal on the hill are other skiers. It's no place for the spectator on foot.

Wednesday's luncheon was set up as a humbling ceremony for MacConnell by President Jim Mulcahy who came in his stocking cap...That's like saying Red Auerbach lights up his victory cigar. It just happens.

You see, when coaches are bery successful and keep on winning the only fun left is to see how they react when they finally lose. Well, MacConnell lost last weekend. Not one of the three...they were part of the regular season.

The New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference is divided into three divisions. UMass won its division hardily, but when the biggies came together to decide the entire conference UMass came in second... Mulcahy had the evidence to corner Mac at the luncheon.

It took all of three quarters of an hour for Mul to react. But MacConnell handled it like the perennial champion has always been able to. "Well, here I am," he said, very cooly...(laughter).

Curses...foiled again. (Mulcahy)

UMASS SKI team Co-Captain Tuck Woodruff. Woodruff, a freshman will be back next year to lead the team to what will hopefully be a successful season. The team record this year was 53-3.

Commentary-Vida Blue

Charlie O First To Resist

By BILL BALLOU

For the umpteenth time in his many years connected with major league sports, Charlie Finley has shown he has the guts to do something different and get away with it.

The "bombshell' that Vida Blue dropped on the baseball world in the form of his retirement from the game because Finley would not give him what he wanted hopefully will prove to be the biggest bust in recent major league history.

It's about time that an owner stood up to his athletes and stopped giving them the ridiculous sums that they seem to feel they are worth. Too long have owners acted like Tom Yawkey's gone wild by pampering their "boys" with whatever they wanted. Yawkey has won himself two pennants and no world championships in the forty or so years he has owned the Red Sox, and during this span he has won himself countless friends with his policies. But no world championships.

Vida Blue has pitched one year and one month of major league baseball. In that short time period he has served to spark new interest in the grand old game and lead his team to a divisional championship. In that short span of time Blue has proven himself to be a great pitcher.

But the key to this whole problem is the phrase "short span of time". As great a season as Blue had last year, he is a perishable quantity; a young left-hander that relies on the fast ball.

And even if Blue were to become a star, there remains the question: Is he worth all the money he wants? The ridiculous war between the ABA and NBA that is going on right now is a perfect indication of how "grateful" athletes are when they get big money. The jumping back and forth between leagues is a disgrace not only to those taking part but to professional sports in general.

Vida Blue has not pitched long enough to prove that he is worth all the money he wants. He may be. But only time will tell if he is worth what he says he is.

But an even more important issue that the Blue affair raises is that of how much is any athlete worth? And does the athlete need the owner as much as the owner needs him?

The days when people gasped upon hearing of $100,000 plus salaries are gone. In their place has come a day when the professional athlete is making exorbitant sums, and ticket prices are going up. And as all this transpires, the fan sits in his overpriced seat watching a lame dilution of what used to be a major-league sport, brought on by the expansion that the big leagues mustuse as a way to get more revenue to pay their stars.

It is high time that an owner stood up for his interests and at the same time his fans. Finley, by drawing the line with Vida Blue, hopefully will set a precedent to be followed by all owners in all sports. The spiral in salaries and ticket prices must stop somewhere. Blue and the rest of the major leaguers who are draining owners dry must realize that they are on the verge of driving many out of business. When the owners go out of business then where will all these people play?

Very few people get rich owning a major league franchise. An awful lot of people get rich playing for a major league franchise. And an awful lot of fans pay an awful lot of money to see some awful sport. Ask those fans of the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Good luck Charlie Finley.

Blue Announces Retirement

OAKLAND, (AP)-Vida Blue, baseball's top attraction in 1971, said Thursday he is retiring from the game because Oakland A's owner Charles O. Finley has refused to raise his contract offer.

But Blue, the 22-year-old pitcher who was 24-8 in his first full major league season, giggled when he announced he would take a job in business instead of pitching for the A's this season at Finely's $50,000 offer.

Blue and his attorney, Robert J. Gerst of Los Angeles, called the news conference at a hotel here to announce the player's intended retirement. Blue said Finley repeated his $50,000 one-year contract offer by telephone from Chicago Wednesday night.

He said Thursday he has received an offer to work for Dura-Steel Products of Los Angeles as vice president in charge of public relations.

Blue and his attorney began negotiations with Finley by asking for $115,000. Finley countered with a $50,000 offer and has stuck with it throughout more than the last two months.

"I believe my requests are reasonable and that I have indicated a good-faith willingness to compromise," said Blue, who later asked for $92,500 and, according to Finley, indicated once he'd sign for $85,000.

Blue has offered to play for $50,000 if he did not have to sign a contract that would bind him to the same team next year.

Finley turned the proposal down along with several others made by the pitcher, including one to have the baseball commissioner's office set up arbitration.

In Chicago Finley said:

"I'm sorry to learn that Vida has decided to retire from baseball. He had a great year and had a great future ahead of him. As long as he is retiring, I'm happy that he has selected the steel industry and is starting out as a vice president. I personally spent five years with U.S. Steel in Gary, Ind. Should Vida have a change of heart anytime in the near future and decide to return to baseball, we would be extremely happy to have him with us."

Finley said his $50,000 offer was his final offer. Asked if he thought Vida was sincere, he said: "Evidently he is. I have to assume that he is." Asked if he would try to contact Vida or Gerst, Finley said: "I just have no further comment."

Squires May Lose-Erving A Winner

By DONALD GLICKSTEIN

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, March 12, 1972—That the Virginia Squires are mired in second place of theABA East, 18 1/2 games behind the Kentucky Colonels, is not the fault of Julius Erving.

Yet unknown to the growing crowd, he casually walks on to the court at Kentucky's Freedom Hall, chewing gum and wearing a red, white, and blue warm-up suit. The jazz band colors the Hall, and the goaltenders (cheerleaders, all white, with teased hair, white boots and blue mini-dresses with silver buttons) and the usherettes (again, all white and amply endowed, sporting Colonel basketball shirts) wander.

Julius Erving receives the tipoff, loses it for a second, and misses the Squires' first shot.

Now the Squires are losing by three. Erving is guarding Issel--an inherently thicker man (physique). Issel stops, shoots, and Erving resigns himself to that Issel basket.

But the score is 9-4, and Erving has just won a rebound from Gilmore.

No sooner do the Squires get the ball, than they lose it to the Colonels. Erving prevents the Colonels from scoring with a steal, brings it down court, and loses it.

Erving is fouled. He makes the free throw.

Issel hits back and rams the ball through twice. 21-16. 23-16.

Interlude. Charlie Scott, the Squires' other star, is not on the roster. Rumors are, he's trying to jump to the NBA. Virginia (the Dominion) is reportedly no life for a black man. Besides, my neighbor points out, even when the Squires are home, they're not, for they play games in Roanoke, Hampton, and Richmond.

Erving shoots, misses, gets the rebound, and ups again for 2 points.

"Think he can play?" the Louisville Times' Kindred asks rhetorically. "He could make the Fabulous 5," answers a Kentucky official.

Still, Virginia can't get started. The Colonels are putting on a show for their fans--a razzy, dazzy, bad, tough one.

I see Erving fight his way through a snarl of hands and legs and heads, He misses his shot.

The Colonels' Simons scores as the first quarter buzzer announces Kentucky 31, Virginia 21.

Issel has scored again, but so has Erving. After a free throw, Erving stuffs another, and the score is 48-41, Colonels. Thirty-two has his 17th point.

Thirty-six seconds left in the half. Erving freethrows twice, misses once, and gets his 20th point. At :29, Erving gets his first rest in the game when Irvine enters for relief.

The buzzer and the half and the Squires are behind 55-49.

Now the score has been tied 57 all. Erving has hit.

Irvine shoots, misses, Erving grabs and from the karate side of his hand, the ball becomes 2 points.

He rebounds with one hand, brings the ball up by himself, shoots and hits for #24.

Erving is under the basket, gets a pass and jumps diagonally and to the front, shoving the ball backwards into the hoop.

He outraces a pass intended for a Colonel. That steel is worth a basket.

Thirty-two steals another, sprints down court and lays it up for point 33.

Issel, too, has been connecting.

The score is 80-80 entering the last quarter.

Like a hydra, Erving is grabbing the ball.

Like the ocean, the Colonels surround the hydra and exchange nourishments.

Gilmore goal tends. 90-90. But not for long. Led by Gilmore and Gale, the Colonels suddenly surge to a 7 point lead.

Erving hits Number 37 and then goal tends 2 points away to Issel. 103-98 is the score.

Erving is fouled again and closes the gap by 2.

Another foul on Erving. He shoots twice, misses once, and narrows the score another point to 103-101.

The final score is 104-101. Julius Erving has 40 points and 19 rebounds. The Squires have lost. I stand alone in the Squires' lost.

Vadas's Pleasure Palace

BY CYNTHIA F. NADREAU

I've been here at UMass. for just about as long as the Bluewall has (the Bluewall opened January 26), but it was only until recently that I went in. It has a bar for Club members and their guests, but doesn't exclude those under twenty-one from patronizing the cafeteria during the day or seeing and enjoying the entertainment at night.

"Past of the reason for its success," explained Mike Egan director of Food Services who runs and operates the Bluewall, "is that it is easily accessible by students, and it offers good prices and a variety of entertainment.

Entertainment begins around 9 p.m. every night featuring either a band, movie, performance by a local theatre group, coffeehouse, or a large screen R.V. where events of general interest can be viewed; events such as sports, election returns, political happenings. "There is almost a full house each Wednesday and Thursday evenings," said Egan as he described the weekly audience. The Bluewall has held a maximum of 1,200 people including those who come and go during a performance.

Bands draw the largest crowds, and the Wednesday night coffeehouse has proven to be quite popular according to Manager Ed Vadas who holds auditions and hires the entertainment. The twenty seven year old manager is an entertainer himself. His band is called 'Ed Vadas Electric Blues Band'. He has done a variety of gigs in a variety of places. From high school through the service where he toured and entertained in Viet Nam, to starting a successful coffeehouse in Nebraska, he plays guitar, bass, harmonica, sings and has done stand up comedy. With him he has brought talent and an accumulation of ideas to the Bluewall.

"Originally, I came to school here to be 'anonymous,'" he said, but soon got involved in setting up a coffeehouse last year at the Top Of the Campus, a type of atmosphere which he felt was much needed in the area, and favorable response to it proved his point. The coffeehouse concept was then going to be moved to the back of the Hatch or to some other place within the Campus

AMHERST, MASS. MARCH 17, 1972

An eminent professor at the University of Massachusetts was found today in a state of mental incoherency in a parking lot on the university grounds.

Howard O. Brogan, Commonwealth Professor of English, program director of English 125, and a controversial member of the Faculty Senate Ad Hoc Committee on Residential Colleges was found by school children leaving classes held at the School of Education. It was reported that the children found Brogan mumbling and twitching in his parked car. The sight sent them screaming and University Security was called to the scene.

A University spokesman was unable to account for the apparent mental breakdown of one of the University's more notable personages.

"You rip'a deese or you men'a deese?" asked "Big" Chuck at the end of a class about a week after the news about Brogan hit the papers. He wanted to know what we had to read next for the course.

"We have to read Euripides by next Wednesday," I told him. He said that he would have to go and buy a copy (which I hoped was true for the rest of the people in the course) and I turned towards Southwest.

I met Big Louie and Nick at "Bites and Sucks" and told them that within the week our hollowed books would be the proud owner of some lucky student. We chuckled and snickered at each other at our little table in the corner of "Bites and Sucks"; we waited with baited breath for the week to pass.

It was that black Wednesday that we had had to read Euripides' Ten Plays and we were leaving our headquarters in "Bites and Sucks", Nick, Big Louie, and I. We were on our way to my 2:30 English 125 class to see the results of our devious work. We carried knapsacks of dining commons pudding under our arms; if all went well we had a distinctly horrifying plan in mind.

We arrived at Herter 205. There was no one in the room and it was close to 2:30. Mrs. Edwards came bustling with the usual greeting.

It was a strange sight at the start of the class with only Nick, Big Louie, Mrs. Edwards and I in the classroom. We sat silently way in the back and Mrs. Edwards started her ranting in the front.

All of a sudden from both sides of the room, groups of six or seven people came stumbling into the classroom glassy-eyed and with shit-eating grins smeared across their faces. They sank way down into their seats.

Mrs. Edwards started up at their entrance and, for the first time, realized that it was just herself and us at first; but now the herd had arrived on the scene. She started raving about "common decency", etc. Someone burped, someone farted. Then the furor really started.

"You rip'a deese or you men'a deese", someone (I think it was "Big" Chuck!) screeched.

"We are all intellectual embryos," someone declared at the top of their lungs. The noise level continued to rise. We opened our knapsacks and passed out the pudding.

Big Louie hopped up on top of a desk amidst vain protest from Mrs. Edwards; he was the first to let the pudding fly with a resounding: "Let 'em eat cake, huh? Here, get off on this!"

In the barrage of butterscotch that followed Mrs. Edwards finally lost her cool. "You @#$%#@c&%@#$!!! little fetuses. You'll never make it out of the intellectual womb!" And with those damning words she picked up her volume of notes and walked out of the room splattered with brown.

There was a silence for a minute, then..."ALL RIGHT! WE'VE DONE IT!" That was Big Louie (still on top of the desk) in his moment of victory. We were all elated, everyone else was stoned (for a change).

We went back to our headquarters and our usual table in the corner. The question on our minds at this point was what was next, and, had the other classes been as successful? We got the information that in each and every section of English 125 the same kind of chaos had erupted and order had disintergrated.

"There was still some stray ends that have to be tidied up before we're through with English 125 and can move on to bigger and better heights," Nick said.

"We should send Brogan some flowers," Big Louie added.

"And make our final call on Emma," I reminded.

We sat then, lost in our thoughts, in our triumph, waiting and planning the finale to the overthrow.

Florida's Comedy of Errors

How goes the circus in Florida? Is George Wallace to be reckoned with as one of the Big Four? Did the concentrated efforts of pretty-boy John Lindsay pay off as well as expected. Is Edmund Muskie quickly becoming 1972's George Romney? Did George McGovern come out behind but unscathed? And how is Shirley's throat coming along? With the Big Top Circus moving on to Illinois and Wisconsin, Philip Christopher comments and analyzes Tuesday's stunning results in Florida. As the Democrats approach the convention, signs of deadlock and draft appear with more and more frequency. And if Florida's response at the polls show a deep conservative trend in American politics, will Richard Nixon pick up all the marbles in November?

Hitting Close To Home

At one time Coke came from machines in little, biodegradable paper cups. Then due to student complaints the plastic version, a little harder to recycle, came into being. Recently even this advance in technology is being replaced by the old-fashioned can, this time the aluminum variety, and once again due to student demands. Cans are even worse to recycle than plastic cups which were, if you've been following this, even worse than paper cups and only showed, as our centerfold this week states, that UMass students are more interested in convenience than ecology. Hit a bit too close to home, eh? See pages eight and nine.

Alex Has I is Day

Stanley Kubrick is the finest American director now living, his body of work is always exciting as well as light years ahead of any competitor in style and execution. His latest work A Clockwork Orange, has been four years in the making and, judging by the majority of the critics' reaction, it looks to be his most accomplished work yet. Burgess's story takes place in the near future where a young man named Alex gets his jollies from rape, mugging, and Beethoven. When he is finally captured by the authorities they do their damnedest to turn him into a clockwork orange. MaryLou Gordon reviews this often difficult, controversial work on page thirteen. Little Alex's adventures, according to our reviewer, are vividly made real with a sense of humor which may leave you chuckling every time you hear "Singing In The Rain."

And The Rest Falls In Line

Cruisin through this week's issue you will find, first on the right, the "Women In Revolt" controversy comes to a well-deserved end where the extremely vocal reaction to Frank Baglione has its day. On page four, an old feature makes humble return where Eating Out, epicuria for the epicurians, talks of a lovely evening at the Rusty Scupper. Opposite it on page five Philip Christopher analyzes the Orwellian overtones of the Florida Primary and the entire Presidential race thus far. Then some personal insight into campaigning for George McGovern in New Hampshire on page six and Karen Walsh reviews the current bestseller Eleanor and Franklin on page seven. Beyond the center-fold are Albums; Miles Davis, Allman Brothers, Kris Kristofferson, and Pot Liquor. Top Forty gets their say, as does Little Mary Sunshine, a review of which can be found on page twelve. After A Clockwork Orange comes our regular feature Basic Audio, which comes our way like clockwork, so to speak, and this week discusses Four Channel Sound. The Puzzle this week baffles you with album titles and Weekend may give you a hint as what to do with yourself this weekend, that's on page sixteen. On our left we are nearing the end of our infiltration into the English Department which makes some shocking revelations about one of the campus's leading celebrities.

Correspondence's To Poor Richard's

To the Editor:

Lest anyone should take Bill Densmore's disguised editorial of Friday's Poor Richard's too seriously, I think I should straighten out some points. WMUA is not wasting either money or space. There is, for instance, no provision for "photo services" in the WMUA budget. This is only one of many instances where Mr. Densmore is, shall be put it kindly, mistaken.

The provision for a salaried "technical consultant" is a necessity as a qualified First Class Engineer must, by law be available. These men do not offer their services on a volunteer basis. Mr. Densmore intimates that $25 per week for a student Chief Engineer is a princely sum. I suggest he try living on it. The $660 monitoring system he mentions is not, as Mr. Densmore suggests, for listening to ourselves; the purpose of this system is to conduct "proof of performance" tests in accordance with FCC Rules and Regulations, a body of law with which Densmore is apparently unfamiliar.

As far as our space in the Student Union is concerned, Densmore himself made the point that we have received no grants for our contemplated move. In the interests of preserving the sanity of the Student Senate, (not to mention the Student Activities Tax), we decided not to go to the Senate and ask for the $75,000 it would cost for the move. If Mr. Densmore has any ideas on how to raise this money, he did not include them in his article.

The Student Union Governing Board, in May of 1971 committed itself to reserving space in the Student Union for the future use of WMUA. Since that time other groups have occupied, and will continue to occupy, this space. No space has been taken out of service because of the WMUA commitment. Since the time of the space allocation I have been attempting to secure funds for the utilization of such space. The poor economic situation, coupled with a general disapproval of progressive rock stations, has prevented us from obtaining such funds.

Mr. Densmore is complaining because we at WMUA demand quality for our listening audience. And that, as they say, is a strange sort of complaint indeed. In summary, I think it should be kept in mind that WMUA is attempting to present a broadcast schedule compatible with the interests of University students. Mr. Densmore's article reflects little understanding of this premise, or of the broadcast art in general.

John Zizis
General Manager
WMUA—FM

Further replies to Mr. Baglione's article will appear in the next edition to be published this coming Thursday.

To The Editor:

Before Friday's issue I had been surprised and mildly shocked by the lack of coverage of the weeks' events surrounding International Women's Day. A great many interesting and exciting events -- talks, films, poetry readings, plays -- were being put on by women in this area, on one of the profoundest social issues: sexism, and sexual oppression of women. But in last Wednesday's issue, for example, there was no article announcing the rally planned for that day, and not even a list of speakers and their topics (I had to go to the Student Union to find this out). It appeared that the event was being ignored. Again, in Thursday's Collegian, there was no article which discussed or gave an account of that very important rally -- just a picture and a couple of anecdotal stories about relatively superficial aspects of it.

Friday's article by Frank Baglione, then, is the main acknowledgement in the Collegian of the events of last week. To describe that article as "sexist" or "chauvinist" is too mild -- it was insulting, ignorant, crude, and bigoted.

As a community newspaper the Collegian has a responsibility to let bigots have their say, as they too are part of this community. Besides this, however, there is the responsibility to report events, and to gather commentary from informed, thoughtful people. It is not too late for the Collegian staff to get itself together and give this community an intelligent retrospective on the fine educational and cultural work given us last week.

John Brentlinger

To the Editor:

A response to the women screaming "Women Unite! Rally Now?" at the door of the Hatch during lunchtime on Wednesday, March 8th: Instead of promoting the feminist movement, I feel you did it harm by reinforcing the belief of many people that women, especially feminists, are idiots. I saw little rallying but I did hear a lot of "it figures" laughter.

Maryanne Kuroczko

To the Editor:

Once again we (March 10) have been treated to a misogynistic tirade from the pen of Frank Baglione. From the first paragraph to the last, his gross misunderstanding of the Women's Movement and his equally gross "witticisms," indicate that although he may feel the movement has peaked, he must also feel that a threat still exists; why else would he devote two full pages to knocking around individuals, groups, and ideas that are "an embarrassment, an anachronism."??

Rather than go thru the article and deal with it in its entirety (that would be an article in itself), I would simply like to deal with a few points which are important to me personally.

First of all, the Student Senate Women's Committee was formed, not as another way to spend money, as was alleged (we have no budget this year), but because of a recognition by the Senate that there are genuine problems faced by women on this campus. An effective, representative Senate has a responsibility to address these problems, and to try and find solutions.

I'm not sure what Mr. Baglione ws referring to when he mentioned the Faculty Senate Women's Caucus; however, I think we should be cognizant of the fact that the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women is hard at work; and because of their work, HEW has told the University that unless it develops an affirmative action program to change the bias against women in its staffing patterns, monetary consequences will be suffered.

Second of all, to deal with the two ideological "errors" we (The Women's Movement - of which I am only one person - part - voice) are charged with:

1) Rejection of traditional methods of discipline and organization--we are trying to create a new kind of society; one based on a non-hierarchal system where knowledge and skills and work are shared, where discipline is self-imposed, where we can break free from limits often imposed by division of labor. We still divide tasks amonst ourselves, we're just learning to perform more and different kinds; we're eliminating some of the mystery and fear inherent in being limited to certain work categories with no vision outside of these.

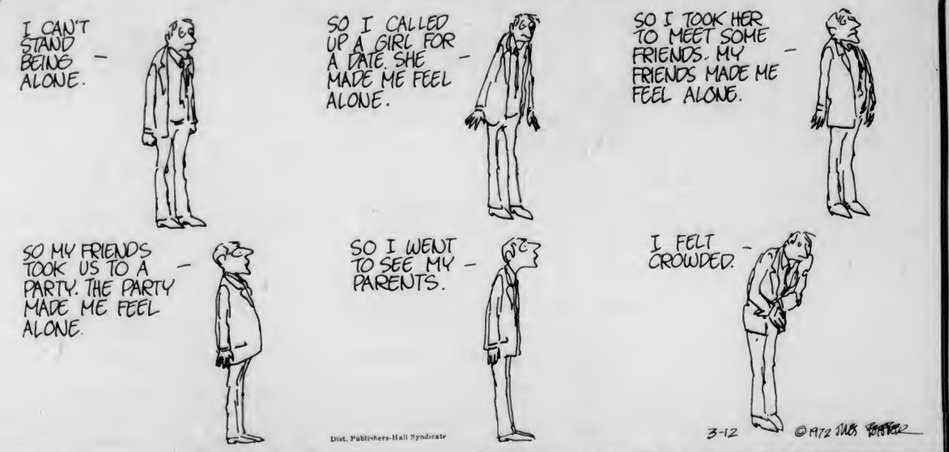
2) Hatred of males--why should we hate males? (if indeed we hate anyone, it might as well be meaningful.) Males created the economic system which oppresses us, they created the value system which oppresses us, they are the ones who receive the sexual, psychological, and material benefits of the institutions which govern our day-to-day lives. We cannot expect people who have been slaves for their entire historical existence, and who continue to be enslaved today, not to hate those people who have been and are today (through psychological, economic, and physical force), their masters.

SELF-DETERMINATION FOR ALL,

Mira Marshall
Chairperson
Student Senate Women's Committee

Mr. Baglione replies: I was not surprised to see, in the large volume of mail we received concerning the article "Women In Revolt," that my critics were almost exclusively members of the women's liberation movement and that they had been far too literal in their reading of that article. Dictated by their narrow thought, which will brook no shades of grey between right and wrong positions on "their" issue, the women's liberationists missed the entire thrust of the article, and my impiety became, in the bosom of the self-righteous, sin.

Thus in the eyes of a pompous John Brentlinger, I am branded a bigot to whom he reluctantly grants the freedom of expression, (how could he be a liberal and do otherwise?) just so long as Poor Richard's and the Collegian fulfill their responsibility to present an event in the manner he feels is proper. Our philosophy professor's allegation that the newspaper failed to properly emphasize and report on the activities of "Women's Cultural Week" questions either his eyesight of literacy in light of the fact that the Collegian carried notices of the event well in advance (the Wednesday schedule was in that morning's paper on page 10), and that several articles reported on different aspects of the week including two stories on Women's International Day. If these articles were less than satisfying or inspiring to the professor, it was because the events themselves were ponderous, silly and largely ignored by the students--like many a lecture.



As for the radical women, their hurt is evident, they feel their own pain keenly. Yet they still adamantly refuse to accept their own callousness, their own shallowness, their vulnerability to ridicule. They totally lack the ability for self-criticism; they cannot laugh at themselves.

And it is with good cause that they brood and hate. As Mary Waterbury wrote in a letter to the New York Times Magazine: "I think that the vague distrust which we feel toward the militant liberationist can be traced to an intuitive awareness of the militant's anger--an anger which springs not, as she believes and would have us believe, from her experiences of the very real injustices which she describes, but rather from her own terrible fear, largely unconscious, that she, as a woman, must destroy her very nature in order to attain full equality with men. .

What the militant is really saying is this: 'I preach that women are equal by nature to men, but I really don't believe it. I believe that women are innately and intrinsically inferior to men and, therefore, the only conclusion I can draw is that if a woman wants to be treated equally, she must stop being a woman.' "

This woman's eloquent words will, no doubt, be interpreted as the unenlightened prose of one of the "stupid" women, just as Jan Liva was attacked by Ultra-liberationist Kay Raymond for the way Liva's article in last Thursday's Collegian captured the inanity of the Women's Int'l Day. Yet all these critics of militant women's liberation actually seek is an adjustment of women's position without the crude and vicious performances of some women whose psychological situation seems more critical than their social one.

An eminent professor at the University of Massachusetts was found today in a state of mental incoherency in a parking lot on the university grounds.

Howard O. Brogan, Commonwealth Professor of English, program director of English 125, and a controversial member of the Faculty Senate Ad Hoc Committee on Residential Colleges was found by school children leaving classes held at the School of Education. It was reported that the children found Brogan mumbling and twitching in his parked car. The sight sent them screaming and University Security was called to the scene.

A University spokesman was unable to account for the apparent mental breakdown of one of the University's more notable personages.

"You rip'a deese or you men'a deese?" asked "Big" Chuck at the end of a class about a week after the news about Brogan hit the papers. He wanted to know what we had to read next for the course.

"We have to read Euripides by next Wednesday," I told him. He said that he would have to go and buy a copy (which I hoped was true for the rest of the people in the course) and I turned towards Southwest.

I met Big Louie and Nick at "Bites and Sucks" and told them that within the week our hollowed books would be the proud owner of some lucky student. We chuckled and snickered at each other at our little table in the corner of "Bites and Sucks"; we waited with baited breath for the week to pass.

It was that black Wednesday that we had had to read Euripides' Ten Plays and we were leaving our headquarters in "Bites and Sucks", Nick, Big Louie, and I. We were on our way to my 2:30 English 125 class to see the results of our devious work. We carried knapsacks of dining commons pudding under our arms; if all went well we had a distinctly horrifying plan in mind.

We arrived at Herter 205. There was no one in the room and it was close to 2:30. Mrs. Edwards came bustling with the usual greeting.

It was a strange sight at the start of the class with only Nick, Big Louie, Mrs. Edwards and I in the classroom. We sat silently way in the back and Mrs. Edwards started her ranting in the front.

All of a sudden from both sides of the room, groups of six or seven people came stumbling into the classroom glassy-eyed and with shit-eating grins smeared across their faces. They sank way down into their seats.

Mrs. Edwards started up at their entrance and, for the first time, realized that it was just herself and us at first; but now the herd had arrived on the scene. She started raving about "common decency", etc. Someone burped, someone farted. Then the furor really started.

"You rip'a deese or you men'a deese", someone (I think it was "Big" Chuck!) screeched.

"We are all intellectual embryos," someone declared at the top of their lungs. The noise level continued to rise. We opened our knapsacks and passed out the pudding.

Big Louie hopped up on top of a desk amidst vain protest from Mrs. Edwards; he was the first to let the pudding fly with a resounding: "Let 'em eat cake, huh? Here, get off on this!"

In the barrage of butterscotch that followed Mrs. Edwards finally lost her cool. "You @#$%#@¢&%@#$!!! little fetuses. You'll never make it out of the intellectual womb!" And with those damning words she picked up her volume of notes and walked out of the room splattered with brown.

There was a silence for a minute, then..."ALL RIGHT! WE'VE DONE IT!" That was Big Louie (still on top of the desk) in his moment of victory. We were all elated, everyone else was stoned (for a change).

We went back to our headquarters and our usual table in the corner. The question on our minds at this point was what was next, and, had the other classes been as successful? We got the information that in each and every section of English 125 the same kind of chaos had erupted and order had disintergrated.

"There was still some stray ends that have to be tidied up before we're through with English 125 and can move on to bigger and better heights," Nick said.

"We should send Brogan some flowers," Big Louie added.

"And make our final call on Emma," I reminded.

We sat then, lost in our thoughts, in our triumph, waiting and planning the finale to the overthrow.

Florida's Comedy of Errors

How goes the circus in Florida? Is George Wallace to be reckoned with as one of the Big Four? Did the concentrated efforts of pretty-boy John Lindsay pay off as well as expected. Is Edmund Muskie quickly becoming 1972's George Romney? Did George McGovern come out behind but unscathed? And how is Shirley's throat coming along? With the Big Top Circus moving on to Illinois and Wisconsin, Philip Christopher comments and analyzes Tuesday's stunning results in Florida. As the Democrats approach the convention, signs of deadlock and draft appear with more and more frequency. And if Florida's response at the polls show a deep conservative trend in American politics, will Richard Nixon pick up all the marbles in November?

Hitting Close To Home

At one time Coke came from machines in little, biodegradable paper cups. Then due to student complaints the plastic version, a little harder to recycle, came into being. Recently even this advance in technology is being replaced by the old-fashioned can, this time the aluminum variety, and once again due to student demands. Cans are even worse to recycle than plastic cups which were, if you've been following this, even worse than paper cups and only showed, as our centerfold this week states, that UMass students are more interested in convenience than ecology. Hit a bit too close to home, eh? See pages eight and nine.

Alex Has I is Day

Stanley Kubrick is the finest American director now living, his body of work is always exciting as well as light years ahead of any competitor in style and execution. His latest work A Clockwork Orange, has been four years in the making and, judging by the majority of the critics' reaction, it looks to be his most accomplished work yet. Burgess's story takes place in the near future where a young man named Alex gets his jollies from rape, mugging, and Beethoven. When he is finally captured by the authorities they do their damnedest to turn him into a clockwork orange. MaryLou Gordon reviews this often difficult, controversial work on page thirteen. Little Alex's adventures, according to our reviewer, are vividly made real with a sense of humor which may leave you chuckling every time you hear "Singing In The Rain."

And The Rest Falls In Line

Cruisin through this week's issue you will find, first on the right, the "Women In Revolt" controversy comes to a well-deserved end where the extremely vocal reaction to Frank Baglione has its day. On page four, an old feature makes humble return where Eating Out, epicuria for the epicurians, talks of a lovely evening at the Rusty Scupper. Opposite it on page five Philip Christopher analyzes the Orwellian overtones of the Florida Primary and the entire Presidential race thus far. Then some personal insight into campaigning for George McGovern in New Hampshire on page six and Karen Walsh reviews the current bestseller Eleanor and Franklin on page seven. Beyond the center-fold are Albums; Miles Davis, Allman Brothers, Kris Kristofferson, and Pot Liquor. Top Forty gets their say, as does Little Mary Sunshine, a review of which can be found on page twelve. After A Clockwork Orange comes our regular feature Basic Audio, which comes our way like clockwork, so to speak, and this week discusses Four Channel Sound. The Puzzle this week baffles you with album titles and Weekend may give you a hint as what to do with yourself this weekend, that's on page sixteen. On our left we are nearing the end of our infiltration into the English Department which makes some shocking revelations about one of the campus's leading celebrities.

Correspondence's To Poor Richard's

To the Editor:

Lest anyone should take Bill Densmore's disguised editorial of Friday's Poor Richard's too seriously, I think I should straighten out some points. WMUA is not wasting either money or space. There is, for instance, no provision for "photo services" in the WMUA budget. This is only one of many instances where Mr. Densmore is, shall be put it kindly, mistaken.

The provision for a salaried "technical consultant" is a necessity as a qualified First Class Engineer must, by law be available. These men do not offer their services on a volunteer basis. Mr. Densmore intimates that $25 per week for a student Chief Engineer is a princely sum. I suggest he try living on it. The $660 monitoring system he mentions is not, as Mr. Densmore suggests, for listening to ourselves; the purpose of this system is to conduct "proof of performance" tests in accordance with FCC Rules and Regulations, a body of law with which Densmore is apparently unfamiliar.

As far as our space in the Student Union is concerned, Densmore himself made the point that we have received no grants for our contemplated move. In the interests of preserving the sanity of the Student Senate, (not to mention the Student Activities Tax), we decided not to go to the Senate and ask for the $75,000 it would cost for the move. If Mr. Densmore has any ideas on how to raise this money, he did not include them in his article.

The Student Union Governing Board, in May of 1971 committed itself to reserving space in the Student Union for the future use of WMUA. Since that time other groups have occupied, and will continue to occupy, this space. No space has been taken out of service because of the WMUA commitment. Since the time of the space allocation I have been attempting to secure funds for the utilization of such space. The poor economic situation, coupled with a general disapproval of progressive rock stations, has prevented us from obtaining such funds.

Mr. Densmore is complaining because we at WMUA demand quality for our listening audience. And that, as they say, is a strange sort of complaint indeed. In summary, I think it should be kept in mind that WMUA is attempting to present a broadcast schedule compatible with the interests of University students. Mr. Densmore's article reflects little understanding of this premise, or of the broadcast art in general.

John Zizis
General Manager
WMUA—FM

Further replies to Mr. Baglione's article will appear in the next edition to be published this coming Thursday.

To The Editor:

Before Friday's issue I had been surprised and mildly shocked by the lack of coverage of the weeks' events surrounding International Women's Day. A great many interesting and exciting events -- talks, films, poetry readings, plays -- were being put on by women in this area, on one of the profoundest social issues: sexism, and sexual oppression of women. But in last Wednesday's issue, for example, there was no article announcing the rally planned for that day, and not even a list of speakers and their topics (I had to go to the Student Union to find this out). It appeared that the event was being ignored. Again, in Thursday's Collegian, there was no article which discussed or gave an account of that very important rally -- just a picture and a couple of anecdotal stories about relatively superficial aspects of it.

Friday's article by Frank Baglione, then, is the main acknowledgement in the Collegian of the events of last week. To describe that article as "sexist" or "chauvinist" is too mild -- it was insulting, ignorant, crude, and bigoted.

As a community newspaper the Collegian has a responsibility to let bigots have their say, as they too are part of this community. Besides this, however, there is the responsibility to report events, and to gather commentary from informed, thoughtful people. It is not too late for the Collegian staff to get itself together and give this community an intelligent retrospective on the fine educational and cultural work given us last week.

John Brentlinger

To the Editor:

A response to the women screaming "Women Unite! Rally Now?" at the door of the Hatch during lunchtime on Wednesday, March 8th: Instead of promoting the feminist movement, I feel you did it harm by reinforcing the belief of many people that women, especially feminists, are idiots. I saw little rallying but I did hear a lot of "it figures" laughter.

Maryanne Kuroczko

To the Editor:

Once again we (March 10) have been treated to a misogynistic tirade from the pen of Frank Baglione. From the first paragraph to the last, his gross misunderstanding of the Women's Movement and his equally gross "witticisms," indicate that although he may feel the movement has peaked, he must also feel that a threat still exists; why else would he devote two full pages to knocking around individuals, groups, and ideas that are "an embarrassment, an anachronism."??

Rather than go thru the article and deal with it in its entirety (that would be an article in itself), I would simply like to deal with a few points which are important to me personally.

First of all, the Student Senate Women's Committee was formed, not as another way to spend money, as was alleged (we have no budget this year), but because of a recognition by the Senate that there are genuine problems faced by women on this campus. An effective, representative Senate has a responsibility to address these problems, and to try and find solutions.

I'm not sure what Mr. Baglione ws referring to when he mentioned the Faculty Senate Women's Caucus; however, I think we should be cognizant of the fact that the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women is hard at work; and because of their work, HEW has told the University that unless it develops an affirmative action program to change the bias against women in its staffing patterns, monetary consequences will be suffered.

Second of all, to deal with the two ideological "errors" we (The Women's Movement - of which I am only one person - part - voice) are charged with:

1) Rejection of traditional methods of discipline and organization--we are trying to create a new kind of society; one based on a non-hierarchal system where knowledge and skills and work are shared, where discipline is self-imposed, where we can break free from limits often imposed by division of labor. We still divide tasks amonst ourselves, we're just learning to perform more and different kinds; we're eliminating some of the mystery and fear inherent in being limited to certain work categories with no vision outside of these.

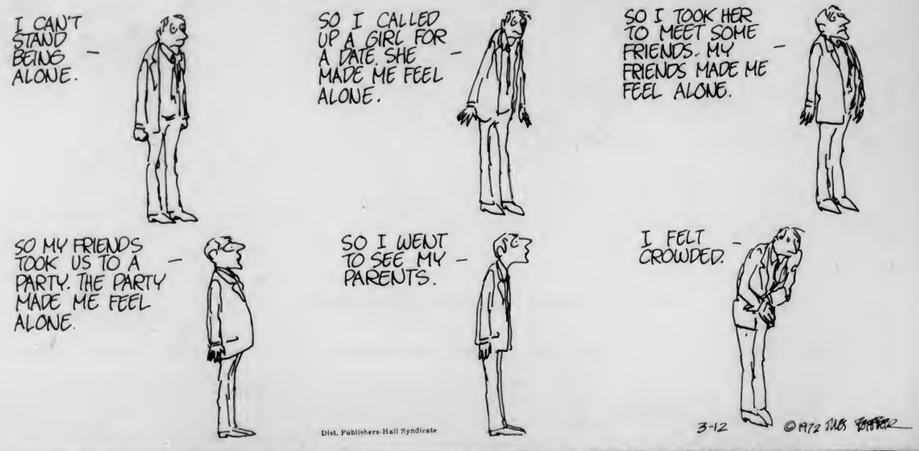
2) Hatred of males--why should we hate males? (if indeed we hate anyone, it might as well be meaningful.) Males created the economic system which oppresses us, they created the value system which oppresses us, they are the ones who receive the sexual, psychological, and material benefits of the institutions which govern our day-to-day lives. We cannot expect people who have been slaves for their entire historical existence, and who continue to be enslaved today, not to hate those people who have been and are today (through psychological, economic, and physical force), their masters.

SELF-DETERMINATION FOR ALL,

Mira Marshall
Chairperson
Student Senate Women's Committee

Mr. Baglione replies: I was not surprised to see, in the large volume of mail we received concerning the article "Women In Revolt," that my critics were almost exclusively members of the women's liberation movement and that they had been far too literal in their reading of that article. Dictated by their narrow thought, which will brook no shades of grey between right and wrong positions on "their" issue, the women's liberationists missed the entire thrust of the article, and my impiety became, in the bosom of the self-righteous, sin.

Thus in the eyes of a pompous John Brentlinger, I am branded a bigot to whom he reluctantly grants the freedom of expression, (how could he be a liberal and do otherwise?) just so long as Poor Richard's and the Collegian fulfill their responsibility to present an event in the manner he feels is proper. Our philosophy professor's allegation that the newspaper failed to properly emphasize and report on the activities of "Women's Cultural Week" questions either his eyesight of literacy in light of the fact that the Collegian carried notices of the event well in advance (the Wednesday schedule was in that morning's paper on page 10), and that several articles reported on different aspects of the week including two stories on Women's International Day. If these articles were less than satisfying or inspiring to the professor, it was because the events themselves were ponderous, silly and largely ignored by the students--like many a lecture.



As for the radical women, their hurt is evident, they feel their own pain keenly. Yet they still adamantly refuse to accept their own callousness, their own shallowness, their vulnerability to ridicule. They totally lack the ability for self-criticism; they cannot laugh at themselves.

And it is with good cause that they brood and hate. As Mary Waterbury wrote in a letter to the New York Times Magazine: "I think that the vague distrust which we feel toward the militant liberationist can be traced to an intuitive awareness of the militant's anger--an anger which springs not, as she believes and would have us believe, from her experiences of the very real injustices which she describes, but rather from her own terrible fear, largely unconscious, that she, as a woman, must destroy her very nature in order to attain full equality with men. .

What the militant is really saying is this: 'I preach that women are equal by nature to men, but I really don't believe it. I believe that women are innately and intrinsically inferior to men and, therefore, the only conclusion I can draw is that if a woman wants to be treated equally, she must stop being a woman.' "

This woman's eloquent words will, no doubt, be interpreted as the unenlightened prose of one of the "stupid" women, just as Jan Liva was attacked by Ultra-liberationist Kay Raymond for the way Liva's article in last Thursday's Collegian captured the inanity of the Women's Int'l Day. Yet all these critics of militant women's liberation actually seek is an adjustment of women's position without the crude and vicious performances of some women whose psychological situation seems more critical than their social one.

Center. Last year the Student Governing Board appropriated money for the cafeteria in the rear of the Campus Center; a bar, a sound booth, and stage equipment were brought in. Now, the cafeteria and bare bring in more people continuously throughout the day than did the cafeteria that was previously located there.

In an interview, Vadas said he thought the entertainment and prices are better than in town. "While the bar pays for the free admission nights, we must maintain cover charges at times, to keep the low prices for food and drinks." Usually enough money is made to cover the entertainment, with a small profit. "For those under twenty one," said Vadas, "the Bluewall is the only place in town for them to hear a band."

I attended a Sunday night show to see a theatre group perform excerpts from a Broadway musical. The show was fairly polished, yet the audience of about forty people was not all that receptive. Sunday nights are generally empty, yet this can prove to be an excellent choice of time to view a performance in an uncrowded, relaxed atmosphere. The week nights are more bustling and busy, as people flow in and out, stopping in to divert themselves from studying or business. The enthusiasm of the week night audience can compete with the band, but it succeeds as a social gathering place, where one can meet and talk to friends, eat, drink.

The original architecture of the room has had to be redone to fit its present purposes. A long bar was constructed along the back "blue wall", a sound booth and stage equipment worth $20,000 were installed, and three large canvases were erected for murals. Also for decoration and for practical purposes, drapes were put up to dim the glaring light and to curtain the mud which can be seen on the outside. The combination of drapes and the decor of blue add warmth and tightness to the room. The architect, Breuer, originally designed the room to be open, spacious, and "flowing", and since the coming of the Bluewall all of these concepts analogous to the rest of the Campus Center have been necessarily destroyed. This, indeed, distinctively sets off the Bluewall from the rest of the Campus Center.

A "couple of hundred dollars per week" has been used for advertising, including classifieds, newspaper ads, and hand drawn posters. Since its opening in late January the record for the highest attendance was et by Don Stover, a well-known blue grass banjo picker, who drew in an audience of 1,180. The band "Clean Living" pulled in 950-1,000 one night. The most popular weekly show is the Wednesday night coffeehouse when between 400-700 people attend.

The Bluewall has acquired a reputation for strictly enforcing the twenty one year old drinking law. Egan anticipates an eighteen year old law, but until then no expansion for the room or its facilities is planned. In an evening the drinkers must be separated from the under aged by barricades, an unseemly but necessary accomodation, which seems to be and has thus far been respected.

The policy agreed on by both Egan and Vadas is that the Bluewall "provides good value of entertainment in an atmosphere conducive to informality and relaxation— a break away from academics and business." It has been created as an experiment and shall remain in the experimental mode, subject to change in program and flexible in its service to the campus community.

Eating Out

An Adventure In Rustic Sophistication

BY PATRICIA BUCHANAN

The rapid success of The Rusty Scupper certainly gives evidence of the blessings of a good advertising campaign and a mild winter. But more credit should go to whoever sized up Amherst as a miniature city eager to break free of its small town habits and demonstrate its sophistication. The quality of the food at The Rusty Scupper is secondary--it is very good, in fact excellent--what seems more important is the manner in which it is served. Every detail seems to have been geared to maintain an atmosphere of casual sophistication.

The menu is unexciting, as might be expected from a bill of fare which is a near-duplicate of half a dozen others. The food itself, while almost too bland, appears to be of premium quality and to be skillfully prepared. If skill is involved in a complete absence of herbs and civilizing sauces. But complaining about plain food is nitpicking when the quality of each item is so high. Shall I rave on about the firmness of the baked potato, or tell you cheery stories of the sprightly crispness of those humble vegetables of the (ubiquitous) salad bar?

Nevermind all that, for the roast of beef was prime and perfect and tender even in the near raw state which I prefer. The sirloin steak will be done just as you specify, the crab is good, the shrimp teriyaki not what it could be. In short, the food is ordinary, much as at many another place within a ten-mile radius serving a similar clientele.

So, as long as the managers maintain the standards established by the other restauranteurs in this Valley they do no harm to the air of suburban sophistication they have so successfully copied from the pages of Town and Country. Biff Barnard and Ralph Robertson have made full use of the advantages of the barn they purchased. Only 31 tables are spaced out across the floor and stalls of the first story. The entire loft being reserved as a bar and cocktail lounge as well as a stage for the nightly floor show with Richard and Becky Stover.

The limited number of tables serves the purposes of both the patron and the patronized. For the diner experiences the rare treat of both intimacy and space, while the owners route those who must wait--sometimes up to an hour on weekends--upstairs to their comfortable and spacious lounge. The drinks are somewhat thin but are priced lower than at other establishments, while the dinners are priced higher. All vegetables, including potatoes are separate, as are all beverages and desserts. But the diner may have "all he wants" from the salad bar the soup tureen and the bread basket. Clearly, The Rusty Scupper is not aiming for the student clientele--if such a word is appropriate for students--nor even for a large part of the local faculty.

The atmosphere is geared to the no-longer young who are still generations from being old. The members of the early twenty crowd who do drift in have the wistful air of first-daters out of their league, and are treated with doting kindness by the staff. Ones first impression of the restaurant is that it has captured a fine blend of the cozy, bustling plainness of The Grist Mill and the dusty elegance of the Lord Jeff. But no longer perusal this impression changes to one of calculated country sophistication. The handmade wooden tables have teakwood chopping-block tops. The dinners are served on tasteful, subdued pottery. The cloth napkins are made of flour-sack print cotton, and the young waiters are comfortably dressed with matching shirts. About the only mistake was the retention of the paddles as menus, undoubtably a carry-over from the west coast franchise.

Ultimately the calculation succeeds. For it still affords the hapless diner a chance for a very good meal to be enjoyed at his own pace in a quiet, pleasant unhurried atmosphere. And since all successful endeavors take planning, why should we take offense if occasionally the calculation is obvious.

The Rusty Scupper - Open all week 5:30 to 10:00; Fridays 5:30 to 1:00; Sundays 12:00 to 9:00. Dinner prices approx $5.00 to $6.00, mixed drinks approx. $1.00; no reservations after 5:30 sitting.

Animal Farm Revisited

An Analysis of the Florida Presidential Primary

BY PHILIP CHRISTOPHER

"Mr. Jones, of the Manor Farm, had locked the henhouses for the night, but was too drunk to remember to shut the popholes. With the ring of light from his lantern dancing from side to side, he lurched across the yard, kicked off his boots at the back door, drew himself a last glass of beer from the barrel in the scullery, and made his way up to bed, where Mrs. Jones was already snoring.

"As soon as the light in the bedroom went out there was a stirring and a fluttering all through the farm buildings. Word had gone round during the day that old Major, the prize Middle White boar, had had a strange dream on the previous night and wished to communicate it to the other animals. It had been agreed that they should all meet in the big barn as soon as Mr. Jones was safely out of the way. Old Major (so he was called, though the name under which he had been exhibited was Willingdon Beauty) was so highly regarded on the farm that everyone was quite ready to lose an hour's sleep in order to hear what he had to say."

And so went the Florida primary. For weeks the media had been inundating the public with talk of the now-famous Floridian cross-section vote. All results had been projected days before the vote. The plot had been developed exquisitely, promising the most dramatic of climaxes. Even Walter Cronkite had flown down to Miami for on-the-spot coverage. Not a bad show.

By midnight, the curtain was falling on all the actors and, unlike the case of the New Hampshire primary, television viewers were able to get a good night's sleep, secure in the thought that their figures were final, not so prone to struggle for the early morning edition for an updated report.

Americans have always been fans to the circus. To see the funny man chased by lions, losing his pants or breaking out in comical tears seems to strike a touching chord in the near-sadistic American. Last Tuesday, the almost-Greatest Show on Earth stopped off in sun-tanned Florida for a taste of the real orange juice. Some enjoyed it, some gagged and one even got laryngitis.

If New Hampshire didn't open the season, Florida certainly fired a resounding load of buckshot. Much like in the circus, more like on an obstacle course, the candidates criss-crossed the state from Tampa to Key West, dropping millions of dollars in their wake and coming up with tickets to Geroge's victory celebration.

Wallace himself hadn't even bothered to buy a ticket. Standing in stupor at his Orlando headquarters, he groped for words to explain his resounding victory. 42%. All the polls had called for a victory of between 30 and 35. As the excited masses roamed helplessly around the hall, George puffed his jowls and announced the date of his invasion of the North. "A victory for the average man..." he declared as a most unaverage winner collected the spoils of victory. By his side stood his new wife, looking very much like the perfect cocktail waitress.

The victory of the Alabama Governor brought to mind images of the 1968 election. The media, it seems, had grossly misinterpreted the results of that contest. Nixon didn't simply squeak by. Combining the votes of Richard and George, we can clearly see that the conservative forces managed to get 55% of the vote. Last Tuesday, they managed to pile 73% in Florida.

Second best went to Hubert Humphrey, that never-say-die ball of joy from Minnesota. Obviously elated at having won back all his marbles from former running mate Muskie, the Hump's remarks centered on Wallace. "...his vote is somewhat of a protest," Hubert stated while declaring himself the true carrier of the Greek fire. But he was unconvincing, tired-looking, even as he bounced from network to network singing his songs of praise. Hubert, the loser, is doomed to play the same role as Wallace, that of the spoiler. Yet, with his 18%, Hubert feels he must heed the call of the people.

And third best with 14% went to Henry Jackson. As one commentator stated on the eve of the primary, "Jackson campaigns much like he swims....with more energy than form." Redwood Jackson, like Hubert and George, also claimed victory. It was a night for winners. There's very little to say about Henry, as he gropes for serious audiences. One gets the impression that perhaps he would like to preside over the Senate rather than sit with it. Yet even if his sights are on the Vice-Presidency, his bland campaign, his emerging image of dullness, promises to be no asset to any nominee.

While the conservatives were holding victory celebrations, the liberals were still arguing over the crumbs, as they are often found doing. The Lindsay-McGovern scuffle for the king-pin status of the left was the evening's number one comedy. Lindsay, the "slick-chick" of politics, stood tall in his Miami headquarters, now and then giving the television cameras a glimpse of his Cover Girl mystique. McGovern, sounding much like a preacher from the Midwest, wanted to talk about Wisconsin. As it turned out, it was a 7-7 tie. An unfortunate position for both men. More sad, though, for the left. They've yet to be stricken with a vision of a leader.

Bringing up the rear was the sad figure of Shirley Chisholm. Small, frail and speechless, deserted by her "sisters" and her "people," Shirley didn't even bother appearing at her headquarters. Laryngitis was the reason given. The message, the protest, that she was to carry throughout the campaign, seemed lost in the Florida sun. Unable to decide whether she was the candidate of women or blacks, she ended up with neither. Her 3% total included only 18% of the blacks. Almost half the black vote went to Humphrey.

Shirley Chisholm....a woman or a black?

Saving the best for last, we now come to the biggest loser of them all, Edmund Sixtus Muskie. Stunned in New Hampshire, forgotten in Georgia, Muskie travelled south to prove himself once and for all. "We have lost," he said, keeping back the tears but not the intense hurt. Muskie expressed sincere concern at the fact that so many people could vote for a "demagogue" like George Wallace. But it came off sounding more like disappointment in the fact that they didn't vote for him. He spoke only of losing to Wallace and never mentioned the fact that he came out on the short end of a 2 to 1 plurality in what was to be a close race for second. He seemed dazed. Even his suit was wrinkled, ready for the next dry cleaning in Illinois. The Abraham Lincoln mystique did not work in Florida. And some say that Muskie is leaving Florida not only tanless, but more importantly, on his way to Lincoln's final burial in Illinois.

It was said that Florida would be a good test, it being a microcosm of the nation's electorate. If that theory is still to be held to, what we see is a tired people. Tired of politicians, sick of circus elections, fearful of liberal encroachment on basic civil rights. Some tend to forget that "civil rights" is not the personal property of the left. Bussing children is as much an infringement on individual rights as telling a Black to go to the back of the bus.

Floridians showed their distaste for bussing, too. The message was quite clear. 74% against. It's no wonder that politicians feared putting the same question on ballots in other states.

Amazing as it may seem, the Democrats seem to be seeking even more punishment. One would have thought that 1968 taught lessons to radicals and Democrats alike. The ass is a fitting mascot.

Aside from a strong conservative strain, it is difficult to predict anything after the results of the Florida primary. The race is obviously wide open, but no one seems able to fill the void. Wallace could never be elected, neither Chisholm. Humphrey is a loser, so too Muskie. Lindsay and McGovern are a bit too absolute. Jackson, well...and Hartke, McCarthy, Yorty. Such an array of clowns but no comics.

The obvious winner is Richard Nixon. More so than his 87% indicates. Nixon's tight control of the issues is beginning to pay off. His stand on each individual issue may not satisfy all, yet it is nevertheless a stand, a direction. More than anything else, America is seeking stability after a decade of disruption and chaos. What we may find in November, then, is that many more people may choose to vote for the party that lovely Lindsay deserted.

Keeping this trend towards conservatism and stability in mind, the Republicans obviously have much more to offer the electorate. An incumbent President that has managed, in his first term, to quiet down the domestic scene, disarm the international scene, and even make friends with the Chinese.

Switch your channel now to the Democrats. Pure chaos. The party is like a many-headed dog, fiercely biting at itself. Once and a while, one of the candidates will remember to take a stab at the party in power. Can such an organization hope to win the November election? Although displaying to the public a fine array of choices, they nevertheless manage to leave one with no option. A feat possible only for the Democrats.

"But they had not gone twenty yards when they stopped short. An uproar of voices was coming from the farmhouse. They rushed back and looked through the window again. Yes, a violent quarrel was in progress. There were shoutings, bangings on the table, sharp suspicious glances, furious denials....

"Twelve voices were shouting in anger, and they were all alike. No question, now, what had happened to the faces of the pigs. The creatures outside looked from pig to man, and from man to pig, and from pig to man again; but already it was impossible to say which was which."

Full Rendering Of A Complex Woman

By KAREN WALSH

Eleanor and Franklin
by Joseph P. Lash

"He might have been happier with a wife who was completely uncritical. That I was never able to be, and he had to find it in some other people. Nevertheless, I think I sometimes acted as a spur, even though the spurring was not always wanted or welcome. I was one of those who served his purposes."

Eleanor wrote these lines toward the end of her autobiography This I Remember in summing up her relation to her husband, while at the same time revealing her impression of herself. This impression is consistent with the Eleanor Roosevelt who lives in Mr. Lash's extensive book. She is one who served a purpose, serious, strong, moral and modest, never willing to admit to the great power she wielded, but using it all the same to serve those things she loved or believed in. She never seemed to believe in her own importance, and it is most interesting to contrast her opinions of herself with the opinions Mr. Lash holds of her, as in chapter after chapter of superlatives she swells to larger-than-lifesize. No doubt she was a formidable figure, and this book drives home the point.

Anna Eleanor Roosevelt was born into the height of New York Society in 1884. Insecurity was her earliest companion. She found her mother aloof and more concerned with her two younger brothers; Eleanor was called "Granny" because she was so old-fashioned and homely a child. Her father was quite the opposite, however, and Eleanor felt he alone loved her. Unfortunately, Elliot Roosevelt was full of good intentions but wild, unstable and given to drink, and when Eleanor was six her mother had him committed to an asylum for treatment. Her mother died two years later and her grandmother was made her guardian, but she never gave up the hope of returning to live with her father. He died when she was ten, and she carried both his letters and his influence with her for the rest of her life. She remained with her grandmother in a dark gloomy house, restricted, unloved and miserable until in 1899, at age fifteen, she was sent abroad to Allenswood in Paris to be educated and finished. Those years in Paris were the happiest of her life up to that time, and finally she felt she "belonged somewhere".

When Eleanor returned to the United States in 1902, her uncle Theodore was the President, and the mood of the nation took its cue from the radiant and reckless personality of its leader. Her Uncle Ted's disdain for society's demands eased Eleanor's insecurities regarding her debutante "coming out", and his ideas about living for the advantage of one's country inspired her to take an active part in a group of volunteers working in New York settlement houses. It was during the swirl of society teas, dances, parties, and shows, that Eleanor had occasion to see her cousin Franklin with greater and greater frequency. Eleanor was not without suitors, but she found it unbelievable that her handsome and much-sought-after cousin should have an especial interest in her. Indeed, it was one of Franklin's most fateful decisions when, in 1903, the couple became secretly engaged. Franklin's mother Sara, a strong imposing figure who had no desire to lose exclusive control in her son's life, opposed the match as firmly as she dared. Again Eleanor felt unwanted, but with Franklin's encouragement she tried in every way to win the older woman's love. They were married on March 17th, 1904, in a proper society wedding attended by all the right people, including the President of the United States whose appearance completely eclipsed the importance of the bride and groom and left them deserted!

Eleanor at last had a "place" in life and a sense of security, but a great deal of her early married life was spent trying to please her husband and her mother-in-law. Eleanor was strict with herself, a moralist almost to the point of Puritanism; she had seen her father drink himself to death and disgrace the family with his excesses and wildness, and she had no sympathy for that side of life. Franklin, on the other hand, was lighthearted, flirtatious and congenial, fond of the gay society life and good times. She was not able to accompany this side of his nature, which was probably a major factor in the Lucy Mercer affair that Eleanor discovered in 1918. Or, as Eleanor's cousin Alice Longworth said later in justification of her encouragement of Franklin's affair with Lucy: "He deserved a good time. He was married to Eleanor." That "trial by fire", as Mr. Lash calls it, was the point of no return for Eleanor. She was driven into a more public life if only to escape her mother-in-law's domination and the pain her husband's infidelity brought.

At the start of World War I, the Franklin Roosevelts were living in Washington. Franklin had been appointed Assistant Secretary of the Navy in 1913 under Wilson, and Eleanor with five children still managed to entertain ambassadors, officials and other important visitors as well as entering into war work with the Red Cross and the Navy Department. The labor movement began to interest her. She immersed herself in causes, volunteering and organizing, asserting herself as her own person. In the 1920 election, Franklin was on the Democratic ticket, nominated for Vice President, but it was Harding's victory and the Roosevelts moved back to New York. There she began working with the League of Women Voters, and the power of the women's vote was something she made use of to Franklin's advantage in the years to come. She learned the rudiments of public speaking and became more at ease with the intricasies of politics. She became Franklin's partner in his bid for the 1922 governorship of New York, his mainstay and his "proxy" when in the summer of 1921 he came down with polio. She kept his name in the press while he underwent the painful struggle of recovery. The hope of governorship was abandoned then, but later realized in 1928, after years of preparation, organizing, speeches, publications and hard campaigning by Eleanor for the purpose of keeping Franklin alive in the eyes of the Democratic party. She was always his best running mate.

From Albany in 1928 to Washington, D.C., in 1932 was an exciting, exhausting and successful trip. Franklin was elected to four consecutive terms of office, a remarkable show of trust in one man by an entire country, and not earned without great effort on his part as well as on the part of his wife. Eleanor swung the women's vote; she took interest in the pleas of the Southern blacks, the labor question, the youth movement, and Communist situation; she took on a regular syndicated newspaper column and a number of lecture tours and personal appearances, and she became the foremost spokesman for the New Deal short of the President himself. She changed the position of the First Lady in the eyes of the country, refusing to be cloistered in the White House or limited to hostessing activities. She was both Mother and Teacher to the nation, providing insights into the life at the White House, answering hundreds upon hundreds of letters and requests, shaking countless hands as she welcomed people from every conceivable area of life into the White House. She provided a direct link to the President and had her eyes open to any ideas that came in her direction. She maintained from the first that she "never wanted to be a President's wife", but she knew Franklin's ambitions and was instrumental in helping him realize them. As he ran for office, term after term, she realized the toll it was taking on him. World War II was raging, and Franklin's health was failing, but the country seemed to feel that only he could guide them through, and she hoped as the fourth term began that he could hold on long enough to win the war. As she wrote to a friend: "Think he faced the fact, five years ago, that if he had to go on in office to accomplish his work, it must shorten his life, and he made a choice. If he can accomplish what he set out to do, and then dies, it will have been worth it." When Franklin died in April of 1945, the major part of his work was behind him, and Eleanor seemingly remained convinced that it had been worth it. Her cable to her sons read: "He did his job to the end as he would want you to do."

Whether Eleanor, too, "did her job to the end" or not is something the reader is not allowed to know from Mr. Lash's book. The story opens with her parentage back to her father's father, but it ends before it is truly finished, with Franklin's death rather than her own. It is subtitled "The Story of their Relationship", and one cannot deny that a relationship ends with the death of one of the partners, but this reader at least was left most curious as to what Eleanor did with the rest of her life. The book was obviously her story, her side of the picture and fully in sympathy with her outlook; it acquainted one so deeply with her as a person that the sudden break at Franklin's death was disappointing. She lived her life with Franklin, overshadowed by one thing or another, whether it was his position as the President, his mother, his relationship as a husband or as a partner. She would not allow herself credit for being a person in her own right, and although Mr. Lash more than supplements her modesty with descriptions to the other extreme, one is left wondering how the woman felt when at last she did not have to worry about living up to Franklin's expectations, pleasing Sara, being accepted by those she loved, and presenting the proper image as First Lady. When she could just be Eleanor, then was she happy? One might hope so, for she bore more than her share of the pain in her dealings with others. It forced her to be strong and self-reliant, and some would call her a great woman. The author of this book would be one, but her personal bias aside, he presents a many-faceted picture of Eleanor. His work is an interesting combination of history text and diary' just as one begins to tire of plowing through names, dates and organizations, one is given a few pages of excerpts from Eleanor's personal letters, or quotes from interviews with her friends and relatives. (Alice Longworth was especially interesting in her interviews with the author; one might wonder what axe she had to grind!)

Mr. Lash was a personal friend of Eleanor's, which lends a certain amount of authority as well as bias to the things he has to say about her. He manages to convey the sort of feeling about the woman that surely must have run rampant throughout the country during the Roosevelt years. She was not the sort of public figure that one could remain neutral about; in fact, after having carried the book around with me for a couple of weeks, I began to find myself being inundated with Eleanor Roosevelt stories by the parents of several of my friends! She had a strong impact, and led a full and complex life; somehow Mr. Lash manages to catch a good part of her on paper. She was straight-laced, stern and disciplined, but she was very loving and human as well. Or, as Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., wrote in the Foreward to this book: "She was, in fact, a tough old bird who saw earth as well as stars."

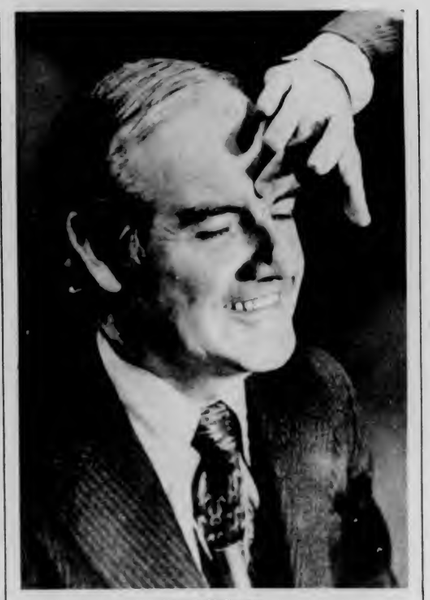
Trouping For George



BY BOB JUDGE

By the time I returned to UMass this semester, I was convinced that America needed George McGovern as its President. I had watched him declare his candidacy more than a year ago which began an arduous and frustrating attempt throughout 1971 to show people that he stood for their interests above those of corporate and military America, that he had specific proposals for advancing them, and that his record had been consistent with these aims for the previous ten years. It was his honesty, consistency, and willingness that I found then and continue to find now to be the source of the support that I and many others give him.

So I stood already convinced as I braved the cold one night to attend that week's meeting of Students for McGovern. Chairman Reid Fishman, a very likeable and hardworking guy looked very official as he faced us from an elevated head table, ice water in hand. Students for McGovern meetings tend to be very disorganized but I received the message that we should all be looking toward and especially travelling to our neighbor New Hampshire to keep the McGovern campaign fires burning. Ken Mosakowski even informed us that it was "do or die" in this first primary. Ed Muskie's familiarity to the New Hampshire voters was keeping us below twenty percent there and that would never do.

So early the next morning Marlee Hennessey and I represented Butterfield House at 41 Phillips St., Amherst, McGovern's Western Massachusetts headquarters. An hour and a half later eight of us in two cars arrived in Keene, N.H. An "orientation" there at the Keene office made us real canvassers and with a list of registered Democrats and Independents on eight streets we were on our way in twelve degree weather, twenty mile an hour gusts.

Unfortunately, skiing conditions were optimal that day and only half of the people were home. Our approach was something like this: after introducing ourselves as volunteers for the Senator, we asked for an impression of McGovern's campaign to date, ostensibly seeking a positive, neutral, or negative response. Some people looked at us as if to say, "George McGovern, oh yeah, I've heard that name, doesn't he live down the street somewhere?" One guy said nothing and slammed the door in our face. However most people pleaded neutrality, explaining in occasionally broken English that they simply had not formed an impression of McGovern. Others hadn't even heard of the primary. Several women simply offered their husbands to us, as they always voted the way he did. Our second question was, "What do you feel is the biggest issue in this election?", and three out of five indicated the economy, some simply saying that everything costs more lately, and what was Nixon doing about it? This made sense to me because New Hampshire is the poorest state in New England and the lack of a sales tax may make cigarettes and liquor very inexpensive but the depressed nature of the once booming manufacturing interests is felt everywhere as in Troy, a 1500-peopled town we later canvassed. Its residents try unsuccessfully to get by or employment in the factory of the Troy Blanket Company. In these cases I offered McGovern's Economic Conversion plan, one which would shift our economy from wartime to peace time production, and though uncomfortable with fiscal problems, I usually got the point across. Others expressed concern about the war and we would point out McGovern's active opposition to Vietnam in 1963. There were occasional invitation to "come in and warm up" but most people were busy with the kids or the dishes and were pleasant if direct. Images of crusty, brief Downeasterners were on my mind until one old guy, standing on his porch in a T-shirt, yelled the temperature at us and said that Spring was on the way. We must have seen fifty people that day.

George McGovern

Back at the headquarters we sent letters to the people we talked to and position papers on what they individually mentioned to be to them important issues. This was the effective, personal, grassroots level kind of campaign that McGovern ran in New Hampshire. It is why one feels so comfortable in the organization, knowing that the real power goes from the student volunteers on the bottom to the top, not the other way around. It is also I guess why people say that McGovern's volunteers are by far the most enthusiastic to be found anywhere.

That night, route 91 got us back to Amherst by dinner time. During the week activities included manning the McGovern table in the Campus Center, arranging publicity, recruiting new volunteers, hassling with the Boston office, and hearing the same questions ("Do you really think he can win?") again and again.

Two weeks later it was back to Keene through a terrific snowstorm. Still only McGovern really had students out for him, and we were optimistic. I met a pretty schoolteacher and she and I took on some streets in the town's outskirts. One storeowner let us eat our peanut butter and jelly there as he and I debated the inevitability of war and killing, he saying that history proved it, I saying that even if it did, I wouldn't accept it.

Later I had to laugh as we talked to a young couple over the blast of a snowblower. He and I agreed that no one man could solve the country's problems while his wife asked Barbara why she wasn't supporting Lindsay because of his good looks. That day was cut short by bad weather and Barbara and I sat in the headquarters, watching people return from the battle against weather and narrowmindedness (I never decided which was the real enemy). Always the questions: "How did ya do today?", or "Do ya think we can win Keene?", and the contradictory answers, "Terrible!", or "The people here are sooo nice!" I kept flashing back to the Student Strike; the bonds between people so quickly formed, so easily dissolved.

The next day it was Troy, about eight miles out of Keene and a town where I kept looking for "Win with Wilkie" bumper stickers. We didn't have voting lists so we tried every house one by one, getting a majority of "Sorry, we're Republicans." There were also a lot of obviously old and poorer people that day, and a lot of trailers, watch dogs, and Democrats who felt that it didn't matter who was nominated, that they were all the same and Nixon would win anyway. A bad day, really. By previous agreement, everyone canvassing in Troy met later that afternoon in the home of the only strong sympathizers we had in Troy- a hip, young, cosmopolitan couple who admitted that they didn't know why they returned to Troy year after year. "We really have nothing in common with the people", one said. We took the long way back that night, on routes 10 and 63, through all those small towns like Northfield and Millers Falls.

Our last trip to New Hampshire was the last weekend of the campaign, March 4-5. Twenty of us from UMass divided our forces between Peterboro and Salem. In Salem, most of the houses had already been canvassed and the phone calls made, two and three times in some cases.

Everyone was sort of standing around in a church basement, some of them obviously new volunteers at this late stage, when George McGovern unexpectedly arrived. I had seen him speak here at UMass last October but this was different. A quiet fell over the crowd as he came in. Someone pointed out Ray Shoenke of the Washington Redskins who said a few words. Also, a woman entered, tolding McGovern's arm across the icy steps, and she introduced herself as a POW's wife. McGovern moved slowly among his supporters and when he got to me, he looked into my eyes, smiled, said "Well, hello there, what's your name?", and shook my hand very firmly. He had learned well the importance of keeping in touch with his people. He asked me where I was from and I told him and he asked how it was going there and I said very well. It happened that fast, yet I felt blushingly important.

He stayed about fifteen minutes and then he was gone, chatting with reporters and obviously enjoying the warmer weather that day as he left.

I did some final canvassing that afternoon. I was starting to feel confident that we would do well. We had overcome the "low recognition factor" and the "one issue candidate" charge, later evidenced by our strong showing among blue collar workers.

Time passed slowly until Tuesday, March 7. By 9 A.M. people in the dorm were asking me whether or not we were ahead. I mentioned that the polls stay open until 7 P.M. and that the lack of voting machines in New Hampshire would mean it would be more like 9 P.M. before anything was known.

The rest we all know. George McGovern won that "moral victory" in New Hampshire, getting 38% to Muskie's 48%. Just three weeks ago, CBS was giving us some 18%. A remarkable showing. We like to think that we're on our way.

By the time this comes out George McGovern will have finished fourth or fifth in Florida, which is to be expected given a number of factors there, for instance that several candidates did not enter New Hampshire and were therefore free to put all their time into Florida. UMass Students for McGovern is not about to fly to Illinois or Wisconsin, the next primaries, but the potentially decisive Massachusetts primary is April 25 and you must register to vote in it by March 25. Beyond that, you might even enjoy ringing doorbells some Saturday in April . . .

Environment

The Great Ecology Fad Is Over

BY JOSH GORDON AND JOHN KIRKPATRICK

The great environmental awareness fad is finally over. Some people view ecology as no longer a movement to effect change for the embetterment and/or survival of mankind, but as a selling point to be taken into consideration before buying one's detergent. The truth of the matter is that people worry more about their personal ease than they will admit.

Here on campus even the students who in the recent past have expressed environmental awareness prefer convenience to ecology. This was the conclusion of the Coalition for Environmental Quality after investigating the soda vending system at U. Mass. Three years ago the Coke Bottling Co. of Northampton, which handles all soda vending on campus, changed from using paper cups to plastic cups due to student complaints. People affiliated with the machines would get from four to five complaints per day due to soggy cups.

Today the move toward greater convenience is on again and this time the trend is toward cans. There are now 16 can machines on campus and recently seven dorms requested that can machines be installed to replace cup machines.

As is typical with environmental issues, as things are made more convenient environmental damage is increased. The paper cup was least detrimental because they possibly could have been recycled and they are degradable. Plastic cups are nonrecyclable and are poorly degradable. The cans used on this campus and in most other locations (despite what some manufacturers would have you believe) are not always recyclable.

According to Mr. Louis Bresciano, manager of the food division of Northampton Coke, the franchized Coke cans throughout New England have only aluminum tops and bottoms; the rest of the can is steel. Because of this combination of aluminum and steel, these cans are impossible to recycle. The aluminum parts of the can are virtually indestructable in the environment.

As convenience increases so does cost. Just as it costs Coke more money to go from paper to plastic cups, it costs the consumer more to switch from cups to cans. Mr. Anthony J. Leslie, head of the vending services on campus, said that the 10¢ cup of soda has eight ounces in it and the 20¢ can has twelve ounces in it. The consumer is getting ripped off and here on campus it is the consumer who requests the changes.

Mr. Leslie stated that every month U. Mass. soda machines vend over 80,000 drinks. If the present trend continues to its logical conclusion all drinks will be vended in cans, U. Mass. would be throwing away over three tons of junked cans monthly.

In Washington and Richmond nonreturnable bottles and cans have been banned. A study done in those cities showed that this ban resulted in considerable savings to the consumer. If this were a national policy it was estimated that the savings to Americans would amount to 1.4 billion dollars per year.

"In New York City, the Con Edision Company found it could not keep up with public demands for power and it turned its advertising dollars into a "save a watt" campaign."

II. Cultures, Attitudes, Etc.

Cultures evolve, compete, and become extinct much like various species do in Darwin's theory of evolution. Our culture has interacted with its environment for centuries and has formed certain attitudes and priorities which have insured its survival and success.

Today due to the high levels of industrialization, man's relationship to his surroundings has radically changed. It is important to note, however, that our attitudes and/or environmental priorities are not changing.

The simplest effect of industrialization is that it boosts the per capita level of production. If the economy is to remain stable and balanced per capita consumption levels must also rise. America, shaped by modern day advertising and other socio-economic pressures, have made Americans the world's "best" consumers. The United States contains approximately 6% of the world's product. Obviously consumption levels is one of the major factors influencing environmental impact. On a per capita basis Americans consume twice as much as do Europeans. Such high consumption levels contribute to the depletion of natural resources and increases the volume of refuse and waste at staggering rates.

When the ecology movement began a revision of our personal and national priorities was called for. Today Corporate America's top priority is to sell and consume. This was the way it was before Earth Day: this is the way it is today.

The paramount thought for ecologists is that the world is of finite size and capabilities. This truth runs into direct conflict with the interests of Corporate America.

III. Power Companies and the Nitty-Gritty

Like all other industries, the power companies are in business to make money. Because of this, the power utilities would like to encourage the consumer to use as much power as possible. However, electrical power, no matter how it is produced, causes pollution. While selling you on the benefits of "clean electrical living" the companies neglect to mention the environmental degradation caused by the production of electrical power.

Ads expounding the virtues of electrical power show that the companies are "concerned" and are conducting research to find new ways of producing power. The national budget of the power industry includes 41 million dollars for research and development of new techniques and 320 million dollars for Public Relations and Advertising. One wonders where their priorities lie.

The newest ads tell of the extreme safety of nuclear power and its possibilities for clean "ecological" electricity. Ads appeared showing a Nuclear plant near Nixon's Florida retreat and how these reactors would give off less smoke than a match.

A student sits on his Coke Machine: "If the present trend continues its logical conclusion all drinks will be vended in cans, UMass would be throwing away over three tons of junked cans monthly."

Because of the great influence (political and economic) of the power industry, the other side of the story is rarely heard. Other arguments do exist however. The reactors constantly give off low level radioactive emissions and the effects of prolonged exposure to these low levels of radioactivity are not fully known. We do know that, like DDT, this radioactivity accumulates in food chains and builds to higher concentrations. Radiation is also a known cause of cancer but how much cancer is directly attributable to nuclear power is difficult to say. Drs. Arthur R. Tamplin and John W. Gofman, formerly radiation biologists at the A.E.C's Lawrence Radiation Lab in Livermore, California, in some recent findings estimate that "the radiation dosage which the average citizen may legally receive from federally sponsored atomic energy programs will cause 32,000 deaths per year from cancer and leukemia."

Among the other evils of nuclear power are the thermal pollution considerations, the possibility of "accidents," and the disposal of long-lived radioactive wastes.

As far as resource depletion is concerned, it is estimated that the earth's coal and oil reserves will be used up in about 400 years. Thus, traditional fossil fuel plants do constitute a dead end. Nuclear power is indeed the way of the future. In the meantime, adequate technology does exist to make fossil fuel plants environmentally safe. Tamplin and Gofman realizing these facts submitted testimony before the Pennsylvania Senate calling for a five year moratorium on the planning, construction, and operation of nuclear power plants throughout Pennsylvania. During these years, the A.E.C. could direct undivided attention to environmental safety and related issues.

U. Mass. students should note that 28 miles north of campus in Vernon, Vermont, the Yankee Atomic Power Company is in the process of completing construction of a huge nuclear plant. The Vermont Yankee is a 43.7 million dollar plant and it comes equipped with an entire building full of exhibits and P. R. men who would like nothing better than to take you on a guided tour. The exhibits emphasize the safety features of the plant and insist that the plant will forever be a "good neighbor."

The Atomic Energy Commission has 190 nuclear plants planned for the New England states. Construction is tentatively scheduled to begin within the next 30 years. Perhaps the real question is whether we really need all of this electricity. The power companies argue that they must build more plants to keep up with consumer demands. It is true that demand is rapidly rising: while the population of the U. S. increases about 1% annually, the demands made upon the power utilities are rising at ten times that rate. One should note that the demands, and the increases therein, can be partially correlated with the power industry's increased expenditures on advertising campaigns. Ads encourage people to leave a light burning all night to keep away burglars and to switch to electric heat. Most important of all, the ads sell the concept of clean, pollution-free electricity. Thus anyone with environmental concern need not feel guilty about wasting electricity or buying electric carving knives, toothbrushes, vibrators, can openers or hair brushes.

In New York City, the Con Edison Company found it could not keep up with public demands for power and it turned its advertising dollars into a "save a watt" campaign. This new drive encouraged people to conserve power and it was successful in reducing the projected power demand increase for the area.

In America today, the high level of consumption is the critical factor involving environmental impact. Thus it is worthwhile to examine the socio-economic factors which have brought the U.S. to such high levels of consumption. Business concerns are largely responsible for introducing these factors to the economy. A higher rate of consumption means more sales, which means more profits. Business, especially big business, will do everything within their power to make you buy more goods. Their main devices are planned obsolescence and advertising.

Obsolescence is where a product is planned to self-destruct in a certain period of time. It comes in two forms; one is physical and the other is psychological. An example of physical obsolescence is the car you bought three years ago which is now falling apart. Another example might be the shoes which wear out sooner than they should.

The polite term for psychological obsolescence is fashion. This is where a perfectly functional wardrobe can be deemed unuseable due to changing styles or when the care is out of vogue because of its "fins." Both of these forms of obsolescence are wasteful sales practices: they contribute to solid waste and resource depletion problems.

IV. Advertising

Advertising was once merely a way of letting the customer know what products were available and what costs were involved. Today some advertising is still straightforward and informative, but some advertisers have gone beyond this. In 1954 a study by the DuPont Corporation, conducted in supermarkets across the country, concluded that most purchases made in most supermarkets are on impulse. The shopper's purchase is less often a premeditated action than it is a see it/want it/buy it on the spot/affair. Impulse buying is not a rational, explainable phenomenon: it is largely influenced by the subconscious mind. If a substantial amount of purchases are a result of subconscious thought, why shouldn't advertising concentrate its efforts on the subconscious mind? A full page color ad reads, "You don't cop-out--why should your cigarette?" There is no rational message in this advertisement. It is psychological preparation to condition you to buy on impulse. How this form of advertising affects you is a long, controversial story but one thing is certain--it works! (see Vance Packard, The Hidden Persuaders)

Thirty years ago no one had ever heard of under arm deodorants and you would have been laughed at if you had used one. Today after a multi-million dollar advertising campaign it is common place. Likewise, the need for cigarettes, beauty aids, and yearly new model cars were all created. Artificial needs, when satisfied, boost consumption rates, create waste and help to deplete resources.

V. Cause and Effect

Ecology has fallen into the realm of ideals, along with peace and honesty in politics, which everyone will support verbally, but will not support with action. The drives and trends of our society today are just not conducive to leading ecological life styles and so most people do not lead them. Our super consumption rates cannot continue indefinitely. The world's resources are being managed poorly and the stocks are being depleted. An increase of world-wide education is making other countries question the wisdom which dictates that one country should consume 40% of the world's resources while other countries starve.

So basically nothing has changed with environmental issues. Some of the problems have been taken seriously and a few have been solved: most have not. We are now aware of the problems but not the solutions. Often times the solutions could be had if we would be willing to change our environmental attitudes and/or priorities. The media treats ecology differently, but only the rhetoric has changed. We are still a society and a people whose primary mission is to produce and consume despite the earth's finite size.

Kristofferson Hardly Impressive

BY BILL DENSMORE

"Border Lord" by KRIS KRISTOFFERSON (Monument)

Country and western music developed separately from popular music, as did original one-man blues. As each aged, it grew up, straying from its original form, and moved further from its strictly bounded geographic area. As the communications media and transportation services modernized, blues and C & W were carried throughout the U. S. and are being assimilated into popular music. Blues has evolved from the one-man, one-instrument (usually guitar) form to a soulful big band with a roller coaster rhythm. Similarly, C & W has absorbed an assortment of instruments and musical styles, while still keeping true to its original lyrical content.

Kris Kristofferson is a modern C & W artist. He started in the coffee houses of Nashville after Oxford University in England proved a bore. His first album ("Kristofferson") became recognized because other people recorded songs from it. (Jannis Joplin, "Me & Bobby McGee"; Sammi Smith, "Help Me Make It Through the Night"; Ray Price, "For the Good Times") On "Kristofferson", Kris was pure C & W— voice guttural and sexy, almost like Johnny Cash, pure pickin' guitar, and simple, personal lyrics.

So along comes this third album eight months after the second ("The Silver Tongued Devil and I") and it's different. It's not a country and western record anymore. Kris has been sucked into popular music. His voice no longer sounds like he's about to die, but the lyrics are still straight from experience, revealing a religion defined by freedom of expression and action.

Kristofferson said in an interview with Sandra Shevey of the "Boston Globe":

> It's like being a Rhodes scholar, or the role you're supposed to play, and all of a sudden, you drop to the bottom where everybody thinks you're dead and a failure anyway, and then what have you got to lose? You're free to go out and create your own self.

"Border Lord" is the central song thematically on this album of the same title. Kristofferson seems to view life as precarious at best, with pitfalls ("Good lookin' women every time you stumble/ Waitin' there to catch you when you fall") along a narrow earthen path. The path is seldom walked, the one of lost relationships and confused reality set apart from humanity, but it is the path that Kristofferson chose when he "dropped" from his role as celebrated scholarly son of an Air Force major general to that of a starving singer; and it is the path he unconditionally recommends to all who have the pleasure of hearing the songs on "Border Lord". He does not rely on sentiment, rather specific images sustain clear situations. Only on "Kiss the World Goodbye" does Kris indulge in sentimentality.

With the release of "Border Lord" the music industry will try to make Kris Kristofferson a superstar, but he's not ready for that yet. The only recorded music that will survive this generation will be the tunes that can be heard over and over again. After playing "Border Lord" ten or twenty times the songs are no longer fresh when I hear them. The simplicity of Kristofferson's direct style is somehow too heavy to be considered repeatedly. He has created an album which is so coherent in music and intent, particularly lyrical intent, that it becomes boring.

"Josie" is one of the "good lookin' women . . . Waitin' there to catch you where you fall". She'll help you when you're down and vulnerable, offer her body, and set you on your way again. But though you think you're free of the Josies in your past, they're part of the invisible baggage you carry. Says Kristofferson, when carrying that baggage, "the road's a little colder/Every time that I leave/For another empty place I've never been". Kris doesn't want any relationships to weight his travels, and there are three other songs beside "Josie" which reveal this conviction. One song seems to describe Kris' own torment at choosing to go into the music business. In the "Globe" article, Miss Shevey quotes Kris again, "My wife would worry about money, secutiry, which wold make us uptight and I couldn't compose. So I'd grow sullen, and she'd become silent, and pretty soon we split up." And so the song "Burden of Freedom" ("Voices behind me still bitterly damn me/ For seeking salvation they don't understand") has a direct relation to Kris' own experience.

In "When She's Wrong" Kris warns the listener to be careful of accepting a woman, " 'Cause when she's good, lord, there ain't nothing better/But, when she's wrong, she sure can be wrong". Finally, "Smokey Put the Sweat on Me" chronicles Kristofferson's failure to follow his own advice by falling for a raven-haired, devilish, "as wrong as can be", Louisiana woman named Smokey:

> Well, my feel wasn't ready yet > for settling down
> But my soul kept tellin' me to > turn around
> And the longer I tried to fight it > the harder I fell

"Little Girl Lost" is a sequel to "When She's Wrong" and "Smokey Put the Sweat on Me". Kris has given advice, ignored it himself, and now gives the advice once more, modified by his own experience. The little girl "doesn't understand herself", "She'll have sixteen smiling strangers who are handing her a line", and "that body she'll let anybody hold". The little girl is is an operator, skillfully extracting what she wants from her illegitimate lovers, and then casting them aside. But Kristofferson fell for her, and so sings:

> But if you take her, take her easy
> Treat her gentle, she used to love > me

"Somebody Nobody Knows" deals with the border in physical terms by reference to two lost people, a barroom whore, and an old man lying in the gutter at rush hour. This song is painfully reminiscent of the classic "All's Quiet on West 23rd" in which hundreds watched, transfixed, as a woman was shot and killed in an empty New York street. Unfortunately, "Somebody Nobody Knows" is a weak song musically, and comes off with little force.

The title of this third Kristofferson album is accurate— Kris is the "border lord". Master of his lonely existence, he succeeds in relating it to the listener. But that is precisely why "Border Lord" the album won't stand the test of time, because of its dogged, logical, and unsentimental toting of collective non-involvement with others. It is too much to bear in one listening, like a preacher gone on too long. Kristofferson may be a pop star one day, but not with this album, and not until he is willing to diversify what he has to say.

Miles Ahead, As Usual

BY JEFF CLAYTON

Miles Davis, LIVE-EVIL; Columbia G30954, 2 recs.

It's kind of reassuring to know that Miles is back out in front cruising toward the musical horizons again. It was the general consensus that he got kind of off the edge with his most recent Live at the Fillmore album, an uncoordinated rehash of the themes from Bitches Brew. The band extemporized for four nights running, and nobody reached any conclusions. Each man took his stand and his solo and went down alone. It was sloppy work. Live-Evil (catchy, no?) is something else, released some time back in December and carefully conceived in the great Bitches tradition, flaunting the brashest "theme" cover art since that other spectacular double-set of two years ago. We might want to go into the marginally interesting questions that arise from making a death-thrust at the tootsies of the great Honk Culture with illustrations lifted from Life magazine, but why don't we just see if there's room at the bottom?

Exit the paperboy: they don't tell you in the liner notes about how Miles loved people when he was working a paper route anymore. No reference to it at all. No reference to anything, in fact, just twelve pictures of Miles in a variety of related poses: star trip, with the credits crammed against the outside edges until earnest music reviewers twist the package every which way just trying to find out who played what when. Or was it all Miles?

Not exactly. Not in this music. A lot of it's owing to the Miles regulars, John McLaughlin's guitar, Chick Corea on keyboards, Dave Holland on bass, Wayne Shorter's sax, Airto Moreira's percussion. Joe Zawinul returns after a quick sabbatical, a nice thing, though a few wanted to say that parting company with that white boy was the best thing Miles had done in a long time. There're also Michael Henderson, bass; Jack DeJohnette and Willie Cobham, drums; and Keith Jarrett, Hermeto Pascoal and even Herbie Hancock to make sure Miles doesn't run short of piano players. I can't tell 'em one from the other, but that's not the point. The point is that there should be no shortages.

No, Folks, no shortages. Everybody's loaded with ideas on this album. Miles' basic concept hasn't altered as far as I can see since Bitches, but I prefer this more recent statement of it. At its most complex, this music differs from certain electronic compositions only because, well, it's not electronic. Otherwise, the form's much the same: scale and meter out the window, single tone or tonal-group leitmotifs, peculiar harmonic structures and odd noises, just like the real serious stuff, guys. Generally, while the lead is taking all these liberties and making all this progress, the rhythm stays pretty ortinato and down to earth, because you've gotta have some place to come back down to when you solo runs out, and because this is jazz after all, whatever that may be. Whether his critics like it or not, Miles has had a lot to say about what kinds of sound fall under that title. "Space Jazz" a friend calls his stuff. Okay, friend.

It's not all like that, though, in fact it's a considerably more diverse set than was the Brew. For the first time in a while, Miles admits that he has his roots in the blues, and swing, and bossa nova for that matter, and he even takes some sidelong glances at rock'n'roll. Cut 1 Side 1 is SIVAD, which puzzle fans will quicly spot as FUNKY spelled backwards. It's a snappy little chromatic outing building to a full free-blowing climax, and surprise, surprise, the wah-wah pedal has come to Miles Davis. Everybody wah-wah's on this cut; the instruments are all filtered to the point where everything sounds like McLaughlin's guitar if you're not paying much attention. It's a sort of humorous effect. Hermeto whistles, and the Bartz saxophone beep-beeps and whines like all kinds of depraved dogs and loons.

Next is LITTLE CHURCH, slow, dissonant, pleasantly inside and fading to a medley of GEMINI and DOUBLE IMAGE with a mean and nasty fuzztone guitar intro, like you might expect from Mark Farner (you wouldn't get it), but all this feedback from Miles? Well, sure. And when Miles does a medley you can't tell where one tune picks up and the other leaves off. It's a case of selected themes chopped fine and cleanly mixed.

Side 2 is WHAT I SAY, an interpretation that really moves, I mean it's got the drivin' bass and the wailin' sax and even a technically excellent if protracted drum solo toward the last. Sleigh bells, too. Hotcha! The side ends with one of those smooth and archaic nod-to-the-past pace changers, NEM UM TALVEZ, with lotsa fine harmony, like your mommy might have danced slow to on her sixth wedding anniversary, but with enough avant-garde percussion and background vocal to remind us it's Miles, and 1972 at that.

The next side opens with further progress on the same take, re-titled SELIM for no particular reason. FUNKY TONK goes back a ways to the old Pharaoh's Dance, with Miles' squeaking, newly wah-wah trumpet trading off with the other instruments turn by turn. It runs nearly width of the disk, and then if I'm not wrong continues right across the final side as INAMORATA. That's a jam of a very minimal 44:37 in length, rock people, and it never lets down. Sly references to old Dave Brubeck licks give way to a period of degenerate sax bawling and a compelling reading by Conrad Roberts of his eponymous poem Inamorata, which delivered over an airy whoosh and tinkle background with plenty of reverb explains the music better than any other words I've found. So I won't trot it out here. Miles himself told somebody, once, "I am one thing, a musician; I only can do one thing, play my horn." That's better than most of us ever do. But who are you going to listen to, me or Miles?

Allmans Slightly Off Target

BY MIKE KOSTEK

Eat A Peach–The Allman Brothers–Capricorn–time: 69:42 "Dedicated to a brother, Duane Allman"*

Is this a bargain? Here's the new Allman Brothers Album, Eat A Peach (anybody know what that means? If anything.) with a fat list price of $9.98, meaning that it costs about seven schmeers in the stores. Since the records branch of the Kinney Corporation (Warner Bros., Atlantic, Elektra and all their affiliated labels) have just raised all their list prices to $5.98 minimum (meaning that instead of paying $3.69 for Hot Rats, we'll now pay $4.49), Eat A Peach can be looked at as two $4.98's in one pack.

This brings us to a serious question of aesthetics. How do you judge double albums? How much does the price tag on an album affect your opinion of it? Two records for $4.49 cost as much as most single records, so of course there is a certain charity given in the critical evaluation of the two records. The second record often becomes a 'bonus record' like the Grape Jam album that was included with Moby Grape's ill-fated Wow album. So it is logical that double albums that sell for twice as much as one single record will be played with harsher scrutiny by us thin-walleted folks.

But music is still music and if it is taken as an art or as a form of entertainment it must be listened to as being absolute, and it must be judged on its own merits and not by the price tag.

On the other hand, the Allmans' previous release was a double called At Fillmore East, and carried a nice $6.98 list price, which is the same as Abbey Road has. Since $6.98's sell for around five smacks in the record stores, At Fillmore East was a fine bargain. However, as music, how good is it? Would you pay $20 dollars for it? If you really liked the Allman Brothers Band would paying $20 make it a bad album? Would $50 make it worse? If Chicago's At Carnegie Hall was selling for four dollars instead of nine or ten, would the critics be kinder toward it? Yes, because they are now raking Chicago for being greedy. However, the group claims that they wanted to put it out for four dollars (or so) but it was Columbia that made them check in at $13.98.

The answer to the question of absolute art versus how much it is worth to you lies somewhere in-between, in an uneasy compromise between the music and our finances.

In any case, our rocking friends have had a pretty rough time expressing themselves well in multiple record sets. Anytime I listen to a new double record set I have to ask why they put it out. An overpouring of genius that couldn't be contained on one record? Not likely. There are very few multiple albums whose individual records are as strong as the group's single album releases. Too many double albums are needlessly drawn out and laced with filler to beef up the total album time. There are only a handful of doubles that stand up as being necessary: Tommy–The Who, Electric Ladyland–Jimi Hendrix Experience, The Beatles, Blonde On Blonde–Bob Dylan, Uncle Meat, The Mothers of Invention.

Almost every group has tried going double, and almost everyone has missed. The shame of it is that most doubles could be boiled down into one fine record, but instead are lambasted and ignored for what they are (Dylan's Self Portrait could have been a great single). What most doubles need is judicious editing.

Notice also the funny list price parade upward in relation to a group's popularity, the best example being Chicago's progress: first album by an unknown band, $5.98. Good buy. Second album by a still fairly obscure band, $6.98. O.K. buy. Third album by a smash hit chart busting group, $9.98. Poor album, poor buy. Fourth album by this giant group, $13.98. Ugh. So it is seen that the bigger Chicago gets, the bigger the price. So it appears to have gone with The Allman Brothers, sad to say. Eat A Peach would be a good bargain at $6.98; one good record of new studio tunes with a few live numbers mixed in, and one long live jam thrown in for a dollar more. At $9.98 it is overpriced.

Side one is three studio cuts done without their great lead guitarist, Duane "Skydog" Allman who was killed in a motorcycle accident late last year, just as he was beginning to challenge Eric Clapton for guitar supremacy. Without him the Allmans are a subtly different sounding band. Instead of having a guitar coming out of both speakers, Dick Betts plays alone now, thus making the drums, bass and organ more audible and assume more importance as they must now play more out front instead of being able to lay back and play a solid bottom of sound that gave Duane's leads ample backing. Since it is still Dicky Betts and Gregg Allman who write the songs, the band still sounds familiar in its arrangements. Outstanding on this side are "Les Brers In A Minor", a 9:05 record, and on repeated listenings "Mountain Jam" is a bore.

Remember Progressive Rock? Well, it's records like this that helped kill it. The trouble with the jam is that it just doesn't go anywhere. A good example of a progressive jam that does indeed accomplish its goals is Cream's immortal "Spoonful" which remains today as a great achievement.

Dickie Betts has a hard job to do in covering departed Duane's solos, and it looks here that he certainly is good, and can even play some of Duane's favorite licks, but he certainly doesn't have the flash that Duane did.

Eat A Peach should have been outstanding, as the Fillmore album had established the Allman Brothers as one of the best, most original and talented bands around. The loss of Duane has hopefully set the boys only slightly off target, and they should be back in fine style, but Eat A Peach is highly overinflated.

Levee Blues Elevates the Spirit

BY BILL DENSMORE

"Levee Blues", by POTLIQUOR (Janus)

levee- n., (levee, from Middle French, act of arising, se lever- to rise) 1: a reception held by a person of distinction on rising from bed potliquor- n: the liquid left in a pot after cooking meat or vegetables

Indeed as the title of this album and group might indicate, within a finely illustrated jacket is a finely blended and produced lp. The recording quality is excellent, and the material is performed in a lively, coordinated, and open manner.

"Levee Blues" hinges on crisp, consistent percussion and the gutsy vocals of George Ratzlaff, the lead singer of the group who sounds much like the Canadian David-Clayton Thomas. Each song includes either boogie-woogie piano, or raunchy electric guitar, but thankfully the two are not combined. With a sprinkling of harmonica, horns, or strings as necessary, each cut on the album has a distinct sound. For this reason, "Levee Blues" is alternately excellent or mediocre.

All compositions are by "Potliquor" except Willie Dixon's "Rooster Blues" and Lennon-McCartney's "Lady Madonna". "Rooster Blues" is a dull, lengthy, rock-and-roll attempt at at a blues standard which is as out of context as Jimi Hendrix doing something by Joni Mitchell. (of course if Jimi Hendrix ever did do something by Joni Mitchell, you can be sure it will be on "his" next album) "Lady Madonna" is a fine integration of the organ, guitar, and piano of "Potliquor" done in the minor key with harmonies. The group recorded this cut at the Paramount Theater in order to get the unique sound of the organ there on the chorus of "see how they run, see how they run . . ." This version comes far closer to the feeling implicit in the words of "Lady Madonna" than the Beatles' performance of the same song.

Pot Liquor

"Cheer" opens the album, and is characterized by a strong vocal lead and clean backup vocals. The album jacket says "Cheer" "being included on this album resulted from a spontaneous jam session in the studio one night after we thought the album was complete." The cut is about as far from a jam session as this reviewer can imagine and indeed the album would not have been complete without it. "Cheer" combines the best of everything "potliquor" has to offer in one song. "This world's got enough sadness without the sad, sad song/ Music should be laughing— c'mon and laugh along/ My music has no sorrow, I bring it free and clear/ What you do is to take it and it will bring you cheer".

"The Train" is introduced by ten seconds of heavy banging piano by Ratzlaff and promises to be an engaging song. Unfortunately it gets hung up on its own lyrics, something about togetherness "all aboard the train" -- the implication being that sinners will be absolved simply by riding a train to "the River Jordan".

In contrast, "Beyond the River Jordan" sound like something Elton John would do; a peaceful piano and strings building to a crescendo, "I know somewhere beyond the river, I'll find a way to get back home".

"Levee Blues" assumes almost a religious meaning, and despite the music, however imposing it may be, it will leave you feeling fulfilled. The album is inconsistent, but there are enough well done songs to justify giving "Potliquor" more than passing attention. The strongest single asset of the group is George Ratzlaff with his more than ample, yet controlled voice, fine piano, and concise compositions. We will hear more from this foursome, perhaps in the form of a 45RPM platter.

Theater

Sheer Fun, Don't Miss It

BY JOE ARSENAULT

Comedy seems lost, offering saccharine hopes to face grim reality. Musical comedies usually suffer most because they attempt to pretend reality, singing songs which are so out of place with our lives. Comical operettas are a delightful escape if done well because they do what so much else fail to do- they entertain. Their world is full of beautiful voices, young dreams, and good wishes. They are not as forced, for it's not as if you had dialogue and then suddenly a deep breath and, as we all know, another musical number. At least this production seems to have completely overcome that problem, being incredibly smooth and flowing. Operettas combine theater and vocal music for a new and better experience. Evaluating them with typical dramatic standards seems ridiculous, like judging a Mahler symphony for the plot line. Little Marie Sunshine gives the audience an evening of entertainment, pulling them into the past charmingly. With a superb performance by Debbie Gibbs as Little Marie she manages with the aid of most able cast to execute a complete spoof on the Dudley Dooright, Snidely Whiplash's of our lives. It is an evening of fantasy, allowing hisses at evil and brovado for good, it's wide-eyed optimism in Colorado, it's sheer fun. Don't miss it.

The lights dim, the two piano play a modern variation of the theme, gradually transforming it into a Western tune, easing us into a world where good is good, bad is bad and where justice always triumphs. Before the actual play starts, a young lady dressed in a chiffonnypink turn of the century dress thanks Johann Strauss for making it possible. The transition is complete, we have been brought into another age - one of refined gentility and proper manners as Dudley Doorights in red forest ranger attire court lovely damsels from Easterchester Finishing School. The first scene starts with falling backdrops, sprouting flowers in the stage, with the hotel in the background. The rangers ever loyal and blue, sing and serenade the beautiful Little Mary dressed in yellow or the long blond hair. She is about to lose her hotel if she doesn't meet the payments yet these affairs are too mundane to be considered, her inate optimism continues, looking for the sky of blue.

The voices of the rangers are powerful yet disciplined, the voice of Little Marie is delicately pure, full of emotion and honest sentiment. The rangers are after a renegade Indian. This outlaw from justice is no less but Little Mary's brother, long lost and assumed dead. Cpt. Jim, who has just asked Little Mary for her hand must first find the outlaw, Little Mary is shocked, this indian had sworn vengeance upon her for having dishonored him to his father who adopted her when she was a child and whom she shelters. Cpl. Billy is told to disguise himself in indian garb, sneak in among their braves and capture Yellowfeather. All is set for complicated but humorous confusion.

While Cpt. Jim is proposing, with his very tender voice a bit shy. a bit strong, real, the delightful Ernestine von Liebedich, opera singer enters the scene. The german flavor ot her voice, the brown suit dress she is wearing, the matronly air are carried off very well. She hints that perhaps Jim might marry.

We then meet the girls - all dressed in colorful but still dignified victorian dresses. Their costumes were exquisite renderings of the period. They are playing croquet, rather bored not having men around but really too demure to do anything about it. Their voices are coquettish and typical of naive young ladies from the East. The rangers abound the scene and everything changes. They trap the ladies into talking by asking–We were wondering, whether you were pretty or not? Who could resist, answering such a question by a handsome young ranger. Cpl. Billy reprimands his flirt of a girlfriend to stop wandering, then divulges his secret mission. Nancy is a great tease, wonderfully naughty but still lovable and carried off preciously. Cpl. Billy is a romantic second, only to Cpt. Jim. Each performance had a professional glamor and style making this production excellent theater. Meanwhile, danger beckons. Yellowfeather has been seen and heard, Little Mary frightened for her lover cannot avoid tears, consoled by Mme. Ernestine then reminded by the cast that every gray cloud has a silver lining. You must remember that it is done with expert tongue in cheek, we sympathise only because we have allowed this fantasy, there are no blatant in this acting to remind us of reality, everything about this play is imaginatively satisfying and precise enough to carry the illusion.

By Act II, we are at the lawn party given by Little Mary. Being a formal tea, Miss Weiss has outdone herself. The dresses are captivatingly beautiful, the atmosphere sedate. The choreography of the different dances, as through all the play, is naturally complicated but totally undistracting. Every small puzzle piece of this operetta fits tightly together. The party is over, Little Mary is confronted with Yellowfeather, tied and saved by Cpt. Jim and the rangers. Meanwhile, Cpl. Billy has gone out into the forest asking Brown Bear for an indian costume which makes the chief believe that Billy wants to be his son. So, he gives him Yellowfeathers old clothes. Nancy, back at the hotel is worried, decides to go help her lover disguised as well. Before this she has a delightful comic scene with all the girls in a hotel bedroom. The girls are all about to nap, dressed in only their under garments, which by the way cover as much as a dress. Nancy has a charm that steals the show during her songs. In a turquoise cape, she prances about the stage as Mata Hari readying herself for her great adventure.

The girls are jealous of her freedom, sympathising completely with naughty, naughty Nancy. Oscar, the old retired general, a Philadelphia Fairfax meets Ernestine, now dressed in a beautiful green velvet gown, looking very much the aristocrat. They sing together of days gone by in Vienna, fall in love. Out in the forest, all three Yellowfeathers bump into each other. The real and the falses chase and chase madly about, Yellowfeather is defeated. Little Mary sings a lovely song to a Coo Coo bird while awaiting Cpt. Jim. He returns, the reprise, we discover that Gen. Fairfax is here to give back to the Indians their land which Brown Bear in turn gives to Little Mary and his new adopted son Cpl. Billy who in turn makes most of it into a National park. All ends happily as they sing the finale waving tiny American flags. Bravo.

This operetta was entertaining, excellently executed. Go see it. If you want entertainment with pure unintellectualizing, fun, a performance by a very professional troupe, go see Little Mary Sunshine. You won't be disappointed.

Sympathy For A Droog

BY MARY LOU GORDON

A Clockwork Orange adapted for the screen and directed by Stanley Kubrick, from the novel by Anthony Burgess; with Malcolm McDowell.

A Clockwork Orange is a brilliantly executed film that is at once ugly, beautiful, repulsive, entertaining and compelling. Kubrick once again proves himself to be the master of science fiction, but in A Clockwork Orange he moves from the metaphysically profound and technologically complex world of 2001 to the not too distant future of speculative moral possibilities. The film is a horrifying and bitter Orwellian vision of a society that feels compelled to control man's freedom of choice, and one that has such a vehement hatred for criminals it remains blindfolded to the ironic fact that its passive conditioning treatments are in effect as equally violent, cruel and dehumanizing as the most callous and senseless beating or rape.

Kubrick brings us into Burgess's racy jungle world of the super-society built on shining chrome, colored plexiglass, bright lights, pop art and ultra-stylistic decor. This cold and sterile atmosphere is representative of a society that has spawned the new type of arch-criminal, a carefree hoodlum named Alex, who wears false eyelashes on one eye and bloody plastic eyeballs on his shirtsleeves, and whose "principal interests are rape, violence and Beethoven." Alex is the summation and fulfillment of his societies greatest fears and nightmares, and he revels in the image, performing his brutalities with all of the gleeful joy of an uncivilized barbarian.

Alex is the leader of his pack of Droogs, which includes Pete, Georgy and Dim. We follow them through numerous violent escapades, which begin with the senseless clubbing of an old drunk who tells Alex "It's a stinking world because there's no law and order any more," and moves to their confrontation with Billy Boy and his gang. Their next encounted is the beating of Mr. Alexander and his wife, where Alex performs his hollow version of "Singing in the Rain" before raping Mrs. Alexander. From there they venture to the Health Farm, where Alex bludgeons Cat Woman to death with a giant plastic phallus. Alex is caught, and sentenced to fourteen years in prison, and after he is in for two years, he is given the option by the Minister of the Interior of leaving in two weeks if he agrees to undergo a new form of treatment that the government has devised for the most hardened criminals. Since his stay in prison has done nothing more for him than increase his desires to return to his murderous life (Alex's greatest vision of himself is as a soldier scourging Christ on his way up Mount Calvary), he agrees, and through a combination of drugs and an aversive stimulus-response conditioning that consists of showing Alex films of horrible beatings, rapes and tortures he is soon conditioned to become sick at the very thought of violence. At the same time, and unintended by the doctors, Alex is also conditioned against his favorite piece of music, Beethoven's Ninth.

When Alex is released and arrives home, his parents are horrified to see him, and as he realizes their repulsion to him, he also finds out that they have rented his room to a young fellow named Joe, who calls Alex a "Horrible monster." Alex leaves to look for a place to live, deeply hurt and in tears and on his way he runs into the old drunk that he clubbed years ago. The man recognizes him, and drags him off to a flock of drunks who attack him viciously. Alex is at their mercy and he cannot even raise a hand to save himself, but he is soon rescued by two policemen who turn out to be none other than his old buddies, Georgy and Dim. Due to a fight that Alex had with his gang prior to the Cat Woman scene, Georgy and Dim still feel a vengeance toward Alex, and they take him off into the woods where they beat him senseless. Dazed, Alex crawls along the road until he sees a familiar building where he goes in for help. It is only when he sees who lives there that he realizes why it was familiar to him. It is the home of Mr. Alexander, who is now a cripple since his encounter with Alex. Not recognizing Alex at first, the man takes pity on him, and it is only when he hears Alex crooning "Singing in the Rain" that he realizes who he is. He drugs the wine that he later gives Alex, and, knowing of Alex's aversion to Beethoven's Ninth, Alex comes around in an upstairs bedroom to hear the odious Ninth blaring full blast. Not being able to stand his defensive and vulnerable position any longer, Alex leaps from a window, but fails to kill himself, and ends up in the hospital with two broken arms and legs and head injuries.

Near the end of the film, the Minister of the Interior comes in and tells Alex that their government has been getting unfavorable responses from other countries about the way that their conditioning has left Alex unable to fend for himself in the world. He tells Alex that they are going to give him a nice place to live and a good paying job, and anything else that he wants to rectify his life. The Minister tells Alex that he has a special surprise for him, and as the doors burst open with men wheeling in a huge stereo system that is blaring the Ninth, the press flocks around Alex and the Minister and takes their pictures in mock poses of friendship. The film ends with Alex looking into the camera with a mysterious demonic gleam in his eye as he snickers, "I was cured, all right."

Alex stands for the man of free will who is led by a precisely calculating intellect, and he is diametrically opposed to the spiritless and cosmetically oriented purists that surround him. Despite his obsession with ultra-violence and sadism, Alex becomes a likeable character through the inate charm with which Malcolm McDowell affects his portrayal. We are repulsed and horrified by the way he gets his pleasures from life, but our repulsion comes more from the idea of this violence than the actual enactment of it. Kubrick portrays Alex so that he plays on our sympathies, and we end up feeling that his violence is definitely better than law and order. We hardly feel any emotion for his victims at all. In the scene where the Droogs attack the Alexanders, our attention is focused on Alex's talentless rendition of "Singing in the Rain", along with the soft shoe number he performs between kicks to his victims' faces and stomachs. We wince at his affliction of pain, but cannot condemn his actions.

Malcolm McDowell as Alex.

Kubrick tries to stick as close to Burgess's novel as possible, and his cries for the necessity of violence because it is an enactment of free will are voiced through the mouth of the prison chaplain who tells Alex "When a man ceases to choose, he ceases to be a man." And whatever else he is, Alex is a man, at least until the State gets to him, and he is the only person in the film who follows his natural, primeval desires instead of wallowing in the complacent muck of spiritless luxury.

Our affection for Alex grows as the film develops, and at the end we almost applaud his return to his former, sardonic, and destructive self. While Kubrick manipulates us into making excuses for Alex's behavior patterns, he goes on to portray the State as not only blasphemous, but more outrageously cruel and dehumanizing than any of Alex's previous sadistic actions.

In A Clockwork Orange Kubrick brings to the screen all of the violence that Burgess wrote into his novel, but where a lesser director would have visually saturated the audience with gallons of blood and repeated shots of mutilated flesh, Kubrick shows all of the violence, which consists of kicks, punches and slams with clubs, on a plane where the physical acts themselves become no more brutal than in the average run of the mill Western. It is thematic shock and impact that Kubrick is after and with this film he rightfully attains this end.

Kubrick's sequences fluctuate between the stunning coolness and subtlety of sterile household tranquility and the loud brashness of Alex's world of terror. The film is a continual work of artful imagination that merges the futuristic with the surreal in an array of visual splendor that greatly surpasses his achievements in 2001.

Kubrick has overlaid the film with heavy sexual overtones. He ranges from subtle nuances to graphic blatancy, and the paintings and sculptures which flood the apartments are all erotically designed. Kubrick's photography is exquisite, with his colors having a crisp, pinpoint clarity to them that blends perfectly with the metallic backgrounds.

Kubrick utilizes frame space and cinematic time so that we only see the essential ideas of what he is trying to convey. He never forces upon us cumbersome and unnecessary detail, and the film moves along at a rapid but succinct pace that never becomes clamoring and ineffective. He often uses Alex as a narrator, which not only adds life to the more stationary scenes in the film, but serves to bridge the progression of time for us with the least amount of fuss. Kubrick employs different cinematic techniques that vary the rhytmn and tempo of the film, but his continuity never becomes garbled, boring or confusing. In one sequence the Droogs decide it is time to dethrone Alex as their leader, and as Alex proceeds to show them the error of their thinking, Kubrick slows down the motion for Alex's attach on them, and the effect is a beautiful and graceful sequence of bodily motion that has been turned into a lethargically rhythmic dance. In another scene, where Alex brings home two twelve year old girls that he has picked up in a record store and rapes them both, Kubrick has speeded up the action to a high intensity so that the scene, instead of being the usual dragged-out love-making routine, becomes a grotesquely comical ballet of flailing bodies that makes its point in a short amount of time.

Kubrick has set up a soundtrack that he uses to the film's greatest advantage. The tempo of the music sets the pace of the numerous action scenes, and from this he has created a film that becomes a visual symphony with the divergent parts becoming a collective whole of precisely timed movements.

Kubrick has made claims that A Clockwork Orange is the most technically perfect film to have ever been made. These claims seem to be a bit presumptuous, considering that there are two noticeable flickers in the splicing and a distracting, reflected glare that covers the middle of the screen twice in one scene. When Alex beats Cat Woman with the giant phallus, Kubrick cuts at the point of impact to a large cartoon of a gaping mouth that is nothing short of trite, and something which one would think to be beneath a man of his talent.

Malcolm McDowell is brilliantly cast for the role of Alex. His versatility in this difficult part is to be commended, and his vitality makes the character come alive in a performance that is nothing short of spectacular. He effects the role of the hard-core sadist as easily as he becomes the cured and angelic reformee who cries, "I want for the rest of my life to be one act of goodness." McDowell is interesting to watch for his quick gestures and mannerisms, and he has a strong stage presence that instantly grabs our attention and holds it throughout. The rest of the case is equally as good, with special notice to be given to Michael Bates, Patrick Magee, Anthony Sharp, and Miriam Karlin.

A Clockwork Orange is best described as sadistic, black humor that is laced with terror. Kubrick has produced a film that is perhaps the most controversial to appear in a long time, and whether one thinks it is appalling or brilliant, as a cinematic experience it never becomes dull or tedious. This film raises vital morril questions that cannot be easily overlooked, and while Kubrick is attempting to convey his nightmarish ideas, he never forgets that his intent is to be entertaining, and he often interjects his frightening vision with humorous sidelines.

A Clockwork Orange is the kind of a film whose devastating impact must speak for itself. The film stands as a paramount tribute to the genius of Stanley Kubrick, and it rests as a highly laudable attempt to create the most thematically breath-taking and paralyzing film ever made.

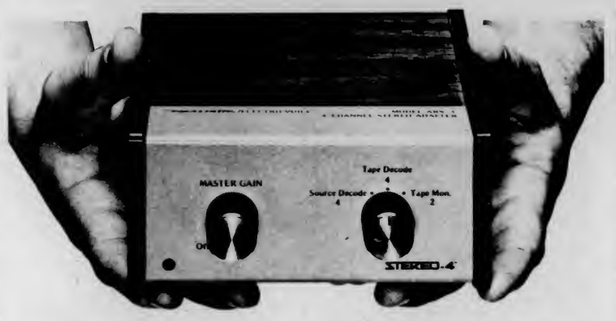
Four Channel Sound: Amplified Conspiracy

By FRANK JOHNSON

Think back, if you will, to the year 1957. If nostalgia conjures up pleasant thoughts, consider the dilemma presented to hard-core audiophiles who had just heard about the successful Westrex stereo disc. Long accustomed to hearing music out of a single speaker, they were now confronted with the possibility that soon they would have to double up on their amplifier, their speaker, their preamp; shuck their old mono cartridge, and adapt their tuner for multiplex (which was standardized 4 years later) if they were to successfully climb on the stereo bandwagon. The technical problems many audiophiles faced were enough to prompt them to buy entirely new rigs, for some equipment simply could not be adapted.



Then think back a little less further to the year 1969. Editor William Anderson, noted for his flowery editorials in Stereo Review, attended one of the first 4-channel showings. Borrowing a line from John Reed's Ten Days That Shook the World, an account of the 1917 Bolshevik revolution, Anderson stated: "I have heard the future, and it works." Three years have passed since Anderson's comment, and audiophiles are once again faced with the problem of doubling their stereo equipment and going 4-channel. Meanwhile, Mr. Anderson hasn't told us, now that the future is here, whether or not it's still working.

After attending several audio seminars on the subject, and reading a number of excellent articles dealing with 4-channel, I have formulated an opinion about what I feel it should accomplish - and also what it shouldn't accomplish. The object of stereo, you will recall, is to supply sonic dimension; by blending the sound together from two sources, a spaciousness results that is unobtainable with mono reproduction. Neither of the two channels should be in predominance, theoretically, and that is why most stereo sets have balance controls to make sure the image is centered accurately between the two speakers. To derive the two channels, many recordings use a multitude of microphones and blend or mix the channels together with the aid of professional mike mixers and multi-track tape recorders. The finished product emerges in the form of two-channel material, and we can extract this information in its simplest form by a 2-channel tape recorder; with more complexity, a stereo phono cartridge,and with considerable complexity, a multiplex FM receiver.

It has, however, been known for some time that much of the sound we listen to is reverberant sound, the intensity of which depends on our surroundings. If we imagine ourselves sitting at the bottom of a gigantic teacup, and an orchestra playing from one side of the cup, we can expect to have reverberent sound reaching us from all sides, because the cup is reflecting the sound on a parabolic axis. If, on the other hands, we imagine ourselves attending a small string quartet concert out-of-doors, then only the direct sound will reach us; there are no reflective surfaces nearby to give us reverberant sound.

At this point you should ask: where does 4-channel come in? It's a fair question. In the instance of an out-of-door concert, which is now becoming a frequent enjoyment in the summer (New York's Central Park Concerts are an example), not much usefulness emerges. The unused 2 channels, if they are there, are wasted.

Audio engineers have maintained that, due to reflective sounds within a concert hall, there is a need for 4-channel reproduction to catch internal reverberations. They do not all agree as to whether or not the volume of the rear channels should match that of the front, and where the listener should sit when 4 channels are in operation. They also do not seem to know whether all 4 speakers should be identical or not, and they can't answer the question about the amount of amplifier power needed, either. All-in-all, there seems to be an inordinate amount of unanswered questions facing the audiophile who wishes to double his stereo system (and his budget, to boot).

Is the future in this man's hands? He's holding one of the varieties of the Electro-Voice Stereo-4 Matrix decoder, which simulates 4-channel reproduction from matrixed stereo information.

At the moment there are several means of obtaining four channels. The simplest way is to use a 4-channel tape recorder that records all channels in the same direction (most 4-track recorders record and play back only 2 channels per direction). A more elaborate system would include an 8-track recorder, so that each direction can be used. It should be noted that 8-track recorders, used since 1965 in great profusion in automobiles, are ideal for this purpose. (Some 4-channel auto tape decks are already becoming quite popular). Each channel on the tape head can be stacked in a staggered arrangement (necessary to reduce adjacent channel interference while being played). The one-direction-only 4-track system, however, is usually preferred by purists because it is capable of inherently better performance. All that is needed is another stereo amplifier and 2 more speakers for 4-channel reproduction.

This arrangement, however, restricts the medium because a tape recorder must always be used. For other sources, we need a device that synthesize 4 channels by two methods: 1.) utilizing phase relationships and extracting the two extra channels, and 2.) matrixing, or imprinting, phase information by a process called encoding, so that during the decoding playback process 4 channels can be created. The second system is inherently more accurate than the first, and it is in this area that most 4 channel attention is being focused.

At this juncture a discussion of phase should make things clearer. Sound waves are, as you recall, sine waves of plus and minus values: alternate pulses of compression and rarefaction. If we superimpose 2 sine waves over each other and introduce a lag in one of them, it is out of synchronization, or phase, with the other one. Phase relationships occur often in music, and also quite frequently in recorded music. Stereo speakers have to be phased so that the "+" terminal on each speaker corresponds to the "+" or "8 ohm" (or equivalent) connection on the amplifier terminal. The effect of a 2-channel out-of-phase relationship is a loss of bass and a scattered stereo image. I will go into this in detail in a future column.

The 2 types of decoders utilize this scattering principle to synthesize new sound sources. The phase differences are assorted (and in some cases, inverted 180) in the matrix system, and in the simple decoding device phase relationships already in the recording device phase relationships already in the recording are utilized.

No one decoding system has yet been agreed on; a variety of decoders have been patented, beginning with the Scheiber system, one of the first to appear in 1969. The advantage of the first decoding system (properly known as a "phase-synthesis" system) is that it does not require another amplifier. One of these phase synthesis decoders is the Dynaco Quadapter; it also shares the distinction of being about the cheapest decoder available, selling in kit form for under $25.

3 more elaborate decoders exist under the matrix system, which requires another amplifier. (I am listing the most common and important, though others appear on the market daily) The first of these is the Electro-Voice "Stereo Quad"-4, which was one of the original matrix systems introduced. It has been recently reworked so that its rear separation is better than before. Next is the Sansui matrix system, an interim device that comes complete with balancing meters. There are several models out at the moment, fitting a variety of budgets. Perhaps the most important of the three is the CBS/Sony system, developed under a cooperative deal. An agreement is pending so that this may well be the standard for future encoded recordings, because it has the best rear separation and overall performance. All these decoders share a common heritage, although their individual circuitry may differ to a certain extent. The audible differences between them depend primarily on the compatibility of each system used. If, say, the EV system is used with the CBS SQ system, some rather wierd results happen because the phased information is undergoing a different process.

Beyond the decoders and matrix systems, what remains in the 4-channel electronic armada is in the experimental stage. JVC (Japan Victor Corp.) has announced a 4-channel phono cartridge, which utilizes a stylus called the Shibata stylus, after its designer. It is arranged so that it picks up an ultrasonic, modulated frequency (50kHz.) to reproduce matrixed information, and in so doing it extracts 2 extra channels from those already in the groove. The very high frequency necessitates extremely low tracing forces, so widespread inexpensive use is not likely.

No multiplex 4-channel FM system exists at the moment, although one will probably appear very soon. Between 1958 and 1961 a variety of stereo FM systems were proposed, but it took 3 years to settle on a design, and perhaps more will be needed for 4-channel FM. The main problem concerns adapting existing stereo FM tuners for 4-channel multiplex, and also whether or not mono FM radios will accurately pick up broadcast 4-channel multiplex.

As to 4-channel sound itself, in many cases it may suffer from the same exaggerated separation typical of early stereo, which some writers have cynically called the "ping-pong effect". Gimmick-minded promoters have put out 4-channel systems which leave the listener in some doubt as to where the next sonic insult will emerge; such systems have done much more harm than good in promoting the idea, which is primarily reverberant sound as an augmentation (not a replacement) for conventional 2-channel stereo. After this discussion, it should be quite obvious that one cannot arrive at true 4-channel sound by simply adding 2 extra speakers to his stereo system!

In the final analysis, I recommend caution in evaluating 4 channel sound. At the time of this writing, no one system has been agreed upon, and those that seem to be the logical standard are continually being reworked (re. the EV-4 system). There is also the danger that certain models are not compatible with the future standards, and furthermore, there is a problem with records and FM. Perhaps the best temporary advice is to invest your money into a good stereo system rather than a mediocre 4-channel system. If you already have a good system, probably the cheapest method of experimenting might include the Dynaco Quadapter method, because another amp is not needed (although another pair of speakers is). Because of these unresolved problems-and the resultant confusion - I leave predicting the future to Mr. Anderson of Stereo Review, and continue to regard the 4-channel rage with some interest, but no patronage.

elements banal, the sentimentality too thick to cut, the performances overblown, the music, courtesy of Cat Stevens flat, the direction one step removed from a television commercial; in short a flat, unappealing, mishmash of clumsily drawn ideas.

The Hospital (Academy of Music, Northampton)

The world of a big city hospital is brought to life in this grim but often funny film that deals with bizarre and exaggerated situations of medical incompetence, the violent aspects of New York City life, and the bitter story of a middle-aged doctor who is suffering from the termination of a bad marriage. The film stars George C. Scott, Diana Rigg, and is directed by Arther Hiller, with script by Paddy Chavesky.

The Last Picture Show (Palace Cinema, West Springfield)

The Best American Film of last year is this depressing, bleak vision of life about the coming of age of three youngsters in a small Texas town in 1951. Directed by Peter Bogdanovich, the film is a straightforward well-crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in the finest tradition of the great Hollywood directors

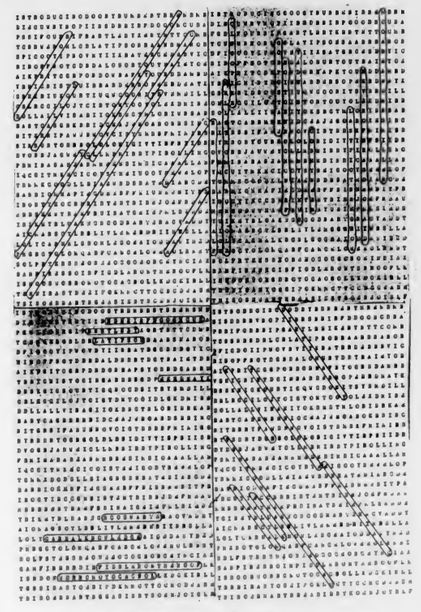
The Lion In Winter (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith College, 7 and 9:30)

Katherine Hepburn and Peter O'Toole match wits in this screen adaptation of William Goldman's dynamic, if not a bit too contemporary, look at the relationship between King Henry II and his Queen, Eleanor. The performances and the bitter rancor are marvelous to watch, even if they are probably historically inaccurate. The story concerns what happens when Henry calls back to England his three sons and his caged Queen to bitterly fight out who the aging king's hier will be. The dialogue sounds like misplaced Albee and the situations are as wry as they are entertaining. The performances are the films chief virtues, especially when Hepburn and O'Toole are center-screen. O'Toole plays a much more mature and better thought out Henry than he played in the earlier Becket and Hepburn is her usual fully professional, completely camptivating self in her Oscar-Winning portrayal. The film is an large, entertaining historical pageant, well acted and plotted.

Made For Each Other (Calvin Theater, Northampton)

The people who made Lovers and Other Strangers have returned with a genuinely likeable comedy about two people leading decidely separate lives and decide to live together. Their romance is stormy, but watching this couple, delightfully portrayed by the film's authors Renee Taylor and Joseph Bolgna, makes for a joyful film.

Pit And The Pendulum (Friday, Hampden Dining Commons, 8, 10, 12)



Roger Corman's richly perverse adaptation of the popular Edgar Allen Poe story. The image the story creates of a man locked away in a chamber with a huge razor-sharp pendulum swinging above him is extremely well used in the climax and Corman, the master of B-movie horror, fills the rest of the story with enough creepy sequences of horror. The story takes place in Sixteenth Century Spain in a dank castle where medieval torture is at its peak and where a young man searches for his imprisoned sister. Vincent Price once again makes for the best screen madman and John Kerr is featured in this good piece of creepy entertainment.

Zachariah (Saturday, Mahar, 6:30, 8:30, 10:30)

Dribble, plain and simple, is this first rock and roll Western. It approaches parodying the Western with about as much wit as a revival of the 1955 Harvard Hasty Pudding Show. The humor insults not only your intelligence but also your basic well-being and the final melancholy effect is an unconvincing as it is flat. The soundtrack is the best aspect of the film and even that is a dissappointment.

Weekend

Theater

The UMass Fine Arts Council will host the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater for a one-week residency, including four performances in Bowker Auditorium, on the UMass Campus, Tuesday-Friday, March 21-24. All (See page 4.)

Two different programs will be offered. Tuesday and Wednesday, March 21 and 22, the program will include "Flowers," a new work first performed in Jan. 1971 which features the music of Pink Floyd, Blind Faith, and Janis Joplin; "Suspension," created in the early 1940's on the theme of gravitation, it shows itself to be the precursor of avant-garde abstract dance being performed in the American Modern Dance field today; "Cry," a solo, performed by Judith Jamison, dedicated "for all black women everywhere–especially our mothers" and set to the music of Alice Coltrane, Laura Nyro and The Voices of East Harlem; and "Revelations," a suite that explores the motivations and emotions of American Negro religious music, which, like its heir, the blues, takes many forms.

The Thursday and Friday programs will include (see change page 4) a solo by Dudley Williams which includes "Hermit Songs," four small dances based on poems translated from anonymous Irish texts of the 8th to 13th centuries, telling of the simple life these men led, close to nature, to animals and to God; "Myth," a new work set to music by Igor Stravinsky (Symphonies of Wind Instruments); and "Mary Lou's Mass (Dances of Praise)," choreographed by Ailey to a jazz mass by Mary Lou Williams. Walter Terry, of the Saturday Review, describing "Mary Lou's Mass", which premiered in New York City, Dec. 9, 1971, says, "It is a beautiful work, filled with reverence and jubilation, confession and humor."

The Ailey company will also conduct a series of master classes Monday, March 20, at 7:30 p.m. in the UMass Women's Physical Education Building. Saturday, March 25, members of the company will travel to Greenfield and Springfield to conduct workshops; and they'll also conduct an advanced master class at UMass.

The Impresario

Mozart's The Impresario, a one-act musical comedy with spoken dialogue, will be presented Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. in Theatre 14 at Smith College. The opera was first performed in 1786 in the court of Emperor Josef II. Musically, the opera is a model of dramatic precision. It concerns the problems of an opera manager of the old school, and the rivalry, both professional and amorous, between an aging prima donna and a young, ambitious soubrette.

Little Mary Sunshine

The Rick Beyosan operetta is reviewed on page 12.

The Trial of the Catensville Nine

Political activist Daniel Berrigan critically acclaimed drama about the recent trial in which Berrigan and his followers were convicted for destruction of draft files. The play will be performed in the Studio Theatre, South College, Friday and Saturday at 8, Saturday evening at 10:30, and Sunday at 3:30. Reservations must be made in advance through the Bartlett Box Office, 345-2579 as seating is limited.

Music

Amherst Folklore Center

March 17, 18 and 19 at 8:00 the Center will feature Michael Cooney, who has recently cut his first album titled Michael Cooney or the Cheese Stands Alone. Although relatively unknown, Cooney has been around the world of folk music for quite some time, and he has performed in over 60 college concerts. Along with guitar and banjo, Cooney plays about eight other instruments, and has a smooth country style that is reminiscent of Pete Seger.

Country Comfort Coffee House

This week, Saturday, 8 to 12:30, in the basement of Crabtree House the featured performers will be Elegy, Twilight Trio, Charlie Ortolani, Floyd Fleming, Larry Brerthards, and Sogo Wolf.

Julliard String Quartet

The Juilliard String Quartet, one of the world's leading chamber ensembles, will perform Friday at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at UMass. In addition to its evening concert, the quartet will hold a special open rehearsal at 2 p.m. Reserved tickets for the concert are available through the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, 545-0202. The open rehearsal is open to the public without charge.

For the UMass concert, the quartet will perform Cherubini's Quartet No. 1 in E Flat Major; String Trio, Opus 20 by Anton Webern, and Johannes Brahms' Quartet in A Minor, opus 51, No. 2.

Little Latin Larry

This Friday, St. Patrick's Day, March 17, Kennedy Lower will present Little Latin Larry and his Loopie Louies with the Fabulous Latinaires, and the Luscious Latinettes starring Miss Fifi LaBod in another of the fabled Greaser Dances that have been so nifty in the past. The group is made up of none other than Little Latin Larry, of course, Chico DeNicole on bass, Tony Santore on drums, Dominique Peroso on lead guitar and Greg Gionoffrio playing organ, piano and rhythm guitar. The excitingly choreographed Latinaires who also back up the vocals are in reality Garabaldi Barcelona, Butchy Meachi, and the Sanchez Brothers. Doing the dancing and adding to the good looks and general class of the group are Fifi LaBod and Angel Pasta. They've been together for almost four years and always put a great show on for their UMass fans. They'll be rocking in the Ballroom for the mere price of $1.25 for straight-dressed numbers and $1.00 for those who choose to come in the spirit of the Fifties - either greased or wearing white socks. There will also be two other fine groups entertaining: Keady, Smithline and Baltimore and Fort Mudge, both Boston groups. The festivities begin at 8:30. Don't miss it.

Symphony Band Concert

This coming Sunday, March 19, the University Symphony Band will present a concert in Bowker Auditorium. The ensemble will be conducted by Larry Weed, Director of Bands. Works to be presented include the third movement of Berlioz's Grande Symphonie Funegre et Triomphale and Town Piper Music by Richard Mohaupt. Also included on the program are Symphony #14 by Hovhaness and four movements of Mozart's Serenade #10. The concert is free and the public is cordially invited to attend.

Films

The Boy Friend (Fox, Springfield)

Ken Russell's scintillating reinterprates Sandy Wilson's 1954 stage parody of the musicals of the Twenties. It is a wide-eyed, colorful, affectionate valentine to the genius of Thirties filmusical director Busby Berkeley and a constant delight all the way. The story blends stage and screen techniques as it tells the tired but true story of backstage intrigue and love, this time concerning a third-rate theater troupe performing their show The Boy Friend in the British provinces during the early Thirties. The technical effects are adroitly blended, the period feel is well portrayed, and the performances are as much warm as they are wonderful as their hasn't been a bigger, more successful camp extravaganza since the Musical's heyday in the Forties. Russell is, as usual, a victim of grosse indulgence, but here is such an apparent virtue that the whole film, in fact every frame, shines with his genius. A surprise too, is the performance of Twiggy in her first starring role; she sings well enough, dances even better, and has a most appealling screen personality.

Cabaret (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

The most acclaimed film thus far this year is this film version of the 1967 stage musical which adeptly synthesized the Rise of Nazism with the decadance of Berlin in 1930. The stage musical completely altered the form as it brazenly used music as commentary to the story's action. On the stage it was a serious, sharp, ingenious spectacle and on the screen it's further accentuated. Director Bob Fosse, scriptwriter Jay Allen, and songwriters John Kander and Fred Ebb have sharpened the original material and in the process have reinterpreted the musical film. The musical is a sardonic, accurate rendering of the last days of the Weimer Republic seen through the characters and incidents of a young British's intellectual stay there. Much of the action, all of the musical numbers, take place in a local cabaret where Joel Grey's performance as the evil Master of Ceremonies exemplifies the era. The film benefits greatly from the startling interpretation of Liza Minnelli as the amoral Sally Bowles and Grey's haunting holdover from the stage. Thematically and cinematically one of the most interesting films of the season and the first jolt the musical film has been given in decades. To be reviewed.

The Cowboys (Eastfield Mall Cinema, Springfield)

John Wayne as a rancher who hires school kids to take cattle on a long, hard trek while his regular broncs hunt gold is what this strong, disturbing Western. The emphasis is on a slick, stylizized Western product in the traditional Hollywood manner and the film is light years from McCabe and Mrs. Miller, and the work of Sam Peckinpah. It's a typical John Wayne Western. What is disturbing about it is the manipulation of the boys which in the end results in a gratuitous bloody melee where the boys are judged men by the number of dirty villians they kill. Wayne is fine, if you can take his usual overbearing manner, and the film is effective adventure thanks to director Mark Rydell. Still the twists towards the end when the boys become murderers is a bit hard to bear.

Dirty Harry (Showcase Cinema, W. Springfield)

Detective Comics in Panavision with Clint Eastwood as a San Franciscan counterpart to crime-fighting the superhero comic strip characters. A shrewd, taut, well-made thriller that pits Eastwood as Dirty Harry against insane murderer named Scorpio. Harry is something to be seen as he single-handedly quenches a bank robbery without even sweating and Scorpio often does Harry one better in this sharp fantasy thriller. The theme of the film is simplistic dribble about how liberals are responsible for letting culprits like Scorpio out on the streets and the message may be laid on a bit too thick at the end, still those apparent flaws are all but glossed over under the firm, ingenious hand of director Don Seigel.

El Topo (the Talkie, Northampton)

One of the year's most controversial films, some have hailed it as a significant metaphor for the plight of modern man in the form of a freewheeling Western, others have called it pretentious dribble. The story follows the wanderings of a black–clad gunfighter who wanders about some of the most graphically imaginative cinematic horrors in quite some time.

The film is ladened with Biblical references; from having the head-shaven title hero represent Jesus to having specific incidents seem out of the Bible. The talent is there, in director and star Alexandro Jodorowsky, although it is now in a very rough form. Still, in many ways an imaginative and important film from Latin America which shouldn't be dismissed.

Fiddler on the Roof (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

A mundane version of the longest running musical in Broadway history. The disappointing epic comes away by director Norman Jewison who has employed needless flashy techniques in the transition. The musical becomes bottom-heavy and static when blown up on a Super Panavision screen and blasted out of twelve stereo speakers. The show itself has grace, charm, and a natural warmth and are all but eliminated here. Instead every moment reeks with phony folklines and cornball routines. The excellent Bock-Harnick score has been homogenized in musical interludes embarrassing at best.

The Gang That Couldn't Shoot Straight (Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton)

The film version of the very funny Jimmy Breslin satire on the Mafia has the only distinction of naming that group by name, otherwise the Brotherhood should sue for being so ineptly portrayed. The adaptation is flat, the direction rather foolish, and the performances too broad and ethnically defined to be effective. The farce isn't funny, only stupid as this clunking satire of inflated characters and situations only proves that lack of restraint does not necessarily conote hilarity. The story concerns the rivalry between two New York gangs, one led by Jo Van Fleet, and the large cast features Jerry Orbach, Leigh Taylor Young, Lionel Sander, and Robert DeNiro.

Get Carter (Sunday, Student Union Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)

A story of revenge very well portrayed. This British based film concerns a gangster who returns to his home in Newcastle to avenge the murder of his brother. Michael Caine is very effective as the man pursued as director Mike Hodges has quite vividly captured the underworld millieu with the right amounts of sordidity and intrigue. The film is well-plotted and consistantly entertaining, despite the occasional violent moments.

Harold and Maude (Amherst Cinema, Amherst)

A charmless, insipid black comedy that, believe it or not, comes our way with more sugar frosting than in most sentimental comedies. The film features Ruth Gordon and Bud Cort, she as an eighty year old lifeforce, he as a suicidal twenty year old, who have a love affair. The humor is silly or offensive, the black

Senate Passes WMUA And Concerts Budgets

By CHARLEY BERKOW

The Student Senate passed an amendment to increase the budget of the Social Action Committee, defeated amendments to decrease the Daily Collegian budget, defeated amendments to increase WMUA's budget, and passed an amendment to increase its own operating budget to pay its officers.

The amending went on at last night's first special Student Senate meeting, called to pass RSO budgets.

The Senate decided to add $10,000 to the 802G Senate Social Action account. This money will go towards the establishment of a concert committee. It was pointed out during debate that these funds could be used either for organization purposes or for paying for a group to perform.

After debate as to how much the state and private foundations were giving, the Senate voted to continue its $30,000 contribution for the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black Students (CCEBS). This came during debate of the Senate Sponsored Program account.

Also debated here was the contribution to the Five-College Student Coordinating Committee.

Senate President Lee Sandwen moved that these funds, some $13,895, be stricken. After debate on UMass students' participation in the Five-College exchange, and a motion to cut back the funds as a token move, the original amount was passed.

Senate Treasurer Skip Olmstead introduced an amendment to decrease the Collegian printing budget by four pages on Fridays. A binding clause, also defeated, which was attached to this amendment, would have required the four pages to come out of Poor Richard's.

"Doing that is tantamount to censorship," said Nathan Gorenstein, Collegian Managing Editor.

Senate President Lee Sandwen agreed.

"It's not our, the Senate's, job to decide the number of pages of the Collegian or what size pictures go on the front page," he said.

The Senate also defeated a proposal by Mira Marshal to kill Poor Richard's by cutting the Collegian printing budget by $22,000.

The Collegian budget was amended to require the paper to bring in $5,000 more of advertising. Olmstead noted in proposing the increase that the Collegian has consistently been more successful in bringing in advertising than it has anticipated.

WMUA Business Manager, Sheldon Katz, asked some senators to propose various additions to the WMUA budget. They did, but most of them were defeated, including a proposal to pay the Director of Personnel Management $25 per week rather than the $15 he was budgeted for and explained a proposal to replace the Police radio scanning monitor, which was stolen.

A motion to make WMUA drop either its UPI or AP wire service and replace it with an "underground" news service was defeated.

The Senate passed an amendment to its Operations budget to pay officers. The amendment passed 34 to 9, with 3 abstentions, despite considerable debate.

"Anyone who needs an outside income cannot be an officer..." said Rents and Fees Committee Chairman Bob Chiller during the debate, unless the officers get paid.

The President of the Senate will be paid $200 per month, 9 months a year. The Speaker and Treasurer will each be paid $150 a month, 9 months a year.

"This has come up in at least the last 4 years that I know of," said Senate Vice-President John Hogan. Last year, it was defeated twice by referendum.

However, Rents and Fees Committee Chairman Bob Chiller predicts that it won't happen again this year.

"The Senate is a lot closer together this year," he explained. Last year, he said, the referenda were sponsored by dissatisfied senators.

A motion to pay chairmen of standing committees $10.00 per week was defeated.

Other budgets passed by the Senate last night were:

--The Course Description Guide-$17,670.00, including $5,000 for hiring faculty or TA's;

--the Student Senate Auto Pool-$12,864.00, mostly for the acquisition of 3 autos;

--the Student Judiciaries-$1,000.00;

--the Office of the General Counsel-$25,220;

--Finance Committee, $5,000;

--University and State Communications Council, $3,420;

--Draft Counseling, $6,850;

--Northampton Volunteers, $772; a motion to limit this group to transportation only was defeated;

--Room To Move, $57,060; most of this amount, $54,175, is from a government grant.

O'Brien Stresses Youth Activism

By BILL MANBURG

"Youth must take over the leadership of the party, for the Democratic party figure lies with the youth," said Lawrence F. O'Brien, Democratic National Chairman in an interview following an address before the Springfield Rotary Club Friday, at a $50 a plate luncheon. O'Brien stated the Democratic party reform insures broad base youth participation and decision-making in the future. There will be delegates to the national convention who are under 25. "Youth is disenchanted with the political system, but so are millions of other Americans." While at this time more youths are registering as Democrats than Republicans, O'Brien anticipates the overall voting participation to be low.

O'Brien commented that the Democratic presidential nomination is open, and it will not be decided until the convention, and that after the convention in Miami Beach he believes the party will be "together". The chairman would not comment on a specific candidate, declaring he must remain neutral.

He questioned the idea of a national primary calling the "concept worth considering" but felt that there are many pitfalls and difficulties which need careful review and clarification.

Speaking on St. Patrick's Day in his hometown, O'Brien called for a new order of things in American society."

He said the great challenge of the 70's is not the immediate Presidential campaign, but the credibility and trust of our system which is now being tested. "Where is this nation going in the 1970's?" asked the Democratic chairman. "Today millions of people question the system of ours," and wonder if it can meet the commitments of the future.

"On the threshold of 1972 Americans won't tolerate a government with no say." Politicians are not held in high regard by the people these days, and according to O'Brien this is the reason for such poor citizen involvement. Looking to the future, O'Brien sees that political leaders must appeal to their conscience and humanity, and not to what is politically popular. He "wants the system tested head to head" and he hopes the internal reform the Democratic Party has recently undergone will enable it to meet the challenge of the future.

O'Brien has one year remaining on his four year term as national chairman and he has "no desire to maintain the position."

Housing Budget Slashed

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Last Saturday the Rents and Fees Committee met with Chuck Hampton of the Housing Office. The result of the meeting was a slash of approximately $400,000 from the housing budget presented to the committee at last Thursday's meeting. This cuts the proposed raise in housing costs about $40 per person to about $70 per year.

Mike Gregory of the committee explained the cuts. "Most of them came from the area of environmental change. This includes requests for furniture replacement and kitchenettes in dormitories." He explained that most of the cuts in kitchenette requests were not complete cuts, but cuts from a request for a number of kitchenettes to an allocation of just one kitchenette per dorm.

The committee is still exploring all possibilities of getting raises down to zero. Committee Chairman Robert Chiller stressed the need for student support if anything is to be accomplished.

As things stand now (if no further action is taken by the committee) the rent increase will total about $70 per person. Add this to a proposed $10 per semester meal ticket increase, a definite $3.50 per semester Health Services increase (already approved by the committee in order to provide better service) and a "very possible", in Gregory's words, telephone rate increase of $7-8 per semester, and the picture for next semester is bleak.

On Tuesday the committee meets with representatives of Food Services and the Campus Center in the morning and Housing in the evening. The meetings are expected to continue until the committee reaches some kind of accord with the people asking for the increases.

Report Says Amherst-UMass Happy

A commission charged with examining the financial arrangements between Amherst and the UMass says it is basically happy with the arrangement, although it is recommending some changes.

The town is receiving some $241,000 a year from the state in lieu of taxes on university-owned land, the commission says. Such a system of payment is "superior" to other possibilities and "we feel this system is highly beneficial to the town."

The comments are contained in the report of the Town-University Tax Study Commission, which presented the results of its year-long study to town meeting members this week.

The recent growth of the university prompted the formation of the commission at last year's town meeting. The report says Amherst has a resident population of 13,000 and the university, which had some 5000 student in 1958, now has a population of 21,000.

In addition, the university in 1958 held 635 acres in town. Now it owns 814 acres.

"This rate of growth has accentuated the dilemma presented by the university, the necessity of providing numbers of people and public services for growing buildings, and the increase in tax-exempt land caused by the property-tax base for town revenue," the report says.

The commission additionally recommended that:

—The town not provide special equipment to fight fires at high-rise dormitories at UMass and that the university pay part of the town Fire Department budget based on the percentage of fire calls to the university.

—The university contribute to the Police Department budget, either directly or in the form of equipment, and be responsible for "special events" at UMass that require police supervision.

—The university should not be required to make "set annual payments" for local schools, but could make "direct or indirect payments from time to time."

—The university explore an expanded public transportation system to reduce the use of private cars by members of the university community, to reduce traffic congestion and to slow road wear.

—The university begin a program of education to reduce unnecessary use of water to alleviate a potential water shortage crisis.

The report noted that the university has made some additional contributions to the town in the past. These include half the cost of a $33,000 fire truck in 1954, donation of a $32,000 truck in 1968, construction in 1960 of Marks Meadow laboratory school for the UMass School of Education, which "saved the town from financing a new elementary school," payment for metered water used, maintenance of water lines on campus and payment of sewer use charges.

The 14-page reports said it was pleased with the present arrangement, but added, "Nevertheless, we do recommend an increased dialog between university and town officials and the contribution of funding and materials by the university to the town from time to time for events and services which are a special financial burden to the town, but directly applicable to the university."

Correction

Due to an error in copy editing there were two mistakes in Friday's story on the General faculty meeting.

One, the amendment to change the purpose of the Fac-Sen was not killed, and will be voted on at the next general faculty meeting. Two, Bernard Bussel did not propose an amendment to the Athletic Council motion. He asked that the general faculty overrule the Fac-Sen Athletic Council motion, which did not happen.

Brother Julius, the self-proclaimed "Son of God," offers ominous warnings about the future, during his three hour address at the Campus Center Auditorium on Friday. (MDC photo by Jim Lavarkas)

Brother Julius And The Future Of Man

By SHARON McGOURTY

Brother Julius, the self-proclaimed "Son of God" spoke at the Campus Center Auditorium on Friday from two until five p.m. to a crowd of about 300.

Julius, a large, dark, bearded man, dressed in long brown robes was introduced by one of his disciples who was also dressed in a long, but white robe.

Julius took the platform and began in a quiet, low-key almost spiritless manner and proclaimed, "I haven't come to lie to you, I've come to tell you something about God." And tell he did.

Julius Christ claims that he is God and that he came to earth once as Jesus Christ and has now come again as Julius Christ to redeem the men of today. He prophesized great destruction in the future and the control of the world by a "dictator worse than Hitler" by 1980.

As Brother Julius' warnings about the destruction that will ensue became more ominous he yelled fervently from the stage of man's blindness and shortcomings that lead to evil. Julius had great knowledge of Scripture and often cited scriptural passages as an attempt to prove that his coming has been proclaimed in the Bible.

All through his speech, Julius continued to remind his audience that if, "you love the truth you will recognize my voice," or "I am the one, the only the true son of God." He constantly emphasized the fact that he has the ability to heal, "If there is any malady in your body, I can heal it, ' and "There are some of you who have cancer in your body right now and don't even know it-I will heal you." All that was required to be "healed" was a belief in the fact that Julius is God.

After speaking, Julius invited the audience to "tear me to shreds with questions." The questions, though spirited, were generally respectful. Eventually some of the more rambunctious members of the audience became involved in complicated and heated debates with Brother Julius.

SUG Board Decision Coming

By DON BISHOP

Friday morning's Collegian reported that a settlement of the recent SUG Board-Administration controversy over hiring and firing of management staff in the Campus Center appeared imminent. Friday afternoon produced no settlement on the essential questions and an impromptu meeting between representatives of SUG Board and Acting Chancellor Bromery on Saturday morning. At Saturday's session, another compromise on Article 7 (the SUG Board by-law which is at the center of the present controversy) was drawn up, which was accepted by SUG Board representatives Barry Cohen and Guy Ross and the representative of Dr. Bromery: Russell Kraus.

Both sides were not totally satisfied with the agreement reached at this time. The question arose from the SUG Board members as to whether the Chancellor had the constitutional power to appoint management personnel to the Campus Center, without the approval of the SUG Board. This question, which is still unresolved, could prove to be a major area of difficulty between the SUG Board and the Chancellor's office.

The feelings of SUG Board Chairperson Cohen are that the Chancellor must not have the power of initiation of appointment procedure in the Campus Center, rather this must remain the domain of the SUG Board, with the Chancellor having the veto power over SUG Board management selections. It appears that this whole question will only come to a head when and if the Chancellor proceeds to act on his own in appointing Campus Center management.

The problem still at hand is whether the Acting Chancellor will accept the version of Article 7 drawn up on Saturday.

Administrator Kraus said on Saturday that he expected to see Dr. Bromery Sunday night and get Bromery's feelings on the latest version of Article 7, and report back to SUG Board at that time. No word of acceptance or rejection came last night however, as a definite decision was delayed until today.

Kraus on Saturday had expressed optimism that Dr. Bromery would report back favorably on Saturday's compromise. The postponement of final action on it led some SUG Board members to believe that the opposite would be the case.

The compromise resulted in the addtion of two words to the main body of the original text of Article 7 sent to the Acting Chancellor. These are the words "broadly representative" which appear in the first paragraph. The text follows below:

"Personnel Procedures: The Board Chairman will receive from the Director notification of openings of any professional positions. The Chairman will at that time appoint a broadly representative search committe of not less than three (3) Board members to nominate to the Board the candidates to fill the position.

Procedures for dismissal of a staff member may be considered by the Board in executive session. The Board may, if it chooses at this time, create a committee of not less than three (3) Board members to investigate the pending dismissal. A staff member may be dismissed by a two-thirds (2/3) vote of the Board members. Such actions are to be considered in executive session if requested by the staff member under consideration."

WMPIRG Aiming at Trustees

By SHELLEY LAUZON

The UMass Board of Trustees' approval is the prime objective for WMPIRG action, according to Carl Sapolin, a spokesman for the Nader-inspired group.

Sapolin went on to say: "I feel confident they will approve WMPIRG. I can't see why they won't. After all, the Constitution says that when the majority wants something, minority rights are protected."

"Over 55% of the student body, or approximately 9,000 undergraduates, signed petitions supporting WMPIRG," he said. "Two or three graduate students are trying to get the mandatory 51% of that body, but it is not an all-out effort."

Last week, the Student Senate approved WMPIRG, paving the way for the final decision by the Board of Trustees. Sapolin said that a decision is expected by May, at the latest.

Immediate plans for the group include contacting as many faculty and Board of Trustee members as possible to gain their support. Sapolin also said that legislators in Boston may be approached for their support of the group.

PIRG's in Oregon, Minnesota, and Vermont will be used as examples. He added: "These are the only three that have gone before Boards of Trustees, and all were approved with no problem."

No action can be taken by the group until it is approved. If approved, WMPIRG plans to establish an off-campus office, hire professionals to aid in research projects, and establish a tax refund system.

Sapolin also announced a series of four cable television programs dealing with the group, to be broadcast in the near future. Produced by the Media Center and WMPIRG, the programs will focus on the basics of a PIRG, its growth and expansion in the Amherst, Montague and Route 9 area, and product quality. The last program remains undecided as yet.

Drugs Caused UMass Death

The death of a Reading youth who died Feb. 25 on the campus of the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, was attributed Friday by Medical Examiner Dr. Sheldon Clapp of Amherst to an overdose of opium alkaloids.

John Wristen, 19, was found by a UMass student at 6 a.m. that day in Pierpont Dormitory. A spokesman for the university said at the time of his death that Wristen was not a student there.

Assault By Guards Ends Walpole Riot

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) — An assault by prison guards to force 18 resisting inmates into their cells at Walpole State Prison Sunday ended with five of the prisoners and two officers injured.

It left the entire inmate population locked up but conditions were described as "extremely tense."

A prison spokesman said Corrections Commissioner John Boone had been at the prison earlier in the day, but had not been there since the violence started.

He returned to the institution at 8:20 p.m., walked past newsmen without comment and entered the superintendent's office.

The outbreak was the second time within two days that physical violence has broken out at the maximum security prison.

Friday night an estimated 150 of the 624 inmates rioted, causing an estimated $200,000 in damage.

They burned the prison library, wrecked furniture and smashed windows.

Prison Supt. Robert Donnelly said at a news conference that prison officials decided to lock up all of the inmates Sunday afternoon in order to permit a conference between prison authorities and the guards following a negotiating session earlier with a prisoners grievance committee.

Donnelly said the lockup proceeded smoothly until guards reached Cell Block 2, where 18 prisoners barricaded themselves on the cell block floor and in their cells and refused to be locked in.

After three commands from Donnelly that the prisoners enter their cells of their own accord, an assault was ordered and a group of guards forced their way past the barricades and in a wild melee with the inmates, who had armed themselves with broken furniture and other implements, forced all of them into their cells.

Tear gas was used by guards in the assault, but there were no reports of any shots being fired.

Donnelly said nine of the prisoners in Block 2 had built their barrier on the ground floor of the three- tier blocks and another nine built individual barricades at the doors of their cells to prevent them from being locked.

The guards first had to dislodge the inmates at the ground floor barricade and then overcome and disarm the nine individuals who were in their cells.

The five injured prisoners, whose wounds were described as serious although they were able to walk from the cell block to the prison hospital, were moved to Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston and to Norwood Hospital.

They were identified as Fred Boyd, Edward Lillis, Donald King, Paul Tisserand, and Ray Luce. A sixth prisoner being treated in the prison hospital for asthma was removed following the fracus to the Norfolk Correction Institute Hospital after the tear gas in the air aggravated his ailment.

The two injured guards were identified as Mike Laws, who suffered a sprained elbow when he fell down a flight of stairs, and Anthony Cabral, who was hit on the head by a thrown object, prison officials said.

Donnelly said the violence was the second incident of the day. Earlier, a shouting match developed between one inmate and a guard during a negotiating session over grievances and the argument came close to an open fight before guards separated the two men. It was after that occurrence that Donnelly decided to enter the lockup which began at about 3 p.m.

Block 2, where the trouble occurred, has 45 men, all in individual cells. It was described by Donnelly as a maximum security block.

Dominic Presti, president of the guards union, said the 18 inmates in Block 2 who resisted the lockup had smeared themselves with vaseline, put stocking caps over their heads and had taped their fists before the violence began.

It was in Block 2 that the most serious violence occurred Friday night, when the inmates rioted.

In Brief...

Longshoreman Leader Quiet About Pay Board's Refusal of Raise

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Longshore leader Harry Bridges remained silent Sunday about his plans for possible reaction to the federal Pay Board's refusal to approve full wage increases won in a 134-day West Coast dock strike.

Bridges, in Honolulu for a meeting with local International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union officials over the weekend, had no comment on reports he may not get backing from the AFL-CIO's International Longshoremen's Association on a possible effort to shut down all ports in the nation.

Nixon Askes For Interested Capitol For Minority Businesses

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon is asking Congress for legislation he said would provide "greatly increased capital for minority business enterprises, at startlingly small federal cost."

Nixon asked for liberalization of rules governing minority-enterprise, small-business investment companies. Under these regulations, the private sector and the Small Business Administration pool funds which are loaned to or invested in firms operated by blacks, Puerto Ricans, Mexican-Americans and Indians.

U.S. Warplanes Cover Rescue of Downed Pilots

SAIGON (AP) — More than 50 U.S. warplanes attached enemy troops for 24 hours to cover the dramatic rescue Sunday of three downed American pilots on the Ho Chi Minh Trail in southern Laos.

Belfast Rallies Held Quietly

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — About 10,000 demonstrators marched in a Roman Catholic district of Belfast Sunday at the end of a St. Patrick's weekend punctuated in scattered areas by gunfire.

The march and rally was seen as an attempt by Catholic civil rights leaders to reply to the show-of-strength rally by an estimated 50,000 Protestants in a Belfast park on Saturday.

The Catholics demanded reforms that would give more power.

The purpose of the Protestant rally was to warn the British government against weakening Protestant power in Northern Ireland or making reforms that would seem to be appeasing the Catholic-oriented Irish Republican Army-IRA.

Some Protestants fear that a peace plan being drawn up in London may go too far in favor of the Catholic-based civil rights movement.

One of the speakers at the Catholic rally was Bernadette Devlin, a civil rights leader and member of Britain's Parliament. She took note of a speech by William Craig, a former Ulster Cabinet minister, at Saturday's rally in which he said:

"If the politicians fail it would be our duty to liquidate the enemy" and vowed to "do or die" in the fight against the IRA.

"Let him do or die. He cannot get rid of all of us," Miss Devlin told the crowd.

Paddy Kennedy, another Catholic opposition legislator, warned of a Catholic counter-backlash to any violent Protestant rising.

He said Protestants are the minority in Ireland as a whole-an implied threat of support from across the border in the Irish republic for Catholics attacked in the North by Protestants.

Kennedy is currently free on bail under a charge of promoting the IRA cause.

A gunman fired early Sunday into the Dungannon home of Austin Currie, Roman Catholic member of the Protestant-dominated provincial Parliament. Currie said he and his wife dived for the floor and were unhurt.

The incident came one day after Paddy Devlin, a fellow Catholic opposition lawmaker, said he escaped an assassination attempt he blamed on "Protestant extremists."

Currie and Devlin are leaders of militant Catholic legislators boycotting Parliament. They are protesting the internment without trial of suspected IRA members.

Pompidou Meets Heath

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Edward Heath and President Georges Pompidou brushed aside the French leader's call for a popular vote on the enlargement of the Common Market and pledged Sunday to work together for the reform of the world money system.

But the two leaders ended a weekend summit at Heath's country home near London still divided over the future political organization and role of the expanding European community.

Their meeting began under the shadow of Pompidou's decision to call an early referendum on the planned entry of Britain and three other countries into the Common Market.

This had been interpreted by British authorities as a lunge for the leadership of the Common Market at a time when France's main challengers-Britain and West Germany-seem beset by difficult domestic situations.

But any hard feelings on the matter were quickly dispelled after Pompidou himself offered an explanation which Heath accepted with equal speed.

While in Europe, pick up an ugly European.
We can arrange your rendezvous with a bug (or any other Volkswagen) in 40 cities in 15 countries.
And that includes the handling of those nasty details like insurance, registration and licensing.
So all that's left for you to do is enjoy the benefits of driving your own VW in Europe. The low operating costs, for example. Or being able to go where tour buses fear to tread. (And still be only a stone's throw away from one of Europe's 5,000 VW Dealers.)
Then, after the tour's over, we'll arrange to have your car sent back through something we call TASP (Tourist Automobile Shipping Program).
So you can keep on enjoying that ugly European you picked up while in Europe.
While in America.

A group of Arabs gather near the Old City walls in Jerusalem to listen to the Radio Amman broadcast of King Hussein's speech on a proposed settlement to the Israeli occupied lands on the West Bank of the Jordan River. (AP)

Proposal Suggested For Mid-East Border Dispute

JERUSALEM (AP)-The "Allon Plan" to settle the quarter-century-old border dispute between Israel and Jordan once more is in the Middle East spotlight as Jerusalem's answer to King Hussein's proposed United Arab Kingdom.

Both plans for the future of the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the River Jordan have points in common.

This could be explained if press reports about secret meetings between Hussein and Deputy Premier Yigal Allon and other Israeli officials are to be believed. And most Israelis believe them.

Allon made his proposal shortly after the fighting ended in the 1967 war. It was given a cool reception at first but as the months stretched into years the plan has won wide acceptance among the Israeli leadership and the man in the street.

In essence, Allon envisaged only minor adjustments to the present frontiers-changes in strategic areas that would not increase Israel's burgeoning Arab population.

In exchange for a peace treaty the estimated 620,000 West Bank Arabs would be permitted to choose their own political structure, whether it be a federation with Jordan or some kind of link with Israel.

Allon also proposed a number of security settlements-a kind of barbed crescent-running from the occupied Golan Heights of Syria, down the Jordan Valley and the southern cost of the Sinai Peninsula to Sharm el Sheikh.

The Israelis would not permit Arab armies west of the Jordan River but would establish a land bridge linking both East and West Banks.

The status of Jerusalem is still a major stumbling block.

Allon did not go into detail on the West Bank capital. But Hussein said this should be Arab Jerusalem. Amman would be both the federal capital and the seat of the region of Jordan.

The Israelis, in effect, annexed the Arab sector of the Holy City in 1967 and vowed never to give it up.

At the moment the Allon proposal has as much chance of being activated as Hussein's United Arab Kingdom.

ITT Case Results In Possible Bill

WASHINGTON (AP)-Saying private contributions to political campaigns and conventions give rise to scandal, as in the ITT case, Sen. Philip A. Hart said Sunday he will propose laws to finance them with government funds.

The Michigan Democrat said the most important lesson to come out of hearings on the International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. antitrust case is that the nation's system of financing campaigns and conventions "is very faulty".

Hart is a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is looking into allegations linking ITT's pledge to help underwrite the 1972 Republican convention with settlement of the antitrust case.

"I don't know whether we will ever uncover solid evidence of any wrongdoing by any public official, but even if we did, it won't be very important as far as history is concerned unless we recognize the fact that it is the system that guarantees these kind of scandals," Hart said when questioned about the ITT hearings.

Hart made his comments on the ABC radio program "Issues and Answers".

Hart added: "I am determined to develop a bill that will strictly limit the total amount of money that a candidate can spend and to provide out of the Treasury that every candidate for the federal office shall be given that sum of money and it should include conventions too. We should have candidates competing for votes, not for money."

Hart, a member of the antitrust subcommittee, also reiterated that he intends to introduce legi ation in response to the growing power of conglomerates, adding "we have got to stop that trend."

In another development, the Sunday Star of Washington said the Justice Department has refused to supply the Judiciary Committee with its files on the ITT case.

The newspaper reported Sunday that acting Deputy Atty. Gen. L. Patrick Gray III, in a letter to Committee Chairman James O. Eastland, D-Miss., refused to turn over the files because "they include confidential summaries, investigation reports and intradepartmental communications."

The Star quoted Gray as saying that releasing such material would "severely inhibit obtaining confidential information...necessary to effectively carry out the law enforcement policy..."

Eastland, reached by phone at his home in Ruleville, Miss., said he had not yet received such a letter. The Justice Department declined comment, saying that the committee would have to release any correspondence.

LIFE Attacks Administration

NEW YORK (AP)-Life magazine said Sunday that the Nixon administration "has seriously tampered with justice in San Diego."

"In an effort to protect certain of its most important friends there from criminal prosecution, the administration has in several instances taken steps to neutralize and frustrate its own law enforcement officials," Life said.

The article was written by Life associate editors Denny Walsh and Tom Flaherty.

They said that President Nixon personally chose San Diego as site of the next Republican national convention and considered its his "lucky city".

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said "We're not going to have any comment on a story of this sort."

Life said its investigation, started last July, showed that:

—U.S. Atty. Harry Steward squelched an investigation of reports that illegal political contributions were being funneled through a company controlled by C. Arnholt Smith, longtime friend and financial ally of Nixon. Steward had been appointed by Nixon on Smith's recommendation, Life said.

—The administration refused to let a federal investigator testify for the prosecution against San Diego's Democratic mayor, Frank Curran, who was acquitted in 1970 of charges that he took a bribe from a cab firm to help raise taxi fares. Curran had won office with the backing of Smith, who was part owner of the cab company until shortly before the fare increase, Life said.

—During a criminal investigation for tax evasion of John Alessio, another prominent San Diegan, the administration called off its grand jury presentation and sat on the case until the statute of limitations almost expired on a key portion. Even after Alessio was indicted, the White House tried to get a federal agent who was involved to circumvent his own agency's regulations so the White House could learn what he knew about Smith, Alessio and Steward, according to the magazine.

Life said Smith went to Washington to plead Alessio's case with Nixon. The magazine said Smith denied ever having talked to the president about Alessio, who is now serving a three-year term in federal prison.

The magazine said it has asked the White House on three separate occasions for an opportunity to discuss its investigation, but the White House has not responded.

Life said Steward denied he had obstructed justice and said the decision to prosecute in tax and election law cases rests in Washington.

"I'm in no position to shield anyone from anything," Steward was quoted as having said.

Light Plane Hijacked

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP)-A young man and his blonde female companion hijacked a small twin-engine seaplane with three other persons aboard during a flight to the Dry Tortugas Islands Sunday and ordered it flown to Cuba, authorities said.

A spokesman for the Miami Air Traffic Control Center said the Cessna 310 operated by Tortugas Airways landed safely in Cuba Sunday afternoon.

Wilhelm Kuhl, an employe of the small Key West airline, identified the hijackers as a couple, both about 25. Also aboard the plane were the pilot, about 25, and a married couple, both about 50, he said.

Further identifications of the pilot and passengers were not immediately available.

The company spokesman said the hijacking occurred while the plane was en route to the tiny Dry Tortugas Islands, an American territory about 70 miles west of Key West.

A spokesman for the Monroe County Sheriff's Department said no injuries were reported.

An FBI spokesman in Miami confirmed the hijacking, but declined to give further details.

S.F. Grisham, watch supervisor for the Miami Air Traffic Control Center, said the plane took off from Key West at 11:33 a.m. Sunday after filing a flight plan for the Dry Tortugas.

CCEBS Seeks Support

The first UMass football captain from the CCEBS special educational opportunities program will lead the team next fall.

He is Clarence Brooks, junior from New Bedford (63 Hillman St.) and sociology major. Like just about all of the students in the CCEBS program, he in all probability not only wouldn't be playing football but wouldn't be attending the University at all if it weren't for CCEBS.

The letters stand for Commitee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students. Since 1968 the committee has run a program of economic and academic assistance for the state's black students who want to attend UMass. The program has now branched out to consider any low-income or minority group student who would have difficulties attending the University without assistance.

Brooks recalls that when he first arrived at the University he found he had never had to deal with so many white people before. "I didn't know how to handle it, but the CCEBS program took a load off my mind. When you get here the tutorial program really helps you out, and you have somebody to identify with. You're not lost," he said.

He is now a CCEBS counselor, one of a group of upperclassmen assigned to help CCEBS students. "If they have a problem the counselor can either iron it out or point the student in the right direction to get it solved," Brooks said.

He sees the CCEBS program as an educational experience for white students as well as black. "It's helping me educate the white person by my just being here," he said. "Just by seeing black students on this campus every day the white students are being educated."

CCEBS now has over 600 students at the UMass Amherst campus and will graduate its first class this June. It is a growing, going program that has drawn support from a wide range--the federal government, the Ford Foundation, the Commonwealth, the UMass student body, private contributions and others.

It still needs further support. This is a fund drive year for CCEBS. The program is seeking support from individual members of the University community, from business and industry and from other sources.

The responsibility of seeing the program continue will also fall on the CCEBS graduates. "A person who finishes the CCEBS program has to do everything he can to see that it continues. He's got to give other people the same chance that he got," according to Brooks.

Clarence Brooks, a CCEBS counselor, says that the CCEBS program is both educational for black and white students alike. Brooks who is a sociology major says that any graduate from the CCEBS program should seek to keep it continued.

Brazil Licenses Hunters

RIO DE JANEIRO, March 18—The Brazilian Government has acted to conserve the country's wildlife by licensing sportsmen and forbidding professional hunting.

A new regulation issued this week by the Brazilian Institute of Forest Development limited sportsmen to a specific list of birds and beasts to be hunted in season and in certain areas only. Their bag will be limited and they will have to pay license fees.

Jaguars, otters, ocelots and monkeys, which were hunted by professional killers, were not included on the list of animals to be hunted by sportsmen, who will be allowed to continue to hunt doves, wild fowl, ducks, alligators, hares and rodents.

The killing of insect-eating frogs for commercial purposes was blamed for plagues of grasshoppers that invaded northeastern towns earlier this year.

Charles Cabell, the American operator of "Brazil Safari Tours," a travel agency that specialized in big game hunting, said: "I guess we'll turn to bird watchers, photographers and orchid pickers."

Feminist Studies Questionaire

A group of University women including faculty, graduate students, undergraduates and administrators is currently meeting to discuss the possibility of having a Women's Studies/Feminist Studies Program at UMass. This questionnaire is an attempt to discover the opinions of the student body about such a program. Please feel free to express your ideas so that this program can best serve you.

1. Do you think that the University, as organized today, is designed to meet the needs of its women students and faculty? Please circle one alternative.
Yes
No
Possibly
If not, what changes would you like to see made so that the University could better serve women?

2. Do you feel that there is a need for a Women's Studies/Feminist Studies Program at UMass?
Yes
No
possibly

3. Would you take courses offered by such a program?
Yes
No
Possibly

4. We would like to know what courses or types of courses you would like to see offered in this program. Listed below are some possibilities. Please indicate your interest in each type by circling the number which corresponds with your interest. (1 indicates high interest, 2 indicates some interest and 3 indicates little interest.)

Man Goes Bike Flying

BENSON, England (AP) — John Potter went flying Sunday by bike.

He reached a height of 30 feet and kept airborne for 500 yards before his manpowered aircraft came down. Potter was uninjured but repairs to the plane will take a month.

The plane, called Jupiter, is one of four with which manpowered flight enthusiasts are hoping to win 10,000 pounds-$26,000-put up by the Royal Aeronautical Society and a private sponsor.

To win the prize the machine must travel a mile over a figure eight course.

Potter, a Royal Air Force flight lieutenant, was hoping to beat the record of 993 yards of manpowered flight established in 1961. His machine was built by Royal Air Force apprentices.

Their strongest competition comes from apprentices at the British Aircraft Corp. Their machine, called Puffin, is built around a bicycle, as is Jupiter. The pilot pedals to get airborne and his power is then transferred from the bike wheels to a propeller.

Food Services

Imagine: Fish Cookies

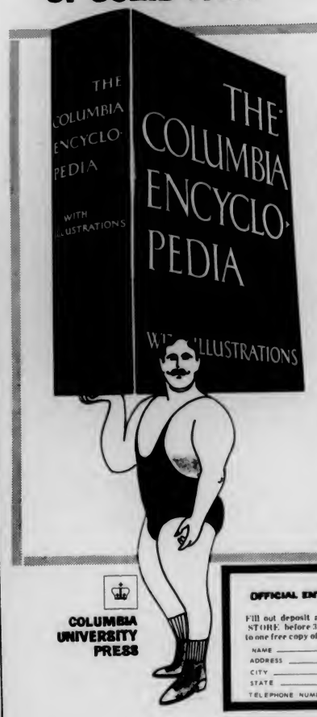
By BETSY PEET AND JON SNOW

On Wednesday afternoon, you will have a unique opportunity to sample one of the newest types of foods called "food analogs." The Test Kitchen and Marketing Departments of Food Services will conduct a "blind test" of a chicken salad plate made with real chicken and one made with a "chicken like" flavor food analog.

The comparison test performed by those who fill out the questionnaires, should demonstrate the preference for either salad. This is a way you can let your opinion be known about an entirely new type of food source. If accepted, the "food analog" may go into use in the Food Services Department.

Food analogs are essentially synthetic edibles derived from soy protein. They resemble the "original" food in taste, texture, appearance, and smell. Analogs have been developed since 154 to meet the needs of a rising population and a diminishing food supply.

We have had various substitutes for natural foods for some time. When butter was scarce in the early 1940's, margarine became one of those first substitutes, and it has nearly captured the entire market today. Now we have large numbers of artificial sweeteners, filled milk products, vegetable whiteners, whips, and freeze-dried foods. Presently, due to the astronomical cost of meat, large food companies have been experimenting with meat analogs in such forms as diced ham and chicken, hot dogs, cold cuts, and hamburg. Some are already on the consumer market. However, large institutions, such as UMass, have not used analogs in large quantities.



The development of meat substitutes has progressed to the point where it is difficult in many cases to differentiate between the natural product and its artificial counterpart. They are far less expensive on the institutional level and quite convenient to use in cooking. Surprisingly enough, "meat" analogs are almost as nutritious as the comparable animal product, and sometimes less fattening. Some comparisons substantiate this fact:

	Beef	Beef Subst.	Ground Beef	Ground Subst.	Chicken	Chicken (Light)	Ham	Ham Subst.	Ham Canned
Protein	20	24.2	20.6	21.6	20.8	18.3
Fat	4.0	20.3	8.5	3.4	9.3	12.3
Water	60.0	54.2	64.6	63.8	63.6	65.0
Ash	3.4	1.3	2.1	1.2	2.1	3.5
Carbohydrate	12.6	0	4.2	0	4.2	9
Calories	166	286	176	166	184	193

In vitamin and mineral content, the analog products are also comparable in all categories to the natural meat. Future experimentation with analogs should produce similar results. Seaweed products, fish flour and their derivatives with strange names, like guamps and peltids, will very likely take the place of grain, flours, milk, poultry, and orange juice. You probably won't be able to tell the difference...imagine, fish cookies!

If you want to sample some of these newest products in food technology, be at Hampshire Lobby on Wednesday March 22, at 4:00. Try to arrive early, as the portions are limited. At that time, more information will be available along with the questionnaires. This experiment should be fun, and we are looking forward to challenging your taste buds.

Back To The Beginning

Every once and awhile we here at the Collegian try and figure our how the administration and the various student government organizations work. We usually fail.

Well, we've failed again.

The SUG Board and a representative of Acting Chancellor Bromery, after debating who will hire and fire the Campus Center management people for almost three weeks now have reached a compromise which is virtually identical to the SUG Board's original proposal. The only change asks for a "broadly representative" search committee to look for people to fill vacant positions. Other than that the amendment is identical to the original one; the one which would give the SUG Board substantial power over hiring and firing.

A decision is expected from Acting Chancellor Bromery today on that compromise measure. Dr. Bromery, if you haven't already made up your mind, the Collegian urges to accept the compromise motion before you; if you have made up your mind, we hope to be able to congratulate you in tomorrow's Collegian.

Towards Free Education

If the Commonwealth of Massachusetts lived up to its name and instituted the proper taxing procedure, its financial postion would be enhanced and the concept of free public higher education could become a reality. And not until that happens will this University truly be able to claim an equal educational opportunity for all; rich and poor, white and minorities, men and women.

Under the current tax structure of this state, new revenue sources were necessarily established over the past years to meet the growing budget and stop the state from becoming bankrupt, according to State Representative John Olver. These sources included rate increased on income tax, establishment of a state sales tax, establishment of an insurance company tax, and the recent establishment of a state lottery. According to Olver (who was on campus last week to talk to students about voter registration and whatever else was on their minds) , the only financially sound tax program would be a graduated income tax, such as the one used the Federal government. Olver pointed out that the federal tax laws have not changed in structure since the graduated tax went into effect. In fact, he added, the individual tax rate actually dropped, even through the recession of the late sixties.

Free public higher education certainly seems more inviting than any of the tuition increase bills proposed this year. Those will make students or their families pay more for education now, or eventually. Their far-reaching results would probably be to widen the gap between the education of the rich and poor even further than at present.

Under deferred tuition plans, rich families could pay for their children's education at the same time the child was in school; meanwhile, the student from a poor family would be building up a debt of eight to ten thousand dollars to be faced at graduation. Most students would not look forward to such a debt, no matter how much they expected to earn after graduation. Thus, the poor and even those in lower and middle income brackets would still be discouraged from attending college.

Direct across the board tuition hikes are another way to quickly widen the gap in the education of the poor. Increases of only one hundred dollars per year supposedly would force about ten per cent or more of the students now in attendance to drop out of school.

Presently, this state practices the concept of free education for twelve years, which is really quite an arbitrary figure. Why not make it fourteen or sixteen or eighteen so it will include community colleges, four-year colleges, or even graduate school? This could not be implemented immediately under current tax structure, which is presently causing state bankruptcy. But if the tax laws were changed, more revenues could probably be derived.

One barrier to free higher education is espoused by the sentence often put forth by those against education, "College is a luxury, not a necessity." In this supposedly matured society, that is an outmoded idea.

Rather than helping to pay the cost of education, tuition should really be looked at as a user tax, comparable to the cigarette tax. Students' tuition dollars are channeled into the state's general fund. They go toward all of the state's expenses, not just higher education. There is no guarantee that any increased revenues from increased tuition would go toward an increased University budget. And even if this year's legislature agreed to such a plan, it would not necessarily be binding on future legislatures.

The University Budget for '72-'73 shows that requests for financial aid funds were drastically cut. It does not seem possible that legislature will appropriate enough money to cover scholarship aid for all deserving students to cover present costs, let alone increased costs. (This could be called a credibility gap-promises of aid and actual appropriations.)

Free public higher education should become the goal of this year's legislature, and the one's to follow. Those who would call such a move fiscally irresponsible should take a closer look at its possibilities.

When coupled with the graduated income tax, revenues would become stable enough to perhaps even pay for improved welfare. Children from welfare families could also afford to attend school (if room and board fees were not too high) and derive increased income after graduation. These people would not only come off the welfare rolls, but would also pay the state taxes.

If an educated populace is supposed to be a benefit to the state, then the legislature should not move in any way to discourage anyone from attending college. The legislature should not pass any tuition increases this year. It should, instead, move toward a program of free, quality, public, higher education.

Ireland-A Land Of Mad Leprichauns

I recently heard a UMass professor say that American Irish do not deserve to be Irish. They lack the Irish revolutionary spirit. He was obviously American English. I can't say that he wasn't well read, but he did overlook the fact that the money for the revolution that began in 1916 came from American Irish. He also overlooked the fact that many Irish Americans came here to fight in the Civil War to gain experience to continue the seven hundred year old fight in Ireland. And that many of those that stayed continued to support those that went back.

I wonder what is going to happen to that unhappy land. That nation of "Mad Irish" that could produce hero's such as St. Pat and Fergus Blacktooth with the same quiet admiration for the heathen as for the saint. That land that evolved feje tellers sagas of gods from the other world stealing mortals in glass ships into James Joyces that could immortalize an average day in the life of its citizenry.

The land of Wolfe Tones that worked for liberty while the rest of the world talked about it, and the Hakja and Haki of Karlsefnu's 10th century Viking Vineland explorations who told tales of lands with great gifts.

We can safely assume, from what we are taught by individuals who should know...., claim to know..., who don't know any more than the rest of us that war in Ireland will be a total disaster.

And yet it's a fact that the British political mind only reacts to disaster. They have proved in the past as they are proving today that the only way to reason with them is to half destroy them. It happened in the early part of the century, it happened in the coal miners' fiasco and it may happen again in Ireland. What's the matter with them?

In the meantime, the I.R.A. will continue to plant bombs to blow up soldiers, and blow up children instead. And they will liberate the North like they did the South. But what a price, the means, for stupidity and obstinance on the part of Mother England and brother Finn.

Because Ireland is a white nation the figures of her dead will make a greater impression on us than the million dead in Bangladesh or Vietnam. Maybe Ireland is lucky in that respect, but what does it say for the rest of us?

Big Trouble At McGraw-Hill

WASHINGTON--The great publishing house of McGraw-Hill has had enough nightmares in the past year to last them for a decade. First they got caught with their advances down in the Clifford Irving-Howard Hughes fiasco. Then it was revealed last week that one of their best-selling authors, a 101-year-old Indian named Chief Red Fox, stole a large chunk from a book by another author, James McGregor, and included it in his diary which he published under the title of "The Memoirs of Red Fox."

Because of this McGraw-Hill had to pay a sum of money to the McGregor heirs to settle a plagiarism suit.

It must be very trying times at the publishing house these days and I can imagine the confusion reigning in the editors' office.

"Okay, who's the wise guy who didn't check out the redskin's story?"

"Look. An Indian comes into my office in full headdress. He's 101 years old and he says he's a former chief of the Sioux tribe, and he's written his memoirs by hand. What am I going to do-call him a liar?"

"You could have at least checked out the manuscript with somebody who knew something about the Sioux Indians."

"I checked his handwriting. It was an authentic diary. Every word in it he wrote himself."

"Including the 12,000 words he swiped from McGregor's 'The Wounded Knee Massacre'!"

"I realize it looks bad in retrospect but how was I to know he would steal all that stuff out of somebody else's book? After all, that's a lot of copying for a 100-year-old man to do."

"Well, it puts us in a sorry mess coming right after the Irving book. What do we do now?"

"Perhaps we could make some capital out of it. Maybe we could say we were fooled by Chief Red Fox because he showed us hand-written letters from Sitting Bull which turned out to be forgeries."

"That's a possibility. If we could only find some women Red Fox was tied in with, it would make us look better."

"Gentlemen, we've checked into Chief Red Fox's sex life and because of the age differential, he's no Clifford Irving."

"There's got to be a Nina Van Pallandt on one of those Indian reservations he wrote about."

"We couldn't even find a scuba diver at Little Big Horn."

"What about the Swiss banks? Do they have any accounts in the name of Helga R. Red Fox?"

"We looked into that. As far as we know Chief Red Fox pulled off this caper all by himself. The question is why would an Indian do that to the white man?"

"I know this sounds far out, but suppose Chief Red Fox is really Howard Hughes?"

"What if he were?"

"It would be a great way for Hughes to get revenge on us."

"It's a possibility. Irving said when he saw Hughes he did look like an Indian."

"But haven't you forgotten? Irving never saw Howard Hughes."

"He never saw Chief Red Fox either."

"Gentlemen, gentlemen. There is a credibility problem here, and I don't think we're facing up to it. I believe what we should do is announce to the press that we were taken in by a 41-year-old swinger from Ibiza and a 101- year-old Sioux Indian from Wounded Knee, but it will never happen again."

"Good idea."

"Sir, there's a man outside in a U.S. Cavalry suit who says he's Gen. Custer and he would like to sell us his memoirs."

"Well, buy them for heaven's sake. This may finally be the big book we've been waiting for."

Letters To The Editor

University Court-Papers & Wisdom

To the Editor:

Once upon a time I was wandering around the University Store looking to buy a roll of adhesive tape. I found the tape. Being curious and experiental person, I pondered the eternal question: "What's it like to ripoff the Establishment?" So I ripped off the roll of tape and a package of sticky-squares (the kind that stick on both sides so you can hang up Frank Zappa posters and India cloth in your room). The expectation of getting away with the stolen merchandise was more or less equal to my expectations of getting caught. I was caught. My name and address was written down, and of course the inevitable student number. I would hear from them.

Tonight I attended court for this offense. Court was scheduled to begin at seven o'clock. At about 7:20, and without introduction, the three presiding judges started the session. In the courtroom with me and two other criminals were a couple of "floorwalkers", as they like to be called, a couple of Defense Counsels, and a tape recorder that made faces at me.

Upon inquiry, I found that no one seemed to know any of the judges' names. A few criminals didn't show up. So after about ten paper shuffling minutes it was discovered that one was on vacation and the other two just weren't coming.

In a half hour it was my turn to face the Formidable Tribunal. There was no Counsel available for me. So a last minute counsel was provided for me, which resulted in a short consultation where it was "determined" I would plead guilty. When asked why I ripped off the store, my exact reasons seemed to utterly frustrate everybody in the courtroom. I was questioned with: "Don't you know that....."; "Do you mean to say that....."; "You stole because you blah blah blah? .....

Then the courtroom was cleared and outside one of the counsels says to me, "I think you pissed them off!" I smiled and learned that the judges were students who worked sometimes two jobs and did this court work voluntarily. Now I understand what "justifiable aggression" means. After about eight or ten minutes the judges made their decision. I got off with two and a half semesters of jeopardy, plus a letter of censure....which would follow me throught graduate school. A fair price? For me going to prison would have been fair. To a journalist, any experience is worth any price.

Before I left, one of the judges offered me some sound advice. It was pure sound. "Before you take it on yourself to 'experience' something of this sort, you should make sure that it's not at the cost of the community." I then tried to explain that experiencing something at the cost of the community is just what makes the experience worth undertaking. Experience lies in the nature of its repercussions. No one seemed to understand what I meant, so I left.....relatively satisfied with my punishment, but highly disappointed at the actual nature of the University Court, both in its proceedings and in its preparation.

It first struck me that nobody there seemed to know what he was doing. I was wrong. Everyone knows what he's doing, they just don't know what anyone else is doing.

We've Had Enough!..

To the Editor:

We, the following, approve of Chairman John Stevens' approach for dealing with student concerns. Our feelings are that a Student Senate President should be an organizer of students and act upon issues versus working behind closed doors and that this type of Student Senate President is the only effective type, and has been needed for a long time.

Bob Chiller
John Whalen
Dave Poisson
Ric Savini

The following is a letter written by John Stevens to all Student Senators:

As you know, I am running for S.G.A. President. I feel compelled to talk to you about my ideas regarding the governing of our student body. I think we are experiencing a very crucial period; one in which not only the student senators' role is questionable, but also whether the Senate itself is necessary and/or representative.

I think we are all at least remotely aware of the vacillating nature of the Senate. But more important, I think that we are at a point where we can "take no more". We must re-organize, re-evaluate, but most important, act!!

That is why I'm running for President. I want to ACT. But first, I must prove to you that I am ready. I want to discuss my ideas with you. And I hope you can help me deal with my disgust for apathy.

I will make a concerted effort to talk to each Senator individually, as time permits, before the April 5th election. Please make yourself available for we are at the point where we can no longer deal with the University's problems behind closed doors.

Teach Peace,
John Stevens

Natural Adventure

To the Editor:

Last night we had the misfortune of attending the "American Wilderness" at Academy of Music theatre. We had been led to believe by the fraudulent advertising on television, in newspapers, and on posters, that the movie was indeed a "true life adventure," a documentary about wildlife and its natural environment.

Nowhere in the ads was there any mention that the film in fact converned an arrogant adventurer whose "dedication to the wilderness' led him to slaughter whatever wildlife was worthy to be considered "game." This hunger's idea of conservation seemed to be geared to maintaining species so they could always provide sport for countless generations of butchers.

Naturally, we walked out in disgust after realizing what this true-death adventure actually was.

Admittedly, they are not responsible for the content of the films they show. (It is indeed ironic that such a tale of blood and death should be rated "G", while any film hinting at the slightest sexual love would be rated unsuitable for children.)

However, because of the deceptive advertising which this theatre shared in, we feel the least they could do is refund our money.

Copies of this letter are being sent to a number of local publications which carried the ads.

Sincerely,
Fred John

It seems rather ironic to us that the worst leak in the Campus Center is located in front of the building maintenance office. If only Marcie Broeur could see them now...

Rumor has it that the renovations at the Blue Wall cost in the neighborhood of $23,000. Seems like that's an awful lot of money for a lot of blue plywood dividers. A pleasure palace, indeed.

Doyle Janitorial Service

To the Editor:

Enclosed is your personalized itemized bill for janitorial services conducted upon university property on March 5, 1972. As a reputable service of the great and dynamic free enterprise system I feel that it is my duty to inform you of certain structural faults of John Adams Tower. The preponderance of my services to this university has been conducted within room 1816 of the above mentioned tower. The major sanitary problem of this area rests in a deluge of water which enters the living section of the room (from the 19th floor balcony) during wet and inclimate weather. I have been informed by various "former" residents of room 1816 that this current unacceptable condition has existed for a period of two years with little or no response from the institutional sectors of the university bureaucracy.

It is for this reason that I offer my janitorial services on behalf of room 1816 to the university at greatly inflated and punitive rates. As is the custom of your university prompt payment of this fee is demanded within thirty days of date of billing. If the university finds itself incapable of meeting this financial obligation within the stipulated time period please add a five dollar ($5.00) late payment fee to the enclosed itemized figure. Checks are an acceptable medium of payment and may be made payable to:

Practical Help

Dear Editor:

To those who feel concerned about the Belchertown situation, immediate help can be given in the form of donating games, soft toys, and clothing...mittens, hats, scarves, and winterized footwear are particularly needed. Many of the volunteers who work at Belchertown on Saturdays can attest to the fact that we often take patients for walks who have inadequate clothing for the out-of-doors. Donations can be mailed or delivered to the Volunteer Office at Belchertown State School. Any and all gifts would be appreciated.

Concerned Tenants

To the Editor:

We are a group of concerned individuals who have been ripped-off in the past by off-campus housing. We are now in the process of getting together some hard core facts on off-campus housing conditions to be used in a video-tape documentary project. The finished product will be aired on Channel 8, and will be available for group discussions, etc. To provide a solid framework, we need information that can be documented (holes in ceilings, etc.) from other individuals who have been ripped-off by unscrupulous landlords, agencies, et al. If you are unfortunate enough to be one of these people and wish to help publicize the issue, please contact Dennis at 549-3949 after six.

Apologies By SAM

To the Editor:

On Saturday evening, Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity presented the film "Zachariah." We had drawn our publicity stating that the screenplay was written by Firesign Theatre from the Dunhill records soundtrack album liner notes. Other information was taken from the catalog of Films, Inc. We had never seen the film, and from all previous suggestions and recommendations felt the film would be an enjoyable one.

To those who were "misled" by publicity, may we apologize. To those who came and saw the film, thank you. We hope you could find it entertaining.

Prisoner's Exercise Bodies

Several Physical Education majors at the University of Massachusetts have volunteered their efforts to organize and conduct a physical conditioning program at the county jail in Northampton. With the cooperation of the Deputy Master, Mr. Merton Burt, and his aides, this group of individuals from the University have been serving the inmates in a much needed capacity-a positive means to release their daily tensions and an opportunity to acquire an education within specific physical conditioning approaches.

The initial phase started on Jan. 10 with a calisthenics and running program, offered three times per week for approximately 50-60 minutes per session. Conducting this program are the following P.E. majors: Paul Keating, Ralph Ledger, John Culley, Thomas Murphy, and Stephen Rome.

Recently, three of the majors with a strong weightlifting background visited the jail and spoke with the inmates about a "weight" program in addition to the initial class. This was received with great enthusiasm and thus "kicked off" phase II of the physical activities program. Heading this latter program are Dave Pikkarainen, Jim Kain, and Robert Pena, again offering three sessions a week.

Approximately 35 inmates are involved in both programs (about one-third of the jail population at this date) which are both conducted within the confines of the cell blocks.

Anti-Nixon Caucus Forming

By DEBBIE BERNSTEIN

Students opposed to President Nixon's re-election in November and who want to help influence the Democratic platform in July are beginning to organize in the Five-College area.

Called the Massachusetts Youth Caucus, the students are gathering on area campuses to outline their immediate and long-range goals. Such a meeting last week at Pierpont House found a dozen students from four colleges ranging over a wide area of politics and their potential roles.

The Caucus was organized January 8 in Cambridge as a division of the National Youth Caucus Organization which operates out of Chicago.

The MYC does not endorse any political candidate. It is a bi-partisan, issue-oriented group whose purpose is to represent youth and issues meaningful to them. It also urges youth to campaign actively against President Nixon's administration.

The immediate goals of the MYC are threefold, the Pierpont meeting was told.

MYC members have begun to work on an intense voter registration campaign. They hope to aid in the registration of all eligible high school voters and also organize the youth voters currently not in school. A representative from the Cambridge Youth Caucus stressed at Pierpont that this group is the most unrepresented faction in the nation.

The second purpose of the MYC is to coordinate the National Youth Caucus efforts in influencing the contents of the Democratic platform to be adopted in Miami.

This plan entails Platform Hearings on April 22 and 23. Such hearings in Massachusetts and later across the country determine what issues the youth voters are interested in.

Testimony will be taken on the subjects of juvenile deliquency, urban problems, women's rights, the ecomony, U.S. foreign policy, environment, consumerism and corporate power.

Material from these hearings will be compiled into a complete and coherent document, MYC claims.

A pre-convention caucus of all youth delegates from throughout the nation will be conducted to achieve unity behind the Youth Caucus platform and to establish also an alliance with other convention groups such as the Black Caucus and the Women's Caucus.

Through a thorough and thoughtful platform backed by convention votes, the Youth Caucus hopes to push effectively for major platform revisions.

The third MYC purpose is to explore ways to correct imbalances on existing slates and delegations so as to represent young people fairly, the Pierpont meeting was told.

The Youth Caucus hopes to be represented in Miami by the largest number of youth delegates possible. However, due to what the Youth Caucus terms a narrow interpretation of the McGovern Commission, their hopes may be cut short.

The McGovern Commission's report requires the Democratic parties of the various states "to overcome the efforts of past discrimination by affirmative steps to encourage representation on the national convention delegation of young people-defined as people of not more than 30 nor less than 18 years of age-and women in reasonable relationship to their presence in the population of the state."

An issue of concern to the MYC and discussed at Pierpont, is whether a "reasonable relationship" should be based on total population or on voting population.

Young people, 18 to 30 years of age, constitute 19.6% of the total population, but 29.4% of the voting age population. The Youth Caucus argues that the Democratic National Committee's favoring of the former standard represents a serious dilution of the intent of party reforms-that is, "to overcome the effects of past discrimination".

The difference in interpretation is the difference between 587 convention delegates versus 889. The Youth Caucus claims that this would represent a grave injustice to the youth of America.

The MYC is represented by student delegates throughout the Amherst area. People who are interested in working with the caucus or who would like more information should contact any of the following people:

Diane Campbell, Mt. Holyoke College, 538-2558.

Ellen Vollinger, Smith College, 586-2910.

Albe Simenas, UMass., 546-9108.

National Antiwar Meeting Held

More than 1250 students from all over the country crowded into Washington Irving High School in New York to attend the February 25-7 National Student Antiwar Conference. After two days of intensive discussion the conference voted to build demonstrations against the war on April 22 in New York and Los Angeles.

The conference felt it was more urgent than ever to answer the "lies of the government that the war in winding down". Conference participants pointed to the continuing escalation of the air-war as an indication of the Nixon administration's real policy in Vietnam. The conference opened with a teach-in which described the present stage of the war. Among the speakers were Noam Chomsky, Fred Branfman of Project Air-War, Dr. Arthur Galston who described the ecological destruction of Indochina, and Ngo Vinh Long, a Vietnamese student who spoke of mounting opposition of students in South Vietnam to the Thieu regime.

In presenting the resolution to build the April 22 demonstrations, Fred Lovgren, the National Coordinator of the Student Mobilization Committee, said that the deceptive propaganda of the government could best be countered by rallying in the most massive visible form around the key demand of an immediate unconditional withdrawal of all troops and material from Southeast Asia. The resolution was cosponsored by Lanny Davis, the National Coordinator of Youth for Muskie; Debbie Bustin, the outgoing National Coordinator of the SMC; Laura Miller, a National Coordinator of Young Socialists for Jenness and Pulley; and Vicki Raphael and John Levine, New York State Coordinators of Youth for McGovern.

The wide spectrum of student organizations that attended the conference indicated that there is the potential for a powerful organizing drive for April 22. The conference participants came from 30 states and Canada. There were students present from 124 high schools and 154 colleges. 130 organizations besides local chapters of the SMC were present. These included Students for Lindsay, the National Student Lobby, the Association of Student Governments, Youth for Muskie, and the National Student Association.

Other resolutions adopted by the conference included a demand for total amnesty for draft resisters, deserters, and those servicemen who have been victimized for their opposition to the war. The antiwar GIs were called the "heroes of the war who deserved our overwhelming support". The high school workshop voted to hold a national high school speak-out against the war on April 19. On that day strikes, rallies, picket-lines, and other activities are planned by high school students all over the country. The high school workshop also vowed to keep up the fight for high school students' rights to organize in their schools against the war without harassment from school administrations.

The conference adopted a proposal to join with other campus groups in sponsoring a nationwide student poll, Choice '72. This is designed to gauge students' preferences between the presidential candidates and to allow students to express their opinions about the key issues in the election such as the war. A huge vote by students for "Out of S.E. Asia Now!" will be a powerful boost to stimulating opposition to the war throughout the population.

There was also a report from Salm Kolis of the Los Angeles SMC saying that leaders of the Los Angeles Chicano community are working to build a large contingent for the April 22 demonstration in Los Angeles.

The conference learned that the April 22 demonstrations will take place in many foreign countries. The World Assembly for Peace and the Independence of Indochinese Peoples held in Versailles, France, February 11-3, called for worldwide demonstrations against the war to be held on April 22.

Enjoy summer this school.

Summer sessions at the University of California offer college students and teachers some of the best choices of courses, language institutes and special programs for credit in the nation.

Plus, they offer college students and teachers the California summer. With its beaches. Its mountains. Its lakes. Its perfect weather.

Summer sessions will be held at Berkeley, Davis, Irvine, Los Angeles, Riverside, San Diego, Santa Barbara and Santa Cruz. All of them start in mid-June but vary in length from campus to campus. Fees range from $90 to $200.

For more detailed information about the various summer session on the UC campuses, fill out this coupon and mail it to us.

Pictures talk. Some little boys don't.

Some inner-city ghettos have special schools. For little boys who don't talk.

Not mute little boys. But children so withdrawn, so afraid of failure, they cannot make the slightest attempt to do anything at which they might fail.

Some don't talk. Some don't listen. Most don't behave. And all of them don't learn.

One day someone asked us to help.

Through Kodak, cameras and film were distributed to teachers. The teachers gave the cameras to the kids and told them to take pictures.

And then the miracle. Little boys who had never said anything, looked at the pictures and began to talk. They said "This is my house." "This is my dog." "This is where I like to hide." They began to explain, to describe, to communicate. And once the channels of communication had been opened, they began to learn.

We're helping the children of the inner-city. And we're also helping the adults. We're involved in inner-city job programs. To train unskilled people in useful jobs.

What does Kodak stand to gain from this? Well, we're showing how our products can help a teacher—and maybe creating a whole new market. And we're also cultivating young customers who will someday buy their own cameras and film. But more than that, we're cultivating alert, educated citizens. Who will someday be responsible for our society.

After all, our business depends on our society. So we care what happens to it.

Kodak More than a business.

What may have been the last or next to the last Mirkwood was held on Orchard Hill Saturday night. A jazz concert to be held in the Hill bowl this spring is reportedly what is causing the discontinuance of the popular coffeehouse. "I am the Wizard" says Ken Grenier to Flip Hanno (right). Ken is playing the Wizard of Oz in a sketch about the movie. The two will appear at the Blue Wall on Wednesday night.

Million Jobs Offered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House announced yesterday a program to provide more than 1 million summer jobs for youths aged 14 to 21.

Secretary of Labor J.D. Hodgson said more than $319 million in federal funds will be provided for the program for summer jobs.

The number of jobs and the federal funds are both a record high, the administration said.

The federal money will be used for public programs providing 734,400 jobs. Another 336,000 jobs will be provided by private business and industry at no federal cost, the announcement said.

The public jobs will be provided through the Neighborhood Youth Corps, Federal Summer Employment Program for Youth, the Public Employment Program and the Youth Conservation Corps.

Most of the jobs will be for nine weeks at $1.60 an hour, it said.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Astrologer Madame Soleil is described by many as the most famous woman in France, ranking ahead of Brigitte Bardot. She conducts a daily radio program with an estimated 5 million listeners, including French President Georges Pompidou. When I make radio and television appearances in the United States and Canada, the ratings invariably reach a peak. The popularity of astrology continues to surge, and I feel this is all to the good.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Travel arrangements require double checking. Reservations should be verified. Don't overlook apparent minor details. Misinformation could be supplied by neighbors, relatives. Stress self reliance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): In making purchase, be sure product is as represented. Means stick to quality. Substitutes now could prove disappointing. If you stick to factual information, you make progress. Act accordingly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent on personality, how you relate to those with opposing views. Watch public relations. Be wary in affixing signature to legal documents. Finish rather than begin, spread message. Take initiative in advertising, publishing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't put off medical, dental appointments. Look out for your own welfare. Do what must be done to ensure security. New contacts now will prove beneficial. Accent original approach. Adhere to your own style.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may have been asking for the wrong things. Some wishes are due for revision. Don't substitute glamor for actual accomplishment. Aquarian figures prominently. Trust hunch. Heed inner feelings.

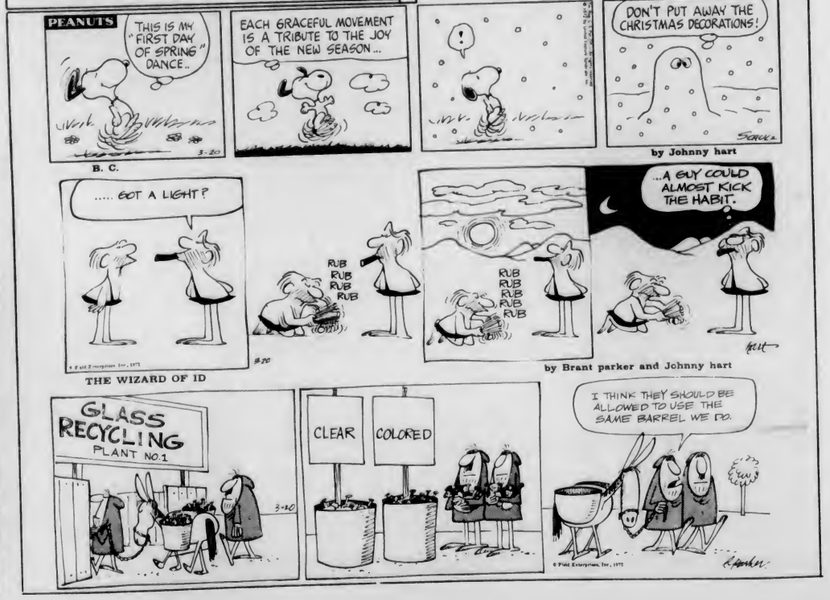
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Some persons in positions of authority tend now to be confused. Be flexible. Don't condemn until all facts are in. Sagittarian is involved. Take long-range view. Avoid requesting more than you can handle.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Check details connected with any plan involving relatives. Avoid becoming involved in wild-goose chase. Don't reach too far, too soon. Give ideas time to crystallize. Maintain steady pace.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be conservative in money matters. Well meaning persons may be misinformed. And some individuals are now willing to be reckless with your finances. Protect yourself. Get guarantee. Take no unnecessary risks.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Tread softly. Don't insist or make demands. You gain most through diplomacy. Applies especially to dealings with mate, other family members. In legal matter, wait and see. What you need will be presented.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lie low. Obtain valid hint from Sagittarius message. Look behind scenes for what you require. Keep confidential matters confidential. Someone who should not be listening may be eavesdropping.



AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be firm in stance. Refuse to be talked out of convictions. Member of opposite sex may be involved. One who whispers sweet nothings could be sparring for time. Maintain self-esteem. Like yourself and others will, too.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You are able to finish project. Do so. Don't hang on to past. Key now is to widen circle of acquaintances. Valuable contact can be made if you are not restricted. Aries figures prominently. Shake off lethargy.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are subject to moods. You require creative outlet. You succeed when you are yourself. You fail when you imitate. Domestic adjustment, perhaps change of residence occurs this year. You can be happier, if you so permit. Taurus and Libra persons are in picture. November could be your most significant month in 1972.

K.C. Could Surprise In AL West

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP)-Sound pitching, excellent defense and blinding speed will be trademarks of the Kansas City Royals in the American League race this season.

The Royals, who finished second in the AL West by a comfortable 6 1/2 games last baseball season, need a power hitter. If they come up with one, watch out.

Manager Bob Lemon thinks he may have one in John Mayberry, a left-handed first baseman whose previous flings in the majors have been flops.

In all probability, Mayberry will start the campaign at first. He has been described as "a young Willie McCavey." The Royals obtained him from Houston during the winter.

"Mayberry is hitting the ball real well," says Lemon. "He's got a good shot at it. He has all of the potential you can ask for.

"If Mayberry and the right fielder can produce, that's what we're looking for. We need to bolster our offense."

First base and right field were the Royals big weaknesses in 1971 when they finished 16 games behind the champion Oakland Athletics with an 85-76 record. Lemon tried numerous players at both positions and didn't find the answer.

"The right field spot is the most competitive spot we have," Lemon says. "All of the players after the job are hitting real well."

"Bob Oliver, Joe Keough, Richie Scheinblum and Steve Hovley are the candidates. Oliver and Keough played there last year."

Scheinblum, the American Association's most valuable player with Denver last year, led the AA in four departments-a .388 batting average, 108 RBI, 10 triples and total bases. He hit 25 home runs.

Hovley, picked up from Oakland in the November major league draft, was with Iowa in the AA in 1971 and batted .337.

Royals pitching could come close to being the best in the division. The staff is led by Dick Drago and Mike Hedlund, both right-handers, and lefty Paul Splittorff. The other starter in the four-man rotation likely will be Monty Montgomery.

Dragon was 17-11, Hedlund 15-8 and Splittorff, whose .271 earned run average was the Royals best among the starters, 8-9. Bruce Del Canton, 8-6, also figures heavily in the Royals plans.

Lemon says his bullpen, led by Ted Abernathy, a 39-year-old right-hander who saved 23 games, may be the best in the league. Tom Burgmeier is the other top reliever and was credited with 17 saves.

If Mayberry solves Lemon's first base problem, the infield is set. Fred Patek, smallest player in the majors at 5-foot-4, will be at shortstop. He batted .267.

Paul Schaal, .274, who walked 103 times, will be at third base, and Cookie Rojas will play second base. Rojas will play second base. Rojas had his finest year last season, batting .300 and making only five errors.

Jerry May, back after a season marred by injuries, is the No. 1 catcher.

Amos Otis is a fixture in center field. Otis led the Royals in just about every department, including batting with a .301 average and RBI with 79.

Lou Piniella, who batted .279 and set a club hitting streak of 18 games in 1971, will man left field.

Otis and Patek, the Royals' crack base stealing combination, will be running more than ever this year. Otis led the AL last year with 52 thefts, and Patek was second with 49.

Princeton Wins

NEW YORK (AP)-Ted Manakas scored 20 points and controlled a crucial slowdown offense in the second half to lead Princeton over Indiana 68-66 in the first round of the National Invitation Tournament for college basketball Sunday.

The victory shot the Ivy Leaguers into Monday night's quarter-finals against the winner of Sunday's second game between Texas-El Paso and Niagara.

Manakas helped Princeton pull away from a 36-63 halftime tie, scoring seven points in a 20-10 spurt that virtually sewed up the nationally televised game for the Tigers.

Than, with eight minutes to go and Princeton leading 57-50, the Tigers went into a semistall and froze the ball for several minutes at a stretch.

The strategy enabled Princeton to pick up nine foul shots in the late going.

A tense first-half duel included six ties and seven lead changes.

Manakas, taking the play away from teammate star guard Brian Taylor, hit for 11 first-half points to keep the Tigers even with the Big Ten Hoosiers.

Ruggers Open With Win

By ROY LYONS

The UMass Rugby Football Club opened their season Saturday with an impressive performance, shutting out the University of Rhode Island A's 12-0, at Kingston, R.I. The Redmen completely dominated the game, played under less than ideal conditions. The field appeared to be an abandoned cow pasture, lacking even goal posts.

Bob Drum opened the scoring early in the first half, powering his way through heavy traffic from thirty yards out. Mike Donnell's conversion attempt was weak, never reaching the phantom goal posts, and the score remained 4-0.

Donnell redeemed himself later in the half with a twenty yard scamper, boosting the score to 8-0. He went in practically untouched, cutting brilliantly to evade several tacklers. Mike Vogle's conversion attempt was low, and the half ended with no further scoring. URI never penetrated beyond the UMass twenty-five yard line throughout the entire first half.

The Redmen lost the wind advantage in the second half, but they continued to control play. Asa Glaser picked up a loose ball and scooted ten yards for an apparent score. The referee ruled otherwise, however, and the URI defense held.

Buckley Winfoot scored the final try of the afternoon. He skirted the ring end with dazzling speed and simply outraced the defense. John Ramey set the play up with a perfect lateral. Pete Herman, who was tremendous all afternoon, booted the conversion attempt just wide of the mark.

Late in the game URI made their only serious scoring threat, moving the ball within five yards of the UMass goal line. At this point the Redmen forwards, who played aggressively throughout the contest, stiffened the scrum, and the bid was thwarted.

The 'B' game was even more one-sided. Led by Ed Owens and Art Shelley, the second squad routed the Rams, 29-0. Both scored twice.

The ruggers will leave this week for Florida to participate in the Gator Tourney at Gainesville. Other teams entered are Valderbilt, Michigan State, Cornell, Notre Dame, LSU, Spring Hill College, and Florida. The Redmen's performance in Florida will undoubtedly be viewed as representing the caliber of rugby in New England. The Rhode Island game was a good tune-up for them, and the players are thankful to have at least one game under their belt. If they withstand the heat and improve their record in the conversion department, the tournament could be a great success on the field. It's already assured that status off the field, but that's what rugby's all about.

Maroons, Chi Omega Top IM Swim

By GEOFF KURINSKY

The Maroons, Chi Omega, and Civil Engineering, came off with the Men's, Women's, and Grad-Faculty Titles respectively in the IM Swim Meet held last week.

In the Men's division, the Maroons, totally outclassed the field in a super performance in which they amassed 65 points. On their way to victory the relay team set a meet record in their heat of the 200 yd. Medley Relay which they performed in 1:54.6. Runner-up for the campus championship and Fraternity Champ was Kappa Sigma, last year's campus champion. They finished quite a ways back with 44 pts. Third place was taken by the Independent Champions, the Heads, with the Munchkins and TEP finishing with 31 and 30 points respectively taking fourth and fifth. On the route to the title the Maroons were lead by vistories by Williard in the 100 yd. free style, Connors in the 50 yd. backstroke, and a team victory in the 200 yd. medley relay.

In Women's action, it was a two-way battle between Chi Omega and The Quitters with Chi Omega winning, going away 55 to 40. Finishing a distant third was Van Meter South with 19 pts. Chi Omega took the 200 yd. freestyle relay and had individual winners in Diving with Kacey Cearnal, in the 50 yd. free style again with Kacey Cearnal, and in the 50 yd. breast stroke with Barb Schroder. The only other team to score was Coolidge Upper who finished with 6 pts.

In Grad-Faculty action the Civil Engineers squeaked by the Nooners 70-59. Although the only winner for CE was Sward in the diving, they amassed their points while placing second place finishers in every event. The Nooners had easy victories in both relays, and medley and the free style.

"As They Remembered Julius"

(Editor's Note: This is the first in a two-part series on Julius Erving's testimonial dinner Sunday night at Berkshire Dining Commons. Part One-"As They Remembered Julius.")

By EARLE BARROLL

He was dressed as smartly as he always had. His dark dinner jacket and pants were accented brilliantly by a light-blue ruffled shirt. To his right was his college coach Jack Leamn...To Leaman's right was his professional coach, Al Bianchi.

Toastmaster Dr. Lawrence Johnson and a host of others were having a difficult time trying to locate the problem of a seemingly faulty P.A. system that delayed the program for a few minutes.

As they worked feverishly to find the source of the difficulty an oversized hand reached for the microphone, tapped it lightly and energy was restored...Dr. Julius Erving had spun the magic that the others could not.

It was appropos that his testimonial began on this note, as Julius Erving was being honored for the magic that he so spun in his three years at UMass.

For the gathering of 200 plus, this was the night to thank Julius Erving "who has done more for UMass athletics than we can ever repay him for," as Dr. Johnson said in his opening remarks.

This was a testimonial out of the ordinary for UMass athletics, but as acting athletic director David Bischoff explained, "Julius Erving is out of the ordinary."

Bischoff also remembered Julius as "a young man who accomplished more in his three years at UMass than most people accomplish in their lifetimes."

Peter Pascarelli, former sports editor and editor in chief of the Collegian remembered Julius as he was off the court:

"Julius showed great coordination when he dropped his bed on his foot and broke it before the Providence game last year...He showed quickness on the bus rides playing cards. It was really something to see those big hands move the cards. And you couldn't get mad at him if you lost because he wouldn't score 30 points for you in the game."

But in a serious vain, Pascarelli noted that the enthusiasm in UMass athletics that Erving spawned during his three years at UMass would never be reached again.

Lee Williams, executive director of the Basketball Hall of Fame in Springfield, officially retired Julius' number 32 into the collegiate Hall of Fame alongside the likes of Peter Maravich, Karrem Abdul Jabbar ,and Sidney Wicks.

"And then we'll ask Coach Al Bianchi for Julius' Virginia uniform after he's named rookie of the year in the A.B.A.," he said. "We're glad to share him with the rest of the nation. At least they're now seeing what we've seen and talked about for three years."

Dr. Randolph Bromery, Acting Chancellor, said that UMass was fortunate to have Julius here for three years as a student, a basketball player, and "just a hell of a guy."

In speaking directly to the big guy, Bromery said, "Please remain the way you are in the future--a hell of a swell guy."

Leaman, who has said about as much as can be said about Erving said, "the true tribute to Julius has taken place this year. We didn't have him, and the guys still fought as hard without him. But they still followed big Julie wherever he went with Virginia and cheered him on. This is what he meant to this team."

John Betancourt, who started with Julius for three seasons remembered him "as a friend, not as a player."

"During the summer, I went to see Julius play a Rucker League game with my brother. It was raining and they moved the game inside. The gym was small and when I tried to get in, a cop threw me out. I saw Charlie Scott going in and asked him to get Jules for me. Julie came out and my brother and I got seats at half court. The cop just stepped out of the way when we went by with Julie."

Mike Pagliara, who captained the Redmen this season, noted what a real pleasure it was playing with Julius. "Whatever he did, you felt a part of it. When he signed with the Squires, while everyone was walking around campus with their heads low, the basketball team was all smiles because we felt good for him that he had this opportunity. I'll always remember him."

Julius had meant a great deal of pride to Black students on campus. Representing the Black Community football, Captain Clarence Brooks presented Julius with an award "on behalf of the black students on campus."

Julius Winfield Erving is quite a guy. These are just a few of the many thousand who have come in contact with him. The reaction to all is the same.

And as Al Bianchi sat waiting for his star to speak, Dr. Johnson looked at Julius' pro coach and said, "We're not just doing this to honor him...we're doing this for Julius' renegotiation of his contract."

(Tomorrow: Julius' speech)

Frosh Hoopsters Compile Near Perfect Slate

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

The season ended on a sour note, a 115-100 loss to Brown, but the accomplishments are still numerous, as can be attested to by some of the spectators at Brown. Among the notables were Penn Coach Chuck Daley, a Providence scout, who had tried to get Bill Endicott to attend the Rhode Island powerhouse, and a sportswriter for the NY Times. Now that the season is over, there is a chance to reflect over the highlights of the season and to give credit where credit is due.

Frosh mentor Fan Gaudette, a head basketball coach at Clark U. in Worcester for four years prior, guided the yearlings to a near perfect 15-1 record. Along with his assistant, Bill Greeley, a former Redmen backcourt reserve, Coach Gaudette overcame transportation problems by each driving a car to the away games. Another member of the contingent, was freshman manager Steve Libby, who traveled with the team looking over minor details and sitting at the scorer's table.

If the frosh had to be described in one word, it would be "Balanced." All five starters finished the season averaging in double figures. 6'8 John Murphy led all scorers averaging 20.9 p/g, breaking a frosh record held formerly by Tim Edwards. He was closely followed by 6'2 Bill Endicott with 18.3 and Tom Gillams with 16.0. Rounding out the fivesome, were 5'11 Mike Flanagan at 13.9 and 6'3 Jim Burke at 12.1. Top rebounders were Murphy and Gillams with 13.4 and 12.3 caroms per game. To emphasize the balance, the three backcourt men Endicott, Flanagan and Burke paced each other in assists, with the first two handling 80 each and Burke, 79.

Besides the season's production, there were many fine individual performances throughout the season. The Clinton skyscraper, John Murphy, poured in 32 points and grabbed 16 rebounds against UConn at the Cage before fouling out with over seven minutes to go. He also led the cagers in their closest game which was against Boston College, rimming 25 and plunking the go ahead basket with just over a minute to go.

Bill Endicott, another in the continuing line of UMass athletes from Somerville, besides running the offense, came through to sink 27 and 24 against Rhode Island and 25 against the Brown pressing defense. It seemed that this sharpshooter thrived on the toughest, most physical competition to play his best games.

Mike Flanagan had his best game against UConn at UConn rimming 27. The Manchester, N.H., native during the season hit almost all his charity throws, 50-55, for a phenomenal foul shooting mark of 90.8%. Tom Gillams, of Uniondale, N.Y., thrilled the crowd at Dartmouth, N.H., grabbing 22 rebounds and pouring in 16 points. Tom also hit 26 against Earl Wilson at Storrs, while performing a play called reverse action to perfection.

Jim Burke of Needham has to be the most underrated player on the team, as he continually drew the top performers on the opposition to guard, and consistently turned in a fine showing while his teammates did most of the scoring. Two of the men, Larry Livramento, who was averaging 19 p/g and Kerry Walker, who was hitting 40 plus p/g, were held respectively to 10 and 16.

Others on the team included Bruce Guzowski (the crowd pleaser), Dave Dibble, Rick Boron, Peter Grimes and Joby McBridge. Guzowski and Dibble acted in a role similar to penalty killers in hockey whenever the big men ran into foul trouble. Boron came through on several occasions in relief of the ball handlers, with his best game against Boston University where he hit 11 points.

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Saul Alinsky stressed the importance of organizing the middle class society in America last night before 550 people in the Student Union Ballroom.

Alinsky's past efforts in organizing the poor in America to fight for their rights as citizens has won him international recognition.

"We have to turn to the middle class. This is where the power lies," said the gray-haired Alinsky. "The United States is probably the first nation in the history of the Western Hemisphere in which the vast majority of the people are middle-class."

The 63-year-old Alinsky remained serious throughout his speech, but brought much laughter from the crowd with his frequent barbs against the establishment.

"I am not a guest. I am here because my organization is getting paid for me being here," said Alinsky.

In 1968 he set up the Industrial Areas Training Institute, a school for training organizers for work in white middle-class communities.

Alinsky said the American middle-class can not be identified in terms of income, but must be seen in terms of its identification. He said the middle-class in the United States makes up 75 to 82 per cent of the total population.

The middle class is now starting to move, said Alinsky. "If they don't move toward us, they will move towards George Wallace," he said.

Continually stressing the need for organization and power, Alinsky said before anything can happen, it is necessary to have a power base to move on.

"Everytime you want to do something you have to organize," continued Alinsky. "Until you organize all you'll have is rhetoric."

Alinsky, who has made a 30-year career of organizing workers, small businessmen, blacks, and labor leaders, said, "Any movement without organization ends up being a bowel movement," said Alinsky, bringing the crowd to life.

"Impossible to have change without power," he said. The only way to get the establishment to move in a desired direction is to put the power on them, he said.

"The only way you can communicate with the establishment is not through their ears, but through their rears," he said.

While emphasizing the need for the youth vote, Alinsky also explained why it is important to work through the system. This planet is made up of a lot of systems, he stated. He called it a good jumping off point.

He explained also, that the system usually ends up doing the organizer's work for him. He gave as one example how no one really knew of him in a Texas town until the Ku Klux Klan and the city council tried to get rid of him. Then, and only then, was he asked to organize a movement.

Alinsky said the role of an organizer is to go into a sector and to gain power. Only by gaining this power is an organizer able to bring about change, he said.

He pointed out students in college, who are activists, are at a tremendous advantage since they are coming out of a middle-class society.

On a question from the floor, Alinsky said the most important thing for a student activist is to learn how to organize. He said the college provides for the student an excellent laboratory to be used once he gets outside of the campus.

Saul Alinsky reminds students that they should not neglect to register and vote. (MDC photo by Pete Manera)

U.S.-Bangladesh Relations Under Formal Review

AMHERST—Herbert D. Spivack, U.S. Consul General to Bangladesh, said in an interview Saturday that the possibility of formal American diplomatic recognition of Bangladesh was under active review.

Spivack, however, would not specualte as to when a decision on recognition could be expected. Moreover, he said the factors to be considered in making this decision had not been spelled out.

The Consul General arrived here late Friday night for a weekend with his brother Bernard, his wife, and family. Both Bernard Spivack and his wife teach at the university.

The diplomat said he was going to Washington today to participate in an overall review of American policy in South Asia.

In reference to the possibility of U.S. recognition of Bangladesh, Spivack said that all the great powers except the U.S. and China had already established formal diplomatic ties.

Also not recognizing Bangladesh, according to Spivack, are the Arab countries, which are sympathetic to Pakistan, and many Latin American countries, which have just not yet announced recognition.

Spivack said that while Sheik Mujibur Rahman, prime minister of the new Bengal nation, and the Bengali people resent and distrust the Nixon administration, for its role in the Pakistan-Indian conflict, no hostility is held for the American people.

The Bengalis, he noted, merely hope that America would see the error of its ways and face reality. He said the general attitude of the Bengalis was a willingness to forgive and forget.

Spivack said the comments of Presidential adviser Henry Kissinger, which claimed that the U.S.' claims of neutrality in the war three months ago were a sham, were printed in the Bengali press but created little stir. He explained that Kissinger's remarks just confirmed what the Indians and Bengalis had suspected all along.

Asked how Bangladesh was recovering from the devastating war which gave it its independence, Spivack replied that it was not the "international basket case" as many have portrayed it.

Rather, he said, Bangladesh is a country with considerable economic potential which is now suffering from temporary paralysis.

He did say, however, that the surge of emotion and enthusiasm which accompanied independence was waning, and that it was imperative that the Bengali government come to grips with the country's many problems.

While the Bengalis adore Mujib, Spivack pointed out that he faced a perplexing problem: how to turn his charm and charisma into a formula which will get the fledgling country on its feet.

The General Consul expressed astonishment at how easily the millions of Bengalis, who had fled the terrorism of West Pakistan soldiers in the months preceding the war, had been reassimilated in Bangladesh.

Spivack said that 85 to 90 per cent of these refugees had returned, many of them bypassing government facilities and going directly to their own homes.

However, Spivack was pessimistic about the fate of the Biharis, the minority Moslem group which in many cases had collaborated with the hated West Pakistanis.

He noted that the mass slaughter of Biharis by Bengalis seeking revenge though expected by many, did not materialize. He conceded it was still a problem.

Asked about the incident at Khulna last week, during which several hundred Baharis were allegedly wounded or killed by militant Bengalis Spivack cautioned against taking casualty estimates too literally, arguing that they were always exaggerated.

He predicted the present generation of Biharis would just dissolve: some would go to India, some would, as a depressed minority descend on the economic and social scale and the younger people would perhaps assimilate into the community.

He said the possibility of a mass migration of Biharis had to be completely discounted because no other country wanted them.

The diplomat, who passed the surrender notes between Pakistan and India during the war, said that he felt no sense of imminent danger in Dacca during the fighting because the center of the city was bombed only once during the conflict.

And while news reporters and other observers had concluded from the very outset that an Indian victory was inevitable, Spivack said that the Paks were determined to fight to the last.

In regard to future Pakistan-Bangladesh relations, the Consul General said that because of the two's proximity some sort of dialogue would be required in the near future. (This process may have been hastened with yesterday's announcement by the Bangladesh and Indian governments that repatriation of Pakistani prisoners of war would not be negotiated until Pakistan recognizes Bangladesh.)

He said that at present the subcontinent is going through a readjustment of balance of power and spheres of influence. The Soviet Union, according to Spivack, after its negotiation of the 1965 India-Pakistan war and its aid to India during the recent outbreak of hostilities, is a major force to be reckoned with on the subcontinent.

Spivack, who served in a diplomatic capacity in India, Burma, and Cambodia before going to East Pakistan (now Bangladesh) last August, said that one of the by-products of American recognition of the new country would be a step-up in aid.

No Settlement On SUG Board Decision

By DON BISHOP

No settlement over the present difficulties between SUG Board and the Administration concerning the controversial Article 7 of the SUG Board By-Laws was arrived at yesterday. An Administration response to the latest proposal for Article 7 was expected by SUG Board today, but none was forthcoming.

The apparent difficulties from the Administration standpoint surround the wording of a sentence in the first paragraph of Article 7, the Article related to "Personnel Procedures in the Campus Center, and more specifically the hiring and firing power over the management staff of the Campus Center by the SUG Board.

This particular sentence reads: "The Chairman will at that time appoint a broadly representative search committee of not less than three (3) Board members to nominate to the Board the candidates to fill the position." The words "broadly representative" are seen by Acting Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage as needing more specification so that "broadly representative search committee" will be sure to include all elements of the community in the selection process.

A definite decision on the present proposal for Article 7 might not come from Acting Chancellor Bromery or his designate until after vacation, at which time the process of revision of this by-law will have to start again.

Hampshire Gets NSF Grant

AMHERST — A $28,373 grant has been awarded by the National Science Foundation to Hampshire College to aid in its summer studies program for talented secondary school students in natural science and mathematics. It is expected that the Hampshire program will serve 108 students, with 60 obtaining full tuition support from the NSF grant, and some scholarship assistance available.

Over 4,000 high ability secondary school students will be participating in similar NSF programs across the United States. Hampshire's and similar programs seek to identify and encourage talented studentsto become future leaders in meeting the nation's needs in science and technology a decade from now. This will be the second year in which the Hampshire summer studies program has been funded by NSF, the only one of its kind in Massachusetts this year.

Students will participate in workshops, each under the guidance of a mathematician or scientist and an undergraduate assistant. Topics from outside the usual secondary and college curricula will be intensively investigated, but emphasis will be on methods of discovery rather than accumulation of results.

A science course will be offered in immunology, taught by Professor David Parker, and Professor Lynn Miller's course in microbial ecology will develop experimental approaches to understanding the interaction of organisms and their environment. "Synthesis of sound," taught by Everett Hafner, will use electronic synthesizers and computers as basic tools in a laboratory course on the theory of sound. ProfessorsParker, Miller, and Hafner are on the faculty at Hampshire College.

Mathematics courses taught by Hampshire faculty members Kenneth Hoffman and David Kelly, with visiting instructors, will emphasize methods of mathematics, and students will be introduced to the art of creating and using mathematical models.

A course in the mathematics of computers taught by Hampshire professor John J. LeTourneau will develop a mathematical approach to the theory of machine interactions, systems construction, and the nature of computation itself.

The program will be directed by David C. Kelly, assistant professor in the School of Natural Science and Mathematics at Hampshire, and will take place on campus from July 2 through August 12.

A graduate of Princeton University in 1961, Kelly holds an S.M. from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and an A.M. from Dartmouth College, where he is currently completing work on his PH.D. Before coming to Hampshire College in 1971 he was on the faculty of new College in Sarasota, Florida. He has worked with summer programs for high school students for 12 years.

Kelly is a member of Sigma Xi and Phi Beta Kappa, and has been a Woodrow Wilson Fellow and a National Science Foundation Fellow. He belongs to the Mathematical Association of America, the American Mathematical Society, and the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics.

Dita Beard ITT Memo Turned Over To FBI

WASHINGTON (AP) — Columnist Jack Anderson said Monday a memo which figures prominently in his allegations against the Justice Department has been turned over to an aide of acting Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst and now is in the hands of the FBI.

The memo which Anderson says was written by Dita Beard, a lobbyist for International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., is cited by Anderson to support his accusation that ITT gained favorable settlement of an antitrust action after it had pledged heavy financial support for the Republican National Convention in San Diego next August.

Mrs. Beard has denied writing the memo.

ITT announced late Monday that it had turned over to the committee new evidence to support its claim that the memo is a fraud.

The ITT claim is supported by affidavits from Susan Lichtman, Mrs. Beard's former secretary, from W. R. Merriam, Mrs. Beard's boss in the Washington ITT office, and from Russell J. Tagliareni, an ITT security administrator.

Mrs. Lichtman, who no longer is with ITT, reported she typed a memo for Mrs. Beard last summer which contained some of the material in the memo printed by Anderson but without the portions linking the ITT-convention pledge and the antitrust settlement.

Merriam denied again that he ever had received the memo printed by Anderson, and Tagliareni said he obtained Mrs. Lichtman's statement without giving or promising her any sort of reward.

Anderson protested the committee action, picking up 4th graf and inserting "committee."

Anderson protested the action which he said was taken by the Judiciary Committee without his knowledge and consent. And, he added, in a letter to the committee chairman, Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., "as far as I know without the knowledge or consent of the other members of your committee."

Anderson called the action unheard of in a congressional investigation, and said he fears that while at the Justice Department the memo could be "damaged, defaced, lost or tampered with..."

He said the document was hand-delivered last Friday by a member of the committee staff to John Duffner of the Department of Justice and added: "Mr. Duffner, of course, is the executive assistant to Richard Kleindienst, the very man whose nomination to be attorney general is the subject of the present inquiry by your committee."

He asked the document be immediately retrieved and impounded by the committee.

Eastland had no immediate comment on the letter.

Mrs. Beard, from her hospital bed in Denver, described the memorandum as a fraud and a "hoax" in an affidavit released 18 days after the memo was first made public in Anderson's daily column.

Fake Railroad Ties Coming

FAIRFIELD, Conn. (AP) — A new synthetic railroad tie to replace old wooden ties that split, burned or rotted has been developed by a Fairfield businessman.

Benjamin P. Collins, president of Collins Synthetics, Inc., and son of a retired railroad engineer, said the synthetic tie is made of processed wood and special sealants.

Impact tests, he said, showed the synthetic tie withstood the simulated wear of 2-1/2 million 100-ton railroad cars passing over it and survived the ordeal with less than a quarter-inch of wear.

Collins was quoted as saying the synthetic tie was being produced by a Wisconsin manufacturer, but a spokesman for Collins said Monday night that this statement was premature.

Lecture Note Program 'First Step'

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

The Student Senate Service Committee, chaired by Elliiot Sherman, met last night to discuss the Student Senate Lecture Note Program, "our first step in setting up co-ops."

Tentatively agreed upon at the meeting was the following:

"This act of the Student Government Association shall govern the operation of the Student Senate Lecture Note Program...to provide notes to the students of the University of Massachusetts...to any member of the University who has subscribed to its service by payment of a fee to be collected by the manager of the service anytime during the academic semester.

The responsibility of the operation will rest with the Board of Directors...which will...be responsible for hiring and firing a manager and all supervisors of the operation."

The Board's composition being considered is to include: The treasurer of the Student Senate, the chairman of Services Committee, the Chairman of Academic Affairs, three at-large members, non-senators, preferably, appointed by the chairman, and one faculty member.

The manager will be an ex-officio non-voting member. The length of these terms have yet to be decided.

Also discussed by the Food Services Committee was the possibility of "optional meal programs." Because of the mortgage fee, exemptions for those who do not presently qualify would cost about $62.

The Committee is open to alternative suggestions from the student body.

Alinsky Holds Broad Discussion

By PAM HYJEK

In his coffee hour last night, Saul Alinsky discussed topics ranging from education to Socialism, with a warm, capacity audience in the Colonial Lounge.

One point Alinsky made was on the possibilities of establishing a power base for teachers on implement change by visiting their pupils' parents "even when the kid isn't in trouble." After they recover from their "incipient coronary," they may support you when you have to deal with public authority such as school committees, about matters like curriculum, and pay raises.

"There's no such thing as a successful traitor," said Alinsky, "for we would be venerating such people as Benedict Arnold if we had lost the Revolutionary War."

Alinsky declared that he was opposed to dropping the bomb in Japan; he would have dropped it in Berlin. He then went on to say that we certainly don't have fascism here.

We do have a powerful youth cult, though, for "a man with a healthy sex drive suddenly becomes a dirty old man when he reaches sixty." Alinsky conjectures that if the senior citizens were united with the young, they could together constitute an organized one third of the population. He said a sampling of senior citizen sentiment on the Vietnam war six or seven years ago surpassed the anti-war fervor of even the college-aged youth, and praised Medicare.

To one query, "Do you consider yourself a socialist?" he replied: "I don't know...the state keeps screaming 'radical' and the name stuck."

"Who are your enemies?" was another curious comment; the answer: "All those that define themselves as my enemies-the pentagon, all the right wing groups, the Klan, not the John Birchers..."

Toward the end of the evening, a young man engaged Alinsky in a vigorous discussion of unions and power and the economic implications therein.

"As much as you disagree with me, you don't dislike me, do you?" "No." was the reasonable response.

"Then if you don't dislike me, I'm sure you wouldn't want me to have to spend the night in Amherst, and miss my flight to Boston."

Muskie Trying For Illinois Vote

CHICAGO (AP) — Sen. Edmund S. Muskie campaigned Monday for an Illinois comeback from a political slump, seeking to refuel his Democratic presidential quest in twin primary election contests with Sen. Geroge S. McGovern and Eugene J. McCarthy.

Well over one million Democrats were expected to cast ballots Tuesday, choosing between Muskie and McCarthy in a presidential preference primary, and among Muskie, McGovern and uncommitted slates in separate balloting for national convention delegates.

The primary selects 160 of the 170 Illinois nominating votes at the Democratic National Convention. At least 80, and probably more, of the Illinois delegates are expected to be uncommitted which, translated, means pledged to no presidential candidate but loyal to Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago and his Cook County organization.

The polls will open from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. Central Standard Time, in 10,858 Illinois precincts.

All told, two million ballots are anticipated, a majority of them in the Democratic primary since there are no significant contexts on the Republican ballot.

It may take some time to determine what happens.

The preferential primary vote, in which the stakes are purely psychological, are on the same ballot as the state nomination contests and on the same voting machines in Chicago and other cities.

The complex delegate selection contests are on separate paper ballots everywhere, raising the prospect that some voters may skip that phase of the primary, or inadvertently spoil ballots by voting for too many candidates.

Muskie, who had been the Democratic front-runner, of the vote and none of the delegates, in the Florida presidential primary last Tuesday. He came to the Illinois race in need of a campaign boost.

The Maine senator, flanked by his newly assigned detail of Secret Service agents, plowed through mid-day crowds on a handshaking tour of Chicago's State Street, but did most of his vote-hunting outside the city, where the delegate contests are.

Muskie and McGovern both kept hands off the heart of Daley's domain, five Chicago congressional districts where 56 uncommitted delegates will be elected.

Soviets Worried About U.S.-China 'Deals'

MOSCOW (AP) — Leonid I. Brezhnev displayed concern Monday over any possible secret deals between the United States and China. But at the same time he took an outwardly casual, wait-and-see attitude toward President Nixon's recent visit to Peking.

The Soviet Communist party leader's remark in a foreign policy speech before a Soviet trade union congress provided the most authoritative Soviet reaction so far to Nixon's China trip.

Brezhnev said that when the President visits Moscow in May, Soviet leaders will talk with him from "businesslike, realistic positions" and with the belief improvement of Soviet-U.S. relations is possible.

But in apparent reference to Soviet support of North Vietnam and the Viet Cong, he declared the improvement would not be "at the expense of some third countries or peoples, not to the detriment of their lawful rights and interests."

Brezhnev's comment on Nixon's China trip last month were the first by a top Kremlin official and filled an authoritative void in Soviet reaction to the summit.

He declared the dialogue in Peking went beyond the framework of American-Chinese relations.

"How else can one assess the statement made at a banquet in Shanghai that 'today out two peoples hold the future of the whole world in their hands?'" Brezhnev asked. The statement he cited was made by Nixon in a toast to Premier Chou En-lai.

Nixon said after his trip to China that he had not entered any secret deals with the Peking leadership.

Noting that little was made public about the content of the talks or the substance of any agreements, Brezhnev said "the subsequent deeds of the United States and Peoples Republic of China will say the decisive word about the significance" of the summit.

"We are in no hurry, therefore, with final assessments" he concluded.

Concerning the Soviet Union's own relations with China, Brezhnev said Chinese representatives have suggested relations on the basis of peaceful coexistence.

"If the people in Peking are not prepared for more than that in relations with a Socialist state, we are ready to develop Soviet-Chinese relations on the basis too," he went on.

He said the Soviet Union had made proposals "on nonaggression, on the settlement of border issues and on improving relations on a mutually advantageous basis."

Knowledgeable diplomats here were not aware that such proposals had been previously disclosed in reports or discussions on the talks being held in Peking by representatives of China and the Soviet Union.

It was possibly more than coincidental that Brezhnev's remarks were made on the day the chief Soviet negotiator returned to Peking to resume the talks after a recess of undisclosed duration.

Turning to Soviet relations with other countries, Brezhnev said West Germany faces "a choice between a policy of peace and a policy of war" in its debate over ratification of the Moscow-Bonn treaty. He defended the nonaggression treaty as realistic and said its signing in August 1970 had already improved relations between the two nations and that ratification would bring even greater gains.

The Kremlin leader maintained the Middle East stalemate "cannot go on indefinitely." He accused Israel of blocking a political settlement, with American support, and warned that the growing strength of Arab countries will eventually determine the outcome.

Soviet-Japanese relations have taken a turn for the better recently, he said, and Moscow is ready to cooperate extensively with Japan to "serve the cause of peace."

Fulbright Knocks USIA Tactics

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. J.W. Fulbright said Monday a U.S. Information Agency memo regarding the Berlin Wall is evidence the USIA "is an agency of the Cold War" and as such is hampering efforts toward easing international tensions.

A memo from USIA Director Frank Shakespeare to his staff media directors last June said the agency would "undertake a major effort to publicize the 10th anniversary of the erection of the Berlin Wall" Aug. 12-13, 1961.

The memo said the compaign's surface theme should be the history and significance of the wall built by the East Germans after they were unable to stop all those who sought to escape to West Berlin.

"The point of real impact should be that Communist societies inevitably turn into prisons where men daily risk their lives in an effort to flee to freedom," the memo signed by Shakespeare said.

Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committe, released the memorandum at a committee hearing. The Arkansas Democrat said such broadcasts put out by USIA's Voice of America jeopardize such peace initiatives as the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks and perpetuate outdated beliefs in monolithic communism.

Appearing before the committee, Shakespeare defended the policy, saying VOA broadcasts are generally objectives.

He refused to turn over field reports the agency uses to decide what it will tell other countries about America.

Fulbright and most other committee members sought what he called the "country program memoranda."

Fulbright said he wanted evaluations of mood in other countries and how they feel about the United States and not just access to USIA's broadcasts and publications.

To provide such documents, especially polls taken overseas, Shakespeare said, would risk turning them into "political bombshells" in the United States, especially in an election year.

Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J., said he thinks it would be healthier if everything USIA did, including its polls, were made public.

U.S., China Envoys Hold Second Meeting

PARIS (AP) — Envoys of the United States and China held their second meeting Monday on establishing closer relations.

U.S. Ambassador Arthur K. Watson sent word through a spokesman that he and Ambassador Huang Chen had a "fine talk." He gave no further details. Huang had nothing to say for newsmen.

Like the first meeting a week ago at the Chinese Embassy, this session, at the U.S Embassy, lasted a little less than an hour.

Watson had said the first meeting was a "get acquainted" session with Huang.

Watson saw Huang through the door of the U.S. Embassy, just off the Place de la Concorde, but ducked back inside before newsmen could approach him.

Huang, dressed in a black Mao suit and cap, raised both hands in a seeming gesture of futility to newsmen who sought to question him. With two aides, he drove off in his black limousine.

In announcing the ambassadorial talks March 10, the White House said Watson and Huang would be the channel for diplomatic discussions on travel exchange and trade procedures mentioned in the Feb. 27 Shanghai communique which followed President Nixon's meetings with Premier Chou En-lai in China. Discussions of those two subjects, the White House said, would be among the "primary purposes" of the Paris channel.

The shortness of the second session raised doubts that any substantive decisions were reached. There was no indication from either side whether a regular session on Mondays had now been set up.

House Changes Time Law

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Monday voted to give a dozen states straddling time-zone boundaries new power to exempt parts of themselves from observing Daylight Saving Time.

By 332 to 7, the House decided to amend the 1966 Uniform Time Act after advocates of the so-called Indiana plan argued that the existing all-or-nothing requirement for total state exemption creates confusion and economic hardship in states split by time lines.

Last May, the Senate passed a similar amendment.

The House, before passing the measure, made a three-word deletion to correct what the amendment's supporters termed a technical error in the language. Thus, the amendment was sent back to the Senate for its expected agreement to the correction. Then the amendment would go to President Nixon.

Under the amendment, any state divided by a time-zone boundary could exempt all of the state lying within one time zone from observing DST.

Agnew Undecided

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Monday he has not made up his mind about seeking a second term as vice president. And he said that even if he does run, it doesn't necessarily mean he will shoot for the presidency in 1976.

Soviet Jews Protest Closing of Radio

TEL AVIV (AP) - Twelve Soviet Jews protested to U.S. Ambassador Walworth Barbour today against proposals to close Radio Liberty in Europe.

The immigrants to Israel told Barbour in a letter before a meeting in the embassy that shutting the station would mean "many people in Russia will lose their source of free and objective information from the West."

Air Force Starts Early Discharge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Moving to bolster its reserve forces, the Air Force announced Monday an early discharge program for pilots, navigators and airmen who agree to join an Air National Guard or reserve unit.

Under the program, called Operation Chase, men who have served one year of active duty can apply for release if they volunteer to put two years in the reserves for every year of their remaining active duty commitment. Thus, a man who is signed up for a four-year Air Force tour and has three years remaining must agree to serve six years in the reserves.

The program is similar to one offered by the Army to get men into its guard and reserve forces.

Canadian Pipeline Suggested

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Interior Department study issued Monday said an oil pipeline through Canada would pose less of an environmental threat from major oil spills than a proposed route through Alaska.

In terms of unavoidable damage, however, it might be more of a tossup, the two-year study concluded. It said an overland pipeline would prevent damage in the sea but the pipeline and tanker route through Alaska might protect the land more.

Even the unavoidable damage would be decreased, the report said, if an oil pipeline shared the right of way of a natural gas pipeline likely to be built anyway, it said. The report noted that petroleum companies including some participants in the Alaska oil line are considering a gas line through Canada.

The report said, however, that none of the alternatives appeared superior to the others in all respects.

Bomb Kills 6, Injures 146 In Belfast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A 100-pound bomb planted in a delivery truck blew six persons to pieces Monday and sent a huge ball of flame rolling down a central Belfast street crowded with shoppers. Another 146 persons were injured-some badly maimed.

Police said many of the victims were lured to the scene by terrorists before the bomb went off outside a Protestant newspaper office.

The police account said the terrorists warned that a bomb would explode on Church Street and this sent people running to nearby Donegall Street where the explosive device actually had been planted.

"This was a deliberate attempt to kill innocent people," a police spokesman said. "The people who planted it must have known that people were being evacuated into its path." The explosion was enormous.

"I saw a huge ball of red fire rushing up the street followed by a pall of smoke," a witness said. "There was a huge blast, and people were thrown all over the place."

It was the second major terrorist explosion in central Belfast this month and the worst carnage of the year in Northern Ireland's continuing violence.

Police did not speculate on who the bombers might be.

They had blamed the Irish Republican Army for the bombing March 4 of a downtown restaurant that killed two women and wounded 136 other persons.

The IRA, fighting the British and the Protestant-dominated Northern Irish government, denied it had any part in the restaurant bombing.

Victims of the Donegall Street explosion, many of them women, were strewn about in blood and rubble. A policeman wept as surgeons on the sidewalk performed emergency amputations.

Two of the dead were garbage collectors and one was a motorist. Another two were policemen-one Roman Catholic; the other Protestant.

Bombs went off in two other parts of Belfast after the big blast and in Londonderry a sniper killed a British soldier with a shot through the abdomen.

The Donegall Street blast flattened the truck it was planted in and wrecked shop fronts.

The two policemen killed were both off duty radio operators who had volunteered to help patrol the city center as part of tightened security.

In Dublin, three IRA leaders escaped assassination attempts from bombs mailed to them.

Sean MacStiofain, chief of staff of the IRA's nationalist Provisional wing, suffered slight burns to his hands and face when a parcel exploded as he opened it.

Cathal Goulding, chief of staff of the rival IRA Official wing, dismantled a bomb sent to him and detonated it safely.

Tony Ruane, treasurer of the Sinn Fein, political arm of IRA Provisionals, burned his left hand when a package bomb went off.

Nixon Calls Drugs No.1 Problem

NEW YORK (AP) — President Nixon, asserting that the drug traffic strikes at the very heart of American society, called Monday for "strong, tough prosecution" to combat it.

"I consider this to be the No. 1 domestic problem that concerns the American people," he told newsmen.

Dramatizing the campaign, for which he has asked 1973 funds of $600 million, the President conferred here with Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, undercover agents and top officials in the Office of Drug Abuse Law Enforcement which he created in January.

After the meeetings, which lasted 1-1/2 hours, he went by helicopter to Kennedy Airport where he inspected U.S. Customs procedures for hunting out illegal drugs.

The President then flew back to Washington for a meeting with his Cabinet Committee on International Narcotics Control which was set up last September to help curb the international drug traffic.

As part of the same wide-ranging program, Nixon has a meeting scheduled Tuesday with Premier Nihat Erim of Turkey which is expected to take up the problem of opium poppy growing in that Mideast country.

Erim's government has banned culture of the flower-raw material for heroin-but he said last week continuation of the ban would depend on finding alternate crops and new industrial development. The United States has already promised $35 million.

At the New York meetings, Nixon noted that Turks produced opium, but do not use it The government there, he said, "is very, very tough on it."

About 35 officers at the first meeting of the New York section of the Drug Abuse Enforcement office heard the President say that the traffic was "the most reprehensible of all crimes...it strikes at the very heart of the society in which we live-it strikes at the fabric of American life."

New York, described by Myles Ambrose, national head of the new office, as the area with "probably the largest concentration of heroin addicts in the nation," is the first of nine regional centers set up in the antidrug fight.

Other regional offices will be established in Atlanta, Cleveland, Chicago, Denver, Houston, Kansas City, Los Angeles and Philadelphia.

The meeting with Rockefeller, and city and state officials discussed 12 special narcotics courts set up under a $7.5-million grant from the federal government supplemented by $2.5 million from the state.

Labor Member Ready To Quit Pay Board

WASHINGTON (AP) — Floyd Smith, one of five labor members of President Nixon's Pay Board, said Monday he is ready to quite the board and will so inform other union chiefs at a labor summit conference Wesnesday.

"Unless something comes up to change my mind, I am prepared to state that I'm ready to leave the Pay Board," Smith said in an interview.

Smith, president of the million-member AFL-CIO International Association of Machinists, said he could speak only for himself, but that he believes AFL-CIO President George Meany and United Steelworkers President I.W. Abel share his views.

Meany, the nation's 77-year-old "Mr. Labor", has called the Wednesday meeting of the 35-man AFL-CIO Executive Council, plus Auto Workers President Leonard Woodcock and Teamsters President Frank E. Fitzsimmons.

The top-level labor meeting, called in the wake of the Pay Board's partial rejection of a West Coast longshore contract, reportedly is to determine whether the five union members will continue sitting on the 15-member labor-industry-public Pay Board.

"I don't believe we're doing much good sitting there and I don't think it would effect us very much if we left," Smith said.

"I would expect to find Abel taking the same position-that it's doing no good to stay on the Pay Board," he added.

"I think this may also be George Meany's position," Smith said.

Meany, Smith and Abel are the three AFL-CIO labor members on the Pay Board. Woodcock and Fitzsimmons, whose big unions are not affiliated with the AFL-CIO, are the other labor members.

A high source in the Auto Workers Union indicated Woodcock is not ready to quit the Pay Board.

Conceding labor had been hurt by Pay Board rejections of parts of both the longshore and aerospace contracts, the Auto Workers source said. "If we quit the board, we might get it in the eye worse."

The Auto Workers and Machinists have filed federal court suits against the Pay Board's orders to peel down their negotiated wage increases.

The Auto Workers source said the union had been able to protect some contracts by serving on Nixon's Pay Board.

But Smith, who previously had worked closely with the Auto Workers to try to get approval of the aerospace contracts, disagreed.

S. Viets Maul 'Steel' Regiment

FIRE BASE BASTOGNE, Vietnam (AP) — North Vietnamese survivors of an elite Regiment of Steel were reported fleeing southward Monday after being mauled by South Vietnamese infantrymen in two weeks of heavy fighting between Hue and the A Shau Valley.

Maj. Gen. Nguyen Van Phu told newsmen his 1st Division troops had killed more than 500 of the 2,000 men believed to be in the enemy force and prevented the North Vietnamese from moving into a jungle base camp only 15 miles west of the old imperial capital in South Vietnam's northern sector.

One of his regimental commanders, Lt. Col. Nguyen Bui Quang, said government soldiers were pursuing the retreating North Vietnamese and had killed 30 more in scattered clashes southwest of Fire Base Bastogne since Sunday.

Quang took newsmen on a helicopter tour of the bomb-scarred battleground, but he refused to land because of the danger of incoming artillery fire.

"There was trench-to-trench fighting for every meter of ground," Quang said. "Many of the dead North Vietnamese were only 15 to 16 years old, indicating they have had replacement problems."

The enemy were identified as members of the 6th Regiment, an elite independent unit nicknamed the Regiment of Steel because of the tough battles it fought in western Thua Thien Province last year, and of support battalions that included antiaircraft batteries and a medical detachment.

Briefing newsmen at Camp Eagle, a former U.S. installation near Hue, Phu described how he sent a 3,000-man government blocking force against the 6th Regiment in an operation code-named Lam Son 45.

"The enemy were trying to rebuild Base Area 14," he said. "They were trying to occupy the mountainous area, rebuild their logistics bases and use it as a springboard for attacks against the lowlands. They do this every year, and every year we stop them."

Phu said 68 enemy were killed in the first major battle, about 20 miles west of Hue, on March 13. Another 72 enemy were killed last Thursday, and 235 enemy were reported killed on Saturday and Sunday when they attacked government forces six miles southwest of Bastogne.

South Vietnamese casualties in the three major battles were given as 42 killed and 186 wounded. Phu said allied air strikes accounted for a third of the enemy dead "but we think they killed more. We just haven't found the bodies yet."

Youth Vote Has No Impact In Recent Primaries

LOS ANGELES, March 19-In the New Hampshire and Florida primaries, young people tended to vote for candidates who were more liberal than those the electorate as a whole tended to support. But the young did not vote differently enough, or often enough, to have a drastic effect on the results.

These are the conclusions drawn from several surveys, an analysis of the vote totals and interviews with more than 100 young people in the first two primary states.

The behavior of the youth vote in these elections is particularly interesting and important. One of the major imponderables in this election year is the potential impact of the 25 million young people between 18 and 24 who will be voting in their first Presidential election.

Students Most Liberal

Definitive statistical evidence is difficult to obtain, but the most liberal segment of the new youth vote is clearly the 25 per cent in college. And among this group, Senator George McGovern, Democrat of South Dakota, is the favorite. As an aide to Democratic Senator Edmund S. Muskie of Maine put it:

"The socially vogue thing to do this year on campus is to be for McGovern. It's like wearing your hair long--you sort of fit in."

For example, in New Hampshire, the college towns of Hanover and Durham both voted more than 70 per cent for Senator McGovern, while he won only 37 per cent of the vote statewide.

In Alachua County, home of the University of Florida, the South Dakotan pulled 23 per cent of the vote, while running second behind Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama. Senator McGovern also ran second in Leon County, seat of Florida State University, and won a pre-election poll of several thousand Florida college students. But statewide he finished sixth, with only 6 per cent of the vote.

Mr. McGovern did not run nearly so well among working youths. An Election Day survey done for The New York Times by Daniel Yankelovich, Inc., indicated that the Senator received less than 20 per cent of the overall youth vote in Florida. He still ran second among this group to Governor Wallace, who attracted about one-third of the new voters.

Student Dominance Doubtful

The Florida results also indicate that students will have a difficult time controlling elections, except, perhaps, on a very local level. Senator McGovern might have run second in Alachua and Leon Counties, but he finished only fourth in the race for the convention, delegates from the Second Congressional District, which includes both counties.

Mayor Lindsay who ran well among students in Arizona, did not catch on with youths in Florida. He finished fifth in Alachua, for instance, sixth in Leon, and fourth in the pre-election college poll.

Representative Shirley Chisholm of Brooklyn showed some strength among youths, finishing third in Leon County and second in the college poll.

The Yankelovich survey reported that only Senator McGovern, Mayor Lindsay and Representative Chisholm ran better among youths than among the electorate as a whole. Senator Muskie ran about the same, while Senators Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota and Henry M. Jackson of Washington, and Governor Wallace, ran behind.

The impact of the youth vote is limited by the problem of registration. In New Hampshire, where the McGovern campaign invested a lot of resources on college campuses, some experts estimated the student registration at more than 80 per cent.

But in Florida, a much bigger state that attracted fewer student volunteers, registration at the University of Florida was only about 56 per cent. The Secretary of State estimated that only 40 per cent of the youths enrolled statewide.

Even on college campuses, many young people complained that they did not know how or where to register. Some just did not care about politics, or did not think their vote would make any difference.

The problem is aggravated by the mobility of youth. Time and again, young people said that they had moved too recently to establish residency, or had registered at home and forgotten to request an absentee ballot. Some registrars simply refused to enroll students in college towns.

Court Rules On Registering

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court ruled today that college students seeking the right to register as voters in their college campus towns must fight their legal battles as individuals and not as groups.

The ruling is crucial to the question of how any college-age youths, enfranchised last summer by the 26th Amendment, will be able to vote in this year's elections.

Forcing the students to fight each appeal individually instead of through class-action suits is expected to draw out the legal skirmishing indefinitely and preclude many students from the ballot this year.

A key question with students is whether they must register at the home of their parents or if they may consider their college residence their legal residence for purpose of voting.

In several court cases across the country, students have been fighting for the right to register and vote where they live while in school.

The Supreme Court, by an 8 to 1 vote, affirmed a ruling by a three-judge federal court in Richmond, Va. holding that five Virginia students may not make their suit a class action affecting all student voters in Virginia.

Feminists Stress Lost Cases

WASHINGTON, March 19-Some recent court decision that feminists regard as defeats for women are expected to provide much of the argument in favor of the equal rights amendment when the Senate starts serious debate tomorrow on the issue.

Also in the forefront of the debate will be some new studies showing that some laws that were supposed to protect women do not do so, partly because they are not enforced.

The recent cases have involved some victories for the women's equality movement, too, furnishing material for those who argue that an amendment is not needed. But advocates of the equal rights amendment say that the victories and losses taken together show that progress toward equal treatment of the sexes is so slow and inconsistent that a constitutional amendment is the only way to achieve equality.

The amendment would invalidate all laws-Federal, state or local-that require or sanction discrimination based on sex.

Discouragement in Texas

Among the new court cases that feminists regard as particularly discouraging is Schattman v. Texas Employment Commission.

This is the first case to reach the Appeals Court level that challenges a state law requiring a woman to quit her job at a certain point in pregnancy, regardless of her desire to continue working or her doctor's opinion that she could do so without harm.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit upheld the law, finding it "reasonable and rationally related to a permissible state purpose," and thus not in violation of the requirement of the 14th Amendment that all citizens receive the equal protection of the laws.

The loss of the Schattman case was regarded by feminists as a particularly severe blow, because the plaintiff, Mrs. Mary Ellen Schattman, was an office worker whose duties did not require her to meet the public and whose job required no physical exertion more strenuous than "the lifting of file folders."

One victory viewed as significant by feminists was recently won in the area of laws covering pregnancy.

The Attorney General of Michigan issued an opinion invalidating Michigan law that prohibited a woman from collecting unemployment benefits beginning 10 weeks before an expected birth and for six weeks after delivery.

Two new studies that feminists are quoting deal with the subject of alimony and child support. Both studies indicate that court awards of such financial aid to women are not paid consistently over any significant length of time in a large majority of cases, regardless of the economic status of the father or ex-husband.

One of the studies, done by Marian P. Winston of the Rand Corporation and Trude Forsher, executive vice president of Zukor-Forsher Productions, showed that fathers who were failing to support their children were not primarily low-income individual or unemployed, as many persons suppose.

The second major study was done by the Citizens' Advisory Council on the Status of Women, which concluded that child support payments "generally are less than enough to furnish half of the support of the children" and that "even these small payments are frequently not adhered to."

Victories on Work Rules

The court cases that women have consistently been winning are those involving state laws restricting hours of work for women but not men, setting limitations on the weights that women may lift and imposing other requirements on employers of women.

Nader Fund Plea Collects $642,000

WASHINGTON, March 19—Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate yesterday that Public Citizen, Inc., of which he is president had raised $642,000 in the first seven months of a national drive for funds to help to finance his consumer action and research projects.

Contributions of that amount from 42,000 supporters carried the drive past Mr. Nader's first-year minimum target of $500,000. At the present rate, his goal of $1-million will be exceeded.

Mr. Nader also announced the establishment of a Health Research Group, a Tax Reform Research Group and a litigation unit. He said that their annual budgets, totaling $235,000, would be financed by Public Citizen, Inc.

In addition, he reported, the fund-raising corporation has contributed $10,000 to a newly formed group of women lawyers called the Center for Women Policy Studies.

The center, which will promote women's rights in employment and education and otherwise seek to advance the feminist cause, is independent and will have no continuing relationship with Mr. Nader or Nader-sponsored organizations. Public Citizen, Inc., made the grant to help the group to get started.

The three other recipients of funds from the corporation are spinoffs from the Public Interest Research Group, Mr. Nader's chief lobbying and legal action arm.

The Health research Group, with a budget of $125,000 will deal with occupational health and safety, food and drug regulation, product safety and health care systems. Monitoring the enforcement of regulatory laws will be a major activity.

The Tax Reform Research Group will work for tax reform legislation and intervene in various administrative proceedings with a special view to publicizing those that favor special interests. Its budget is $60,000.

Automakers Uneasy About Pollution Control Deadline

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's automakers are approaching July with the queasy sensation that they won't make their deadline for meeting the government's 1975 exhaust emission standards.

The pressure from government and industry critics already is getting heavier.

"It is extremely difficult for me to understand this sudden and coincidental inability to achieve the Clean Air Act standards," said Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield after the manufacturers announced they would ask for an extra year to meet standards set by the 1970 act.

Ralph Nader has said it's already too late because the auto industry decided long ago to rework the present engines instead of redesigning new engines powered by steam, electricity or a clean power source.

Government and industry officials concede that as yet, a little over three months before manufacturers say they must start the ordering and tooling for 1975 cars, no one has developed a mass production car which will meet all the standards.

But reachers have developed some cars which come tantilizingly close, and government officials are not convinced the industry needs the year's reprieve it has requested.

Engelhard Minerals and Chemicals Corp., an independent catalytic filter researcher, says it recently ran a car for 25,000 miles with its converter, and the car still put out no more than legal levels.

Ford has run a stratified-charge engine in its laboratories which meets the 1975 standards.

But even the most promising experiments have what the auto industry considers to be some important qualifiers:

In addition to meeting legal limits of emissions for 1975, the cars must also sustain that level for 50,000 miles. No test car has done this yet.

In an October survey, the National Academy of Sciences survey of five domestic and 13 foreign cars found that the stratified-charge engine run at Ford and five foreign cards met the 1975 standards, but all were handmade and a decade away from mass production.

No one has yet built a test car which meets all the qualifications for emissions and mileage.

The academy concluded:

"While there is no certainty today that any 1975 model year vehicles will meet the requirements of the act, the status of development and rate of progress make it possible that the larger, manufacturers will be able to produce vehicles that will qualify," provided certain conditions are met.

The conditions are 1. that the government allow replacement of the catalyst within 50,000 miles and 2. that unleaded gasoline be available in time and 3. that the average of production line cars-rather than every single one-meet the standards.

Communists Slam Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Communist-led forces slammed 200 rockets and artillery shells into Phnom Penh and its outskirts early Tuesday and official estimates said 50 Cambodians were killed and 120 were wounded. It was the heaviest attack against the capital since the war in Cambodia started two years ago.

Most of the casulaties were civilians.

Officials also reported a ground attack against the government radio station six miles from the center of the city. The main transmitter was damaged, disrupting communications, but a standby transmitter was put into operation.

One set of about 20 rockets rained on a suburban market less than a mile southwest of the downtown section, touching off fires that raged through a several-square-block area of houses. The district, known as Tuk Laak, was completely levelled by the unchecked flames.

Another set of rockets hit a populated area about two miles southeast of the downtown section.

Many of the shells hit in and around the Pochentong International Airport, a civilian-military terminal on the western edge of the city adjoined by many refugees' homes. It was temporarily closed down.

Military officials said the barrage included Soviet-built 122mm rockets and 75mm howitzer artillery. They said it was the first time they could recall 75mm artillery being used in an attack on Phnom Penh and the first reports of its use anywhere in Indochina in recent months.

The launching sites were believed located about five miles southwest of the city limits.

The transmitter for Cambodian and internatinal radio broadcasting was hit by the barrage. The extent of damage was not known, but all radio communications inside Cambodia were cut off, military sources reported.

So Do It!

We must agree with Larry O'Brien, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and Saul Alinsky, radical organizer. Both have stated that college students should definitely use the voting strength they have and register and vote.

They were speaking to different groups when they said that. Alinsky spokes last night to a group made up mostly of college students. O'Brien spoke to members of the Springfield Rotary Club last Friday at a $50-a-plate-dinner. At neither point, speech was the main point, but it was an important one.

O'Brien even went further. We agree with him when he says that for the Democratic party (or even for the Republican party) youth should be getting involved in both the front and back room politics if they want an effective say in who runs this country and how it is run.

There are only a few days left to register in time for the April primary. At that time, not only will the new voters be able to say who they want for president, but also they will be able to pick the delegates to go to Florida or San Diego to pick who will run for president.

Sure, you might be disenchanted with the way things are going in this country. But you now have an effective say as to how things will run in the future. Use your new power.

If you don't register, not only can't you vote for a president, but you'll have no say in selecting a U.S. Senator, Congressman for each district, state senators and representatives, and numerous county posts as well.

If you want to take over the country, which is inevitable anyway, you should register and vote. Do both.

Get Off My Cloud

A tall and gawky looking reporter from the city press approaches the home of Randolph Cranshaw, one of the most concerned citizens in the town of Apathyville. It's his first assignment. And he appears very tense as he knocks on the door and then fumbles through his attache case, trying to dig up a pad and pencil.

The door flies open and nearly knocks the cub reporter's block off. He maintains his balance, but loses his voice momentarily. The reporter finally gets a hold of himself and restores that self-confidence which the men of his trade can never do without. He's ready to go to work.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Cranshaw. I understand you're a prominent member in the community and thought that you might make an excellent interview story for our paper. So would it be troubling you any to answer a few of my questions?"

Cranshaw: "No, not at all. Start popping the questions and I'll try to help you as best I can. Come inside and we'll rap a while."

...Cub reporter: "Mr. Cranshaw, how do you feel about the apathy that thrives in this country today?"

Cranshaw: "It really bugs me. It seems that people just don't have much concern for others these days. With the threat of nuclear war waging over our heads, you'd think that it would bind everybody closer together. But no, everybody adopts an 'I don't care' attitude and goes about fulfilling his sexual expectations while world-wide problems multiply rapidly."

"Well, at least I can say more about myself. I'm one in 50 who cares. But I just don't seem to dig our form of government anymore. I think it's about high time we had a little reform around here. Yes, the day we get those G.d. Republicans out of office, we'll be saying good-by to South East Asia. Then we'll be able to collaborate with the Russians and concentrate a more solid effort on the Sino-Soviet borderline.

Cub reporter: "Who do you feel is responsible for this mess that we're in today?"

Cranshaw: "Certain interest groups. One thing that aggravates me intensely is the way that those blooming hard hats carry on, trying to impress others that they're true-blue patriots. But what the hell do they ever do!--just stand around picking their noses while nodding at every motion the president makes. For all we know, Congress could probably pass a bill in favor of a senatorial orgy and they'd go along with it.

"And then there are those disgusting screwballs with the long and straggly hair that vegetate on acid. Boy, what I could do to those hams! I'd open up a barber shop and charge double."

Cub reporter: "Are you in favor of birth control legislation?"

Cranshaw: "Definitely. It's a shame that nobody cares anymore because we're in quite a fix. Take for example that ghastly population explosion which is predicted to bring famine to the eastern states within three years. If you ask me, they should legalize street abortion. If everybody went out and had 12 kids, we'd all starve.

"Oh...that reminds me. My wife Martha is expecting our seventh child on Monday. I'd better take the day off--that would only leave me with a 15-hour work week, oh well.

"Getting back to the subject, isn't it outrageous the way the food situation stands today. People are starving all over the world, even here in the states. Yet we are extremely wasteful. We can afford to throw it around like a toy--idiotic!"

Cub reporter: "What are your feelings toward the younger generation?"

Cranshaw: "I think they're up the tree. Another problem on our hands is the generation gap. It seems that you can't tell your own son what to do anymore.

"Just the other might I asked my boy Alby to throw some bread out on the front lawn for the birds. He replied: 'When I get around to it.' If everybody waited for someone else to make the first move, this world would come to a complete standstill."

Cub reporter: "One last question, sir. How do you appraise the ecological state of this country?"

Cranshaw: "That's like asking me to evaluate a mound of horse manure. Pollution! Boy, are we ever infested with it. A sunshiny day in Los Angeles is no better than a cloudy one in Miami. By the year 2000, race discrimination will have vanished from the earth. If impurities continue to infiltrate our already filthy air at the present pace, then we'll all be black."

"Water pollution looms as a serious problem too. For crying out loud, my cesspool is more sanitary than the Mississippi! Gosh dam it, I better get around to paying that litter fine...Alby? Please hand me the ash tray son. Then go out and burn the rubbish. What's Ralph Nader got to do with your errands, boy. What I say goes in this household fellow. and don't forget it!"

"Sorry to put on a spectacle like this, Mr. Newspaperman. But once in a while the boy gets obnoxious. Once I knock that apathetic attitude out of him, he'll be all right. But can you imagine, equating some bum like Nader with the household errands!"

Cub reporter: "That's quite all right, Mr. Cranshaw. Boys will be boys. Thank you for your information sir, and good day."

...Cranshaw: "Well, the world is in very sorry shape right now. But fortunately there are people around like me who still care. I guess it's time that I retire to my bomb shelter, read Alby's Mad Magazine, take some tranquilizers, and then draw a petition to impeach the president.

"Why do people let little things depress them so? To me, even the slightest thought of a thermo-nuclear war seems far fetched. Huge atomic stockpiles have been sitting around for 30 years now and have probably lost most of their potent effect--I HOPE, SO LONG AS IT DOESN'T INFRINGE UPON MY PRIVACY.

A Close-up Of Rents And Fees

T.B. Campion
Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Services

I want to elaborate on the discussions currently being held by the Administration and the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee concerning dormitory rents for the coming year, by providing some of the background about a possibie change in the policy relating to dormitory residency. I want to do this because of the very favorable affect this change would have on the combined charges for the Dining Commons and dormitories taken together.

At present, anyone who is married, or commutes from the home of parents, or is a senior, or who will become 21 during the academic year is not required to live in the dorms. The proposed change would affect only the last of these four provisions. The new age policy would state that in order to qualify for living off-campus during any given semester, a student would need to be 21 at the start of the semester.

Here are some important points to keep in mind with regard to this possible new policy:

1. The change being considered would bring the residency policy into line with that already in effect for the Dining Commons.

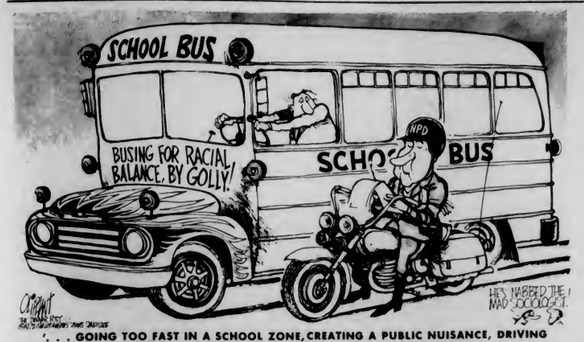
2. As far as what students would be affected if this new policy were to be adopted, it would only affect those in this year's Sophomore and Freshmen classes who will turn 21 during the next academic year, since all of this year's Junior class will automatically be exempt under the senior policy. We estimate that there are about 350 such students now enrolled who will turn 21 in each semester next year.

3. Without this policy change, the room rents will have to be about $26 a year higher than with the new policy. In addition, the new policy would make possible complete elimination of what now looks like a $15 Dining Commons increase.

With the additional students who would live in the dorms under the new proposed policy and with these same students eating in the Dining Commons under existing policy, we find that enough added revenue would be generated for the Dining Commons to preclude the need for a board increase.

In other words, the new policy would lower the combined increase in dorm and dining commons charges by $41 per year for each dorm resident.

The dormitory budget figures for next year that are being discussed with the Rents & Fees Committee include all the requests that have come in from the dorm areas, Heads of Residence, Area Directors, Physical Plant, and the Area Business Managers. The process now under way is an examination in detail of all these requests so as to reduce the amount of any increase to the lowest possible level consistent with maintaining the dormitories in acceptable condition. In other words, the task is to determine what stays in and what is to be cut out.



There are certain important economic factors, discussed below, which are directly affecting the costs of dormitory operation and over which we can exercise little or no control. These factors must of course be taken into account in any realistic analysis of the expense-revenue situation in the whole dormitory operation.

These factors are:

1. Legislated University-wide cost-of-living increases of somewhat over 4% that apply to all labor expended.
2. The new State Unemployment Insurance Law for which provision of an estimated 1 1/2% of labor costs needs to be made.
3. The cost of normal maintenance materials has been increasing and is expected to rise by 6% in the coming fiscal year.
4. State-mandated step increases for classified employees. (2% of total labor costs)
5. Increased cost of utilities (5.9% over this year) and of group insurance costs (approximately 15% over this year)

For all the residence halls combined, the overall effect of these factors amounts to approximately $24 per student. This $24 increase which is essentially mandated does not include any of the monies requested by the residence halls for student labor projects or for environmental changes.

Over and beyond this amount there is also the need to offset decreased revenues expected as a result of a lower level of budgeted occupancy and the need to provide for regular replacement of furniture and equipment replacement. This year occupancy in the residence halls was budgeted at 95%. Actual occupancy was only 91.5% mainly because of the 1800 student increase in size of next year's Senior class, budgeted occupancy for the coming year is 90%.

Letters To The Editor

Credibility Gap

To the Editor:

Steve Tripoli's MDC Commentary 3/15 was a case of inaccurate journalism. Mr. Tripoli, only a freshman, makes some definite statements without proper factual support or substantiating information. Throughout the article his lack of experience relating to UMass athletics is too obvious. It's this type of reporting that hurts the credibility of a student publication.

To downgrade members of a University organization, such as the Athletic Council, and make statements about situations and individuals that only expose a writer's lack of thorough research hampers the student's plea that he deserves to "control" such a body.

Mr. Tripoli states, "The way the council is set up now, any kind of reorganization will be an improvement." Does that mean it would be acceptable to have no students on the Council? Over the years there have been many avidly interested alumni and faculty members on the Council, who were put there not for their "blind spirit of Joe College" or "by default", but for their desire to help the University to have a representative athletic program in the scope of the competitive level prescribed by the University administration.

The commentary mentioned "a vociferous alumnus" at the last meeting without saying why the alumnus was vociferous, or whether he had the facts on that issue to be vociferous. Because the Student Senate endorsed a desire to grant athletic scholarships strictly on the basis of need, does that mean the Council should immediately agree? Then, if next year's Student Senate feels differently do we change immediately once again? And I find it hard to believe that the Student Senate desire is the true feeling of the rest of the campus.

Think for a moment of the contributions made to the University by Julius Erving, Greg Landry, Milt Morin, Ray Ellerbrook and Joe DiSarcina, to cite a few. If the need formula was involved in their recruitment to UMass the Successful Sixties might have been similar to the Frightful Fifties. There was quite a difference in the feelings or pride for the school in those eras.

Maybe it's necessary to experience woeful basketball and baseball records, 71-6 football defeats at Homecoming, pitiful hockey teams and winless wrestling squads on one hand, and New England Championships and National Tournament participating in each on the other hand, in order to appreciate that difference. Doesn't Don Glickstein, a non-sports writer for the MDC, show some pride in his article on Erving 3/17?

Many may agree with Chancellor Bromery's decision to veto the $6000 donation by the Council "to build a stone memorial to a UMass football player who was killed in an auto accident." But to relegate a person like Bernie Dallas '66 to just another football player is a gross injustice. His total accomplishments on campus are not forgotten by those who knew him.

When one has limited knowledge of a subject and no association with its history or components he should do his homework a little better.

Perverse Pleasure

To the Editor:

I would like to talk about what could be called "the Pig within us". About 7:00 in the evening last Friday, the 17, I was walking from the bus stop on N. Pleasant St., toward the Hatch. It had been a rainy and miserable day, but some enterprising people had evidently been taking advantage of the snow anyway. There in front of the campus pond were two elegant snow creatures, a man and a woman, rushing into each other's arms, expressions of great glee on their faces. They had obviously been constructed with care and love, for each was a distinct character, a personality, plus having all the requisite details, such as hair, pointed tits on the woman, everything. It gave me great pleasure to see them and think of the kind of people who had ventured out on such a day to construct these lovely things.

I spent the next two hours at the Blue Room's St. Patrick's Day celebration. I saw friends and told them to go see what was on the lawn in front of the Campus Center. I then left, heading for town. As I crossed the lawn I was dismayed to see that some crass persons had demolished the sculptures, leaving nothing but their genitals standing.

What kind of a world is it, i ask, when someone leaves a beautiful thing for everyone to enjoy, and that thing is crudely destroyed by some one person for his or her own pleasure of destruction? What kind of hostility or repression in us makes us wish to so ruin a piece of art, something created out of love, something to enjoy for Free before the sun melts it? Why does it give someone pleasure to do this?

I would like to alert you all to this phenomenon and suggest that we all make it stop happening! If those who do these things would catch the brunt of their friends disapproval, they might rethink their actions and we may all get to live in a more beautiful world then.

Robin Steere

That's A Fact

To the Editor:

In the 3/17/72 edition of the Collegian, there was an article entitled, "Gorman House Goes Foreign". But GORMAN HOUSE IS NOT GOING FOREIGN, and I do not see how your staff, or whoever titled it thinks so.

There were no allusions made in the article to foreigners. If whoever titled it had read the story, he would have seen that Gorman House is not going anything.

Now for some more fact: Gorman House has a residential capacity of approximately 323 students. There are currently over 50 seniors and well over 100 juniors living in the dorm. Next semester these seniors will have left. Gorman and many of the Juniors will leave also (since they have the off-campus option). Also, other residents will be changing dorms, getting married, and dropping out. Therefore, a turnover of over 100 people can be expected.

Into the very same rooms that these people leave, the 70 language majors will go. NO ONE must move out; NO ONE must move anywhere.

The FACT is that these language majors will move in and will provide numerous activities for everyone in Gorman.

Thus there were two lies in your title: "Gorman House Goes Foreign". Here are the truths: (1) Gorman is not going foreign since these language majors are not foreigners; (2) Gorman House is not going anything since 65 language students in a residential capacity of 323 is not a majority, or anything like it.

In general, I do not approve of your titles. They often contain false implications. They are invented to lure the reader's eye and this is not your duty. Your duty is to present fact. And for a factual article you should assign a factual title. (For other examples see: "Nixon Halts Busing", "Balling is good for you", "Orgies and Coping With Mother", "Kristofferson Hardly Impressive", to name but a few...

Editorial Points

We thought that if the University wanted to increase its budget, it could hold a lottery. The prize could be writing weather reports for publication in the Collegian.

Degree Vs. Education

To the Editor:

"Do I have to get a degree or can I spend my time getting an education?"

"Let's hope that you can find a university in which you can do both at the same time!"

As i near the end of my sabbatical year and think back to that conversation with my administrator, I realize that at UMASS School of Education I have been able to achieve my hope--a degree that has been for me an education. I agree with the statement in the recent SATURDAY REVIEW article that you can get the best possible education in UMASS School of Education, if you want to get it. I believe that I have in fact gotten it. I have been given the opportunity, the encouragement, and timely help in my learning experiences.

A Source Of Rationality

To the Editor:

As new members of the Student Senate it has been difficult for us, primarily on the basis of our past month's observations, to assess the strengths and effectiveness of those candidates seeking the office of President. Realizing that other new senators may also be experiencing such confusion or indecision we would like to present our rationale for supporting Larry Ladd.

We feel that the office of Student Senate President demands extensive relations with not only students but also faculty and administrators. As Administrative Vice President, Larry has been actively involved in the reorganization of the SUG Board, the Senate Executive Structure, and the Athletic Council: a Rents and Fees boycott, the organization of a drug task force, and many other activities which have been brought to our attention in one short month. As well as this, a president must be able to deal effectively with all parties involved on a rational and objective basis. It is a well known fact that Student Senate meetings often become heated, but a source of rationality can always be found in Larry Ladd. He maintains control and objectivity and never seems to get caught up in the senseless rhetoric which so many other senators often seem to do.

Larry Ladd exemplifies the kind of President the student body needs, and for the above reasons we urge you to support Vice President Ladd for President of the Student Senate.

Please Explain

To the Editor:

Like many other dorm residents, I recently received a valuables inventory card and instructions requesting that I give serial numbers, colors, descriptions, make and model of my radio, T.V., stereo, etc., and that I mark them with my Social Security Number. The intent of the whole program is that if my things are ever ripped off, the police will be able to return them by cross checking the inventory card file or consulting the SSN listing. I applaud the imagination of those who conceived this program and the effort of the people doing the leg work to get it started.

But who has access to this information?

If a thief had access to the cards (or knew someone who knew someone, etc.) he'd have a shopping list. If the system ever gets big enough, it will be computerized-automation will have at last come to breaking and entering. Even with the card system, it is conceivable that B & E for potluck could give way to "clients" putting in "orders" for hot merchandise. With the client-order-thief relationship, it is unlikely that the police would ever see the stuff to return it.

Perhaps just a system utilizing SSN's on things likely to be stolen would have been a better idea. Locked doors don't hide many secrets when all your goodies are on a file card. Perhaps a Yellow Pages for thieves has been created.

Will someone who knows, please explain what measures will be taken to safeguard the inventory information in its present form and computerized form.

Imamu Baraka On Civil Rights

Noted poet, playwrite and Black political activist IMAMU BARAKA formerly known as LeRoi Jones, will be speaking on Tuesday, April 4th in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m. The title of the discussion will be "The Civil Rights Movement--Dr. King and the Present Black Struggle".

Brother Baraka became nationally known during the mid 60's upon publication of several books, plays and poetry, many of which have been staged on numerous occasions. Some of his works include: Blues People, Dutchman, The Baptism and The Toilet, Black Art, and Slave Ship. described white teachers as surgeons who, "sit and dig hunks of Black matter out of our children's heads and replace that living tissue with cancerous growths".

Roywilkins is an eternal faggot.
His spirit is a faggot his projection and image, this is to say, that if i ever see roywilkins on the sidewalks
I'm gonna stick half my sandal up his ass

This poem published in 1967 entitled "Civil Rights Poem" explains why Mr. Baraka is so controversial and why his upcoming lecture should be one not to be missed.

Brother Baraka has done graduate work at Columbia University and the New School of Social Research. He has also taught poetry and drama at those schools, taught literature at the University of Buffalo, and served as visiting professor at San Francisco State. He also is the founder of the Black Arts Repertory Theatre School in Harlem. Among his awards have been the Whitney Fellowship, 1963 and the Yoruba Academy, 1965.

More recently Baraka has been intensely involved in Black political activity in his home town of Newark, New Jersey and on the national level. His essay about the white dominated school system in Newark, for example, caused some increased Black consciousness and subsequently needed changes. He

His Committee for a Unified Newark having a foothold for self-determination in Newark was also an important factor in the planning of a nationwide attempt to consolidate Black political power thru the recent political convention in Gary, Indiana. Imamu Baraka was the Program Chairman of the all-important event and was very instrumental in setting the political direction for the national Black community.

Brother Baraka will entertain questions following his talk and there will also be a coffee hour.

WMPIRG Needs Students, Faculty

An experiment in education and the potential of this school is being organized by students representing the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group.

WMPIRG seeks to provide students with an organized program of University credit for supervised work relating to one or more of the following goals:

1. formal research directed towards perceived injustices or specific areas of interest where there is a need or desire for information (physical and social sciences)

2. knowledge of the realities of the rural and urban communities and organizations in this region through direct experience.

3. action through mass education, community organization, program development, product development, and, depending on whether the Board of Trustees approves WMPIRG funding, litigation and lobbying through WMPIRG lawyers and staff.

A college education should be more than students being told by teachers aspects of the world-more than reading books. It must provide for the easy access of into segments of the real world that are foreign to them. How can an education supposedly preparing students for the world neglect a comprehensive program of exploring and experiencing people, problems, places and ideas that otherwise would neither been seen nor felt?

WMPIRG urges the university community to participate in this New Set of Tools.

A meeting for interested students and organizations will be

Nixon's Completed Third Phase To Terminate U.S. Troop Presence

WASHINGTON AP - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird says that by the time President Nixon's third phase of Vietnamization is completed there will be less than 800-900 American military advisers left in Vietnam.

In a copyrighted interview with the magazine U.S. News and World Report, Laird said that by the end of phase 3 "the total U.S. forces will be lower than at the start of President John F. Kennedy's Administration."

"When phase 3 is completed," Laird said. "American military presence in Vietnam will be terminated."

But he warned "Nixon has made it clear that this will not happen until the question of Americans held prisoners of war has been settled and the missing in action have been accounted for."

The first phase-turning over ground-combat responsibilities to the South Vietnamese-was completed last year. Laird said. Phase 2 "which deals with turnover of logistics, artillery and air support to the South Vietnamese also is moving very well," he said.

Phase 3 also is underway, he said. "Altogether we will be down to 69,000 American servicemen in Vietnam by May 1, from the high point of the 549,500 authorization when the Nixon Administration assumed office."

He restated that the fastest way to terminate the U.S. role in South Vietnam is through negotiations.

Judaic Tradition To Be Celebrated

by GOEFFREY LEVINE

On March 29th people of the Judaic tradition will begin the week long celebration of the original emancipation of their people. The story of the Exodus is the story of the Israelites' struggle for their liberation. It has also been explained by the medieval Kabbalists as a system of psychological and spiritual liberation.

Today the establishment of the state of Israel and the struggle of the Jews in the Soviet Union add new political and historic dimensions to the significance of the Exodus. On March 22nd Merkabah University will be holding a pre-Passover Seder. During the night long activity the major themes of the Exodus will be discussed and explored around the ancient custom of the reading of the Passover Haggadah.

Merkabah U. hopes that the sincerity of their activity will provide participants with a unique insight into the ancient and contemporary significance of the Exodus. The pre-Passover seder will begin at 8:00 Wednesday night in room 420 of the Student Union.

Black Enlightenment

During the week of April 4--7th, following vacation three events of importance will take place on the UMass campus which should sharpen the understanding of Black people--their politics and their culture.

The Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial Lecture Series will be presenting this year a series of three events in order to comemorate the death of Dr. King. The series is funded by the Distinguished Visitors Program with the help of Program Council and the Orchard Hill Area Government.

The events are:

Tuesday, April 4th--IMAMU BARAKA (LeRoi Jones) discusses the "Civil Rights Movement--Dr. King and the Present Black Struggle" - Campus Center Auditorium.

Wednesday, April 5th--BARRY GAITHER will show slides and discuss "New Dimensions in Black Social Art" Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

Friday, April 7th--GEORGE HOWARD AND THE PRIMITIVE DANCE CO. will present "Black Roots"--African and West Indian folk dancing Campus Center Auditorium.

All events begin at 8 p.m. and are free to the public.

USCC

USCC Elects And Restructures

In a Sunday night meeting, the University and State Communications Council (USCC), elected new officers. The Council, whose main objective is to promote communications between different segments of the University, particularly between students and legislators, has recently been restructured.

Judy Gill, past chairman, presided while Peter Lynch, a junior political science major was elected as new chairman. Lynch will be responsible for coordinating all projects in which USCC is involved.

Michael Cooney, also a political science major was voted in as Vice Chairman and Dennis Arouca, a sophomore from Brockton, was named as treasurer.

Mark Doyle, currently head of the Legislative Research Council, will continue in this post. The Research Council matches UMass students with Legislators who have a similar interest in a particular field such as health care or drinking laws. Students research particular bills submitted by these legislators and receive academic credit for their work as well as encountering a first hand view of the workings of the state government.

Cindy Price will remain as editor of the USCC Newsletter. The Newsletter is sent monthly to legislators to inform them of student activities, such as SOS, WMPIRG, Student Senate, etc, that are occurring on the UMass campus. All other committees, including the Committee on Miscellaneous Affairs, headed by Ross Benjamin, were abolished.

During the past two months USCC has been active in fighting a proposed tuition increase by the State Legislature. Activities included compiling a booklet containing the financial report on the cost of an education at UMass Amherst, to be sent to legislators; writing a letter to parents of students to notify them of the current situation; and urging all students to write their State representatives and senators to let them know the effects a tuition hike would have on the individual student.

Future plans were also discussed at the meeting. The Council decided to invite state Secretary of Education, Joseph Cronin to the University for a day this spring, in order to familiarize him with students and this campus. Another plan, already being implemented, is a series of articles on new laws that have been passed and that will effect students. These will include new drug laws, specifically relating to the use of marijuana, alcohol laws, consumer protection, beano regulation, and election law reforms. USCC is now doing research on how these laws are being implemented and how they will effect UMass students. The articles will be published in the Collegian.

USCC also has copies of all bills being considered by the State Legislature during the current session. Anyone interested in proposed USCC plans or desiring information on a particular bill, or on the tuition issue is urged to contact USCC in RSO 123 or leave a message in RSO box 667.

Ahh! Look at all that crap in the campus pond.' "Geez, I sure hope somebody does somthin' about it. If it keeps goin' like that there won't be any skating next winter." 'Lookit the fish! Hell if they can still live in that thing, we shouldn't have to worry for a few more years.' (Photos by Alan Chapman)

High Court To Support Consumer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court agreed Monday to decide whether door-to-door salesmen and installment-credit merchants must spell out all the terms of a purchase price to the consumer.

The case accepted for review next year at the urging of both the government and the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund concerns an elderly Miami widow who signed up for four magazine subscriptions for five years.

In 1968 Congress acted to protect consumers from hidden finance charges with a truth-in-lending law. Officials of the Federal Reserve Board then went beyond its literal terms to require a whole range of information for any contract involving at least four installments.

These regulations were struck down last September by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans, leading to the appeal in behalf of the Miami widow Leila Mourning. The eventual decision could have a broad impact on the $107-billion consumer credit industry, particularly land sales, home improvement contracts, sales of furniture, appliances and jewelry, correspondence schools and helath spas.

Mrs. Mourning, 73, said she was not told the total purchase price of the magazines, $122.45, and that an $118.50 balance would be due after the first payment, $3.95.

Another appeal granted review will lead to a re-examination of of the much-criticized 1966 Miranda decision that requires police to offer a lawyer to suspects and to advise them they need not answer any questions.

The new case was brought to the court by Philadelphia prosecutors who complained that "hyper-technical requirements" of Miranda and a follow up ruling had kept them from using a confession against the admitted slayer of four elderly people.

In 1968 Congress partly overrode the court and relaxed the confession rules for federal criminal trials. The Philadelphia prosecutors are seeking some easing for the many times more numerous state trials.

The Philadelphia case concerns a confession given by a suspect, Paul D. Ware, who was considered incompetent to stand trial for four years. By the time he was declared ready the Miranda ruling was in effect and the confession he had given in 1963 could not be used against him by order of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

In a third appeal, the National Labor Relations Board if trying to prevent unions from fining members who quit during a strike and return to their jobs.

The NLRB argues that workers who vote for a strike have the right to change their minds once it starts and go back to their jobs without penalty. The U.S. Circuit Court in Boston disagreed and upheld fines imposed by the Textile Workers Union, AFL--CIO, against 31 members who broke ranks at a Nashua, N.H., plant three years ago.

Fine Arts Hosts Dance Theater Tonight

The UMass Fine Arts Council will host the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater for a one-week residency which will include four performances in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tuesday through Friday, March 21-24.

The residency is co-sponsored by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the UMass Fine Arts Council.

Two different programs will be offered. Tuesday and Wednesay, March 21 and 22, the program will include "Flowers," featuring the music of Pink Floyd, Blind Faith, and Janis Joplin; "Suspension," created in the early 1940's on the theme of gravitation; "Cry," a solo, performed by Judith Jamison, and set to the music of Alice Coltraine, Laura Nyro, and The Voices of East Harlem; and "Revelations," a suite that explores the motivations and emotions of American Negro religious music.

The Thursday and Friday programs, will include "Blues Suite," set to traditional music and exploring the blues, and songs of lost love, despair, protest, and anger; "Hermit Songs," a Dudley Williams solo which includes four small dances based on poems translated from anonymous Irish texts for the 8th to 13th Centuries; "Myth," a new work set to music by Igor Stravinsky (Symphonies of Wind Instruments); and "Mary Lou's Mass (Dances of Praise)," choreographed by Ailey to a jazz mass by Mary Lou Williams.

In 1958 the Alvin Ailey Dance Theater, was born in New York. The 16 Ailey dancers come to the UMass campus from a tour of North Africa and the Soviet Union, under U.S. Government auspices; and a performance of Leonard Bernstein's "Mass," with Ailey choreography and Ailey dancers, for the opening of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

In addition to the evening performances on the UMass campus, the Ailey company will also conduct a series of master classes Monday, March 20, at 7:30 p.m. in the Women's Physical Education Building at UMass. Saturday, March 25, members of the company will travel to Greenfield and Springfield to conduct workshops, and will conduct an advanced master class at UMass. For more information on the master class activities, call the Fine Arts Council Office at UMass.

Reserved tickets for the evening performances are available in the Fine Arts Council Office, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available one hour before the performance at the Bowker Auditorium Box Office. A telephone reaching both offices is 545-0202.

If your living and dreaming thoughts have somehow come to the conclusion that the war is wrong, racial justice is right, and the abolition of capital punishment is no laughing matter but a necessity for humanity to survive and transcend its barbaric ways, then consider the following people groups as something to be desired.

Fellowship of Reconciliation, Box 271, Nyack, N.Y. 10960--a 57-year-old interfaith peace father whose children take a pacifist position.

Institute for the Study of Non-violence, Box 1001, Palo Alto, CA 94302--a corporate research/action group. They have a library of films and tapes and wouldn't mind receiving a few thousand requests from we Umies regarding their brochure/literature lists. At the same time, they would appreciate some dope about actions in this part of the contry.

Resist, 763 Massachusetts Ave., Room 4, Cambridge, MA 02139--a national organization which began as a support group for the draft resistence movement. Their primary activities are providing du$t and other types of support to people on the move for social action and publishing a newsletter ($3 a yr.). They also have available a new Movement Security Kit with info on interrogation, surveillance, infiltration and grand juries for one dollar.

The Catholic Peace Fellowship, 339 Lafayette St., N.Y., N.Y. 10012--formed by the impetus of Pope John's encyclical letter, "Pacem in Terris", which called war an absurdity and summoned the shattered and fearful human family to reconciliation through the bonds of love, trust and justice. More specifically, the CPF works toward the development of a "theology of peace", as well as principles and techniques of nonviolent resistance to help meet the desperate needs and just demands of oppressed peoples everywhere, and to meet the threats to our fragile biosphere by promiscuous consumption and continued reliance upon weapons of mass destruction for "defense". CPF sponsors include Fr. Daniel Berrigan, S.J.; Fr. Philip Berrigan, S.S.J.; Dorothy Day; Gordon Zahn; and the late Thomas Merton. To receive the CPF Bulletin free, write to them at the above address.

The Western Mass. Clergy and Laity Concerned, 24 Churchill St., Amherst MA 01002--a local chapter of the national organization of 40,000 members whose religious convictions have drawn them into the struggle for peace and justice. Western Mass. CALC groups have a two-fold purpose: to educate local congregations on issues of peace and justice; and to provide ways and means by which those who are so motivated may act upon their convictions...On Good Friday, March 31, a 4 PM liturgy will be held at the Main Gate of Westover Air Force Base. (During our spring recess, it may be a good omen to take a little trip to Westover...anybody for Good Friday?)

National Jewish Organizing Project, P.O. Box 19162, Washington, D.C. 20036--feels that the Jew and Jewish institutions must not adopt the worst principles of American society, e.g., racism, elitism, and exploitation. The project is trying to work with its peers to find alternatives to the present inhumanity. Send a self-stamped, addressed envelope with your request for information.

For a copy of the complete collection of political papers "borrowed" or "ripped off" (check one) from the FBI Office in Media, Pennsylvania, send a dollar to Win Magazine, Box 547, Rifton, N.Y. 12471.

Got info to share? Write: Student Matters Committee, SOACT, c/o The Student Senate.

Lusty London Players To Present

At 8:00 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday, March 22 and 23, The Lusty London Players will present their Elizabethan Entertainment, "Bonnere and Buxom or Watchword to Wanton Maidens" in the Hatch. The company, made up of UMass students, have taken on the personal of 16th Century Strolling Players who roamed the provinces around London with "entertainments" of a sort, consisting of songs, dances, poems, storytelling, acrobatic tricks, and bawdy jokes. The script was compiled by Bonnie Bishoff and it is composed entirely of snatches of Elizabethan writings. Poetry, philosophy, diaries, scenes from plays, and personal recollections and memoirs are the sources of the language of the production.

These vagabond players will present their show free of charge and open to the public.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Capricorn persons have "secret pride." These natives, although feigning indifference, are very much aware of image, public reception or lack of it. Capricorn individuals have an uncanny sense of time, knowing where to be and when and able, also, to turn an apparent setback into ultimate vindication. Some good examples of this zodiacal sign are Richard Nixon, Cary Grant and Ava Gardner.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You get action in areas previously blocked. Legal picture is clarified. Relations with male associates is on upgrade. You gain in business and personal affairs. Be alert, versatile.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You get more than you expected--in monetary sense. In personal relationship, there is apt to be conflict. One close to you may be overly aggressive. Maintain balance. Bend a bit, but don't break.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Cycle high, gain shown through young ideas, innovative procedures. Accent change, variety. Bring forth creative resources. Adhere to individual style. Ignore one who sings blues. You are going in right direction.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Obtain hint from Gemini message. Be confident without becoming careless. Money invested in past is activated. Views are vindicated. Be a gracious winner. Remember one who is temporarily incapacitated.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Path is cleared, you are in limelight! Your wit, humor gain appreciative audience. Excellent for social activity. You can make valuable contacts. Avoid excess, however, in eating and drinking.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money comes your way in unorthodox manner. Aquarian could be involved. Aim toward goal. Don't sell yourself short. Room is being made for you at higher elevation. Know it and act like you know it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Personality sparkles. Do things your own way. Fine for making travel plans, for expressing views and getting message across. Submit manuscript, format. Be aware of potential. Plan and see ahead.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Secret maneuver finds you giving explanation to family member. Be diplomatic. You can gain support if you give a financial statement, accounting. Don't attempt to cover mistake. Frank approach gets you out of hot water.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Surprise move by friend helps you understand unusual relationship. See in light of reality. Avoid fooling yourself. Pisces person could play important role. Get to heart of matter. Then you'll be happier.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You tie loose ends. You bring together those who have divergent views. Many now look to you as conciliator. In personal life, your emotions fly high. Degree of self-discipline is necessary. Respond accordingly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Many warm up to you. Those who are indifferent have change of heart. You complete, finish and accomplish. You draw to you those who previously were skeptical. Your opinions are sought.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Practical issues dominate. Leo is involved. You are able to apply original touch. Gain comes from unexpected source. One who was closemouthed about money opens up--and you profit as result.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have great sense of humor, also a tendency to try too much too soon. You succeed when forces are organized. You fall short when efforts are scattered. This year, you experience self-discovery. October will be a pivotal month.

Women Gymnasts Second In East

By STEVE CARY

In their strongest performance ever, the Varsity Women Gymnasts reached a 104.1 total to place second in the Eastern Region of twenty-six teams. Winning was Springfield College, the National Champions last year, scoring 106.25, with Clarion State College of Pennsylvania third at around 101. These results qualify the team to compete in the National meet to be held Easter weekend in Des Moines, Iowa, where, as it was Saturday, Springfield will not be performing for their own screaming fans in their fieldhouse on their equipment. In Iowa, it will be the first of three UMass-Springfield meeting this season not held in the Springfield College Campus atmosphere, which has been an unquestionable advantage for that team so far.

For the UMass team, co-captain Margie Combs far surpassed any of her previous performances to win the most precious award the Eastern Championship meet affords. Consistent performances on each of the four events left her nothing short of a beautifully shining silver plate that represents first place in the All Around. To accomplish her 35.15 score, she qualified for the finals on all the events but Side Horse Vaulting, finishing second with a 9.05 on both Balance Beam and Uneven Bars, and taking a protested seventh on the Floor Ex at 8.75.

Second for UMass in point contributions was freshman Jeannine Burger, whose dangerous executions brought her to a 32.65 for the All Around in spite of a disasterous break on her best event, Unevens, that resulted in a fall to the floor and the automatic deduction of a full point. She continued strongly, however, and at the evening finals tied for first on the Floor Exercise with Kathy Kolemainen and Debbie Dunkly of Springfield at 9.0, took seventh on Balance Beam with an 8.475, and finished tenth overall on vaulting averaging 8.6.

During the finals, UMass' only married gymnast, Anne Vexler, drew a light-hearted response from the crowd with the saving of a ferocious pirouette in her beam routing that only her style could make humorous. Anne performed at her finest level this year, and qualified herself on all of the three events she works, placing fourth on the Floor at 8.95, sixth on the Beam with one fall and an 8.675, and sixth on Bars at 8.75.

Co-captain Betsy East took ninth on her specialty event Unevens, scoring an 8.65 average after the finals, and was joined by Marina Rodriquez, Thanne Poth and Gail Hannon, all contributing highly to the team's ultimate success.

While this completes an overview of the UMass performance at the Easterns, it does no justice to a true picture of the meet. Other outstanding performances came from Janet Cantwell, who placed third in the All Around with a 34.65 with broken Floor

She continued strongly, however, and at the evening finals tied for first on the Floor Exercise with Kathy Kolemainen and Debbie Dunkly of Springfield at 9.0, took seventh on Balance and Bar routines, and took firsts in Vaulting with the meet's high score of 9.35, and Beam with 9.3. Springfield's Kathy Kolemainen was second All around at 35.00, tying for first on Floor with a 9.0, and scoring 8.9 on Bars for third. Finally, Springfield freshman Bonnie Corrigan won the Unevens with a fine 9.125.

Head training coach Virginia Evans had an understated satisfaction about her that even verged on the edge of relaxation as she gave the girls a free day from practice for Monday, but of course they were all there as she knew they'd be, because now it's the Nationals, and what has been worked for by these girls every year since Junior High School from September until June, and at camps in the summer will not be given up for a minute by such determination.

Derderian Wins At Lexington

By MDC STAFF

Tom Derderian won the 11th annual Greek Community sponsored road race from Lexington to Cambridge on Sunday. He ran five minutes per mile for nine and a half miles to win this pre-marathon race posting a time of 46:53.

Peter Crisci finished 10th in the 200 plus field with a time of 49:21.

In this race that celebrates Greek Independance day Charlotte Lettis and five other women runners encountered heavy resistance on the part of AAU officials when they tried to run officially.

The AAU Chairman, Bob Cambell, of the New England association of the Amatuer Athletic Union tried to stop the women from receiving officials numbers, but the Greeks and the other runners out numbered him so he didn't attempt to rip the numbers off their shirts as he has done in the past.

The women ran with numbers and with the men. Ms. Lettis beat 150 men placing 59th with a time of 54 minutes, which is about a minute faster than Derderian ran the course on his first attempt.

Ms. Lettis was met at the finish and congratulated by Cambridge Mayor Barbara Ackerman, a woman who supports her attempts to open road races to all runners regardless of sex.

Phyliss Olrich, a Junior at UMass, also ran and had her share of words with the unenlightened AAU officials.

The next races these and other distance runners from the University run will be in Brighton on Saturday and in Florence on Sunday. The race in Florence will be open to all runners since the Western Mass AAU officials feel considerably less threatened by women runners, compared to the Boston based clip board carriers.

High Court Hears Reserve Clause

WASHINGTON AP - Baseball's reserve clause "extends to the minor leagues...the Mexican League...and even to Japan," the Supreme Court was told Monday.

"It's the most obvious restraint known to man," said former Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg.

But lawyers for professional baseball contended the game can't operate successfully without the reserve clause.

The Court, after hearing an hour-long argument, took under advisement former outfielder Curt Flood's suit against organized baseball. A decision which could cause reverberations in all professional sports is expected by the end of June.

Goldberg urged the Court to reverse a 1922 decision that exempted baseball from antitrust laws regulating interstate commerce.

"This court has passed on the reserve clause, I think, wrongly in two cases," Goldberg said.

"It violates the U.S. antitrust laws. It violates antitrust and common law of the states. It violates the 13th Amendment," which prohibits slavery.

In a brief, Goldberg referred to pitcher Vida Blue's contract problems with the Oakland Athletics.

"When he tried this year to raise his salary from $14,750 to the salary level of comparable players, the man who 'reserved' him refused to offer more than $50,000," Goldberg said.

"Indeed, his owner coupled the refusal with a threat only a baseball club owner could make: 'I won't trade him and I won't sell him. Either he accepts what we have offered or he's through in baseball.'"

Louis L. Hoynes, Jr., a New York lawyer, said the "real protagonist here is the Players Association" since it financed Flood's suit. But the lawyer, speaking as counsel for the National League, was sharply questioned by several justices when he said the reserve clause had been agreed upon by the association.

"You say a union that says to management that they can pick a man up and throw him out is a union," said Justice Thurgood Marshall.

"How is the union protecting Curtis C. Flood" Marshall asked.

Hoynes said the Players Association agrees with the owners that some form of a reserve clause is needed. But, he said, it is a matter for negotiation and not for the courts to decide.

"Congress has accepted the challenge of this court," Hoynes said. "Many bills have been introduced and many hearings have been held.

"The Doctor Delivers"

(Editor's Note: This is the second in a two-part series on Julius Erving's testimonial dinner Sunday night at Berkshire Dining Commons. Part Two-"The Doctor Delivers.")

By EARLE BARROLL

Julius Erving is a unique human being.

In an atmosphere where collegiate athletes in this nation have come under the stereotype "jock", Julius escaped unmarked, untarnished by the masses.

For it was more than just his basketball talents that led many to say that Julius Erving was one of the outstanding students at UMass during his three years on campus.

Sunday night John Betancourt recalled an incident last season when he and Erving were at the Newman Center prior to a basketball practice, the day after a big game performance by number 32:

"Julius and I were sitting down and talking before practice when some kid came up and said hello to Julius and told him what a great game he had. I just brushed it aside, gave the kid a funny look and told Julius to brush it off.

"Then I made a bet with him that between the Newman Center and the Cage as we walked over to practice there wouldn't be 25 people who said hello to him.

"And by the time we got over to the Cage over 50 people had said hi to him."

This says something about Julius Erving.

It was unlike the big guy to make himself known...it just happened that people recognized him and appreciated him for his efforts on the court.

And for every moment of pleasure and excitement the Cage experienced when Julius performed, there was a likewise moment of pleasure and excitement for those who knew him as Julius Erving...human being.

It was a moment like this that brought the 200 plus who attended his testimonial to a state of nirvana as he spoke and to their feet as he completed his delivery.

The following is The Doctor's Delivery:

"A couple of weeks ago I sat back and freed my mind of everything that was going on around me and came to the realization that basketball was my life.

"I pondered into the future and reminisced into the past like I never did before.

"If I had any anger when I was young I grabbed a ball and played basketball for hours. Perhaps a psychologist would say I used basketball as a escapism. But did I?

"When I was a freshman in high school I missed a game because I had a tooth pulled. But when I got home my hands and feet started to sweat as I was waiting to hear from a teammate how the team did.

"And it was here at the age of 14 that I knew I was really involved.

"As a senior I had to sit on the bench for part of a game because I missed a practice. Coach Ray Wilson (now assistant UMass basketball coach) stuck by his guns and didn't allow me in the entire first quarter. The point here is that it made me feel bad knowing that I could have been out there with the other players helping out.

"I remembered my first three years at UMass.

"In my freshman year coach Peter Broaca took seven strangers (he named them all) and shaped and molded us into the nucleus of the first and only undefeated basketball team I've ever been on.

"Just a couple of days ago I received a letter from coach Broaca and in it he said that coaching our freshman team was the greatest thrill of his life. And being part of that team was one of the greatest thrills of my life.

"The year after I joined coach Jack Leaman on the varsity (he named them all) and in my first game against Providence College we were winning at the half but I scored only three points. In the locker room Ray Ellerbrook looked at me and gave me the choke sign.

"It worked. We won 90-85 and I went on to break the rebounding record with 28 and the most points scored in one half with 24. Ray's a pretty smart cookie.

"The next year we came back after all that happened the year before and went 23-4. And with the help of coach Leaman and my buddies on the team I was fortunate to receive awards that justified the dedication and effort I put into my game.

"Yes, things were good at UMass, but I'm on the verge of bigger things.

"Basketball holds a special place in my heart. I've dedicated myself to all my God-given attributes.

"My desire is to make some kind of everlasting impression on the world of sports through basketball, as basketball has made an impression on me.

"It is with this that I accept these awards."

Redmen Pucksters Garner More Silver

By BILL BALLOU

As if the honor of winning the Division II Championship wasn't enough, the UMass varsity hockey team had more honors heaped on it this past weekend by the ECAC.

Three varsity hockey players and head coach Jack Canniff received awards from the ECAC honoring their individual accomplishments during the 71-72 season.

Named to the minor college East All-America team were Pat Keenan, P.J. Flaherty, and Brian Sullivan, while Canniff received Division II Coach of The Year honors.

Keenan, a junior from Weston, Ontario, centered the high scoring line of Dan Reidy, Jack Edwards and himself. After setting a couple of all-time Redmen scoring records last year as a sophomore, Keenan fired home 34 goals to go along with 25 assists this season, breaking his own records.

He had been in a six-game scoring drought just prior to the playoffs, but came through in the clutch with five goals in the three game set including a hat trick in the final vs. Buffalo.

Flaherty, the UMass goaltender and a senior from South Boston, finished up the season with a 2.71 goals against mark and one shutout. The epitome of the roving goaltender, he also picked up two assists on the year.

Flaherty started all but one contest throughout the season, and played every minute of the playoffs. In the post-season play he held St. Anselm's to three goals, Merrimack to two, and Buffalo to one, finishing up with a 2.00 mark for the playoffs.

Sullivan, from Hudson, is also a senior and served as the UMass captain throughout the season. He was paired with junior Don Lower on defense and these two were among the Division's most potent offensive defensive pair.

Sullivan's ability to move the puck and clear the UMass defensive zone complemented perfectly Lowe's hard-hitting style of defense.

After missing the last game of the regular season with stomach cramps, Sully came back in the playoffs to be instrumental in guiding the potent UMass offense while at the same time combining with Lowe, Bob Bartholomew, Al Nickerson and Bob Shilalie to keep the puck out of the Redmen net.

Vermont placed defenseman Ted Yeates and forward Pat Wright on the team and along with Colby forward Steve Self they round out the All-America selections.

Jack Canniff faced little competition for the title of Coach of the Year as he led the Redmen to their first ever divisional title.

Canniff, who believes in making the fewest number of moves possible, did that throughout the entire year, staying with virtually the same line-up from opener to the playoff final vs. Buffalo. His only change in personnel groupings was the promotion of Jim Coleman and Charlie Donovan to third line status, from their previous place on the fourth line.

In the five years that he has been at the UMass hockey helm, Canniff has led his team to better and better records. When he took over a pitiful program in 1967-68, Canniff could do no better than a 5-15 slate. But since he has been recruiting his own talent and installing his system of hockey, the only direction for Redmen hockey has been an upward one.

His success with the UMass program has not gone unnoticed in national circles, and rumor has Canniff headed for a Division I school like Boston College or Boston University.

Most of the speculation centers around Boston College, where Canniff starred in his undergrad days. There is alwasy the pull of "alma mater" and the good record BC has had through the years concerning the treatment of its coaches.

Canniff has not of yet revealed his future plans, but whatever they are he deserves the designation "Coach of the Year" and Keenan, Sullivan, and Flaherty are unquestionably All-Americas.

Chancellor Nominees Leaked

Bromery Reportedly Tied With N.Y. Prospect

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

According to informed sources, three names have been chosen by the Chancellor Search Committee for presentation to the Board of Trustees at their next meeting, Tuesday, March 28.

The names are: Acting Chancellor Randolph Bromery; Timothy Healy, Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs for the City University of New York; and Carlo Golino, Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs at the University of California at Riverside.

The Search Committee voted Monday night not to release the names of the three candidates, leaving any decision to do so to the Board of Trustees.

When asked to confirm this information, Glenn Gordon, Search Committee Chairman refused to comment on who the Committee nominated.

According to sources who requested anonymity, a straw vote was taken by the Committee Monday night to determine in what order the three names would be presented to the Board. The source indicated that Bromery and Healy from CUNY were tied for first place in the balloting. Healy received more first place votes, but overall, Bromery won largest number of points. This, according to sources, prompted the Committee to present the two names on an equal basis. Golino came in third.

Asked who he felt the Trustees would choose, a source replied, "It's a shoo-in for Bromery."

Asked whether or not he thought the Trustees would confirm a candidate Tuesday, Gordon felt that was improbable.

He said that while the Trustees wanted to reach a decision as early as possible, he didn't see how the Trustees could give full consideration to all three candidates within the short time they will hold the Committee's report before Tuesday's meeting.

Gordon refused to say anything at all about who the prospective candidates might be. "We at this point don't want to inhibit the Board in making their judgment."

Gordon went on to say that the Committee voted Monday night (at the time they made their final decision as to what candidates to present the Board of Trustees) not to disclose the names of the candidates. "We wanted to respect the confidentiality of the names from the point of view of the three candidates," Gordon did say that of the six names from which the Committee chose the final three, five were from off-campus and one from on-campus.

While recognizing that the Trustees originally asked for five names, Gordon doesn't feel the Board will reject the Committee's report because of the low number. "Three of them we like, three of them we don't. I think the Board will probably agree. The Committee has had it; we're exhausted. We could give them six names, but they wouldn't mean anything."

"I would be surprised and disappointed if they reject the report."

The reason for presenting the Trustees with three names Gordon said was that the Committee felt that only three of the final six names were qualified for the position.

The Search Committee originally had 70 names under consideration. This was narrowed down to 17, then 10. At that time, two of the candidates removed themselves from the list. From the eight names left, six were chosen for final consideration before presentation to the Trustees, Bromery, Healy and Golino were among the six.

The Search Committee was formed the week after Oswald Tippo's resignation as Chancellor in mid-October.

The Committee was composed of undergraduate students, chosen by the Student Senate, graduate students chosen by the Graduate Student Senate, faculty selected by the Faculty Senate, trustees selected by the Board of Trustees, and a dean chosen by the Dean's Council.

Muskie Beats McGovern, McCarthy In Illinois

CHICAGO (AP)-Sen. Edmund S. Muskie rolled past Eugene J. McCarthy to win their Illinois presidential popularity contest Tuesday night, and he led Sen. George McGovern in a separate primary election battle for Democratic National Convention delegates.

The senator from Maine was polling 63 per cent of the presidential preference vote against McCarthy, and he said it was a victory that foretold more to come.

McCarthy claimed satisfaction in his showing, and said he expected to keep campaigning through the primary season, to the convention and beyond.

Muskie's victory over the former Minnesota senator, who is not ranked among major 1972 contenders, had been expected.

The preferential primary stakes were entirely psychological, with Muskie seeking to regain political momentum for the crowded, crucial Wisconsin primary on April 4, where all the Democratic contenders will be running.

With 6,941 of the 10,858 precincts reporting, or 64 per cent, the race stood this way:

Muskie-510,715 votes, or 63 per cent.

McCarthy-302,654 votes, or 37 per cent.

The count was slower in the complex delegate selection contest, where the stakes were more tangible-160 votes for president. At least half of them were expected to go to uncommitted delegates led by Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley.

With 2,815 precincts counted, or 26 per cent, delegates committed to Muskie were in the lead for 45 convention posts, McGovern delegates led for 20, uncommitted entries for 55.

For Muskie in Illinois, the game was comeback after a fourth-place finish in the Florida primary a week ago.

Muskie said he had a clearcut Illinois victory to offset a Florida outcome he called inconclusive.

Muskie said the Florida primary, where he polled only 9 per cent of the vote, was not conclusive because the electorate was fragmented among 10 candidates while protest ballots carried Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace to victory.

He said that in New Hampshire's leadoff primary, where he won with 46.4 per cent of the vote, the standards by which his showing was measured were "set higher than I could have anticipated." Muskie said he knew in advance that he couldn't match the towering expectations set for him in that race on his New England home territory, where McGovern was his major rival.

The Maine senator was asked whether he has changed, is trying to project a new image.

"I'm not conscious of being new, but maybe I'm speaking more clearly," he said. Muskie said he now has "struck a responsive

Controversial Chicago D.A. Wins Upset Renomination

CHICAGO (AP)-Edward V. Hanrahan won the Democratic nomination for another term as Cook County Chicago state's attorney Tuesday, pulling off the biggest upset of Mayor Richard J. Daley's reign as Chicago Democratic leader.

Hanrahan, dropped for endorsement by Daley and other party leaders because of his indictment stemming from a police raid on a Black Panther apartment, challenged the Daley candidate in the Illinois primary and won decisively.

With 2,959 of the 5,243 county precincts reported, Hanrahan had 226,849 votes and the regular party choice, Raymond Berg, had 167,276. A third candidate, Donald Page Moore, conceded.

The Daley organization was supposed to pile up the vote for Berg in the Chicago precincts while Hanrahan and Moore were expected to battle for the suburban vote.

But Hanrahan rolled up margins in city wards where the alleged defection of precinct captains from Berg became a reality.

Hanrahan's triumph marks him as a major rival of Daley for leadership of the powerful Democratic organization, the first serious rival for Daley, 70, who was elected to an unprecedented fifth term last April.

At the same time, rebel Dan Walker, challenging Lt. Gov. Paul Simon-another Daley endorsee-for the party nomination for governor, was running narrowly ahead of Simon and threatening to pull a second upset.

Berg conceded defeat and said, "The best man won...I will support the Democratic party candidate."

In case your looking for this building, it is no longer standing, it is lying down. This picture was taken in the process of the destruction. Now there exists only a pile of wood. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton)

SOS Announces Statewide Conference

By CHRISTINE OLTHOFF

Joe Sylvia, chairman of SOS, announced formal plans last night for a one-day state-wide conference to be held at UMass on April 8.

Sylvia said 40 colleges and universities in Massachusetts have been invited to the conference.

The purpose of the conference will be to bring student representatives on campus in order to acquaint them with the Belchertown State School class-action suit, said Sylvia.

Hopefully these representatives, said Sylvia, will be instrumental in forming an SOS in their campus when they return home from the day's events.

Tenative speakers for the conference include UMass Professor Ben Ricci, president of the Belchertown Friends Association and the leading organizer of the suit against the State Department of Mental Health.

The suit charges that the state has been negligent in the care of residents at the Belchertown School.

Jim Shanks, Springfield Union staff reporter, is also scheduled to speak during the proceedings. Shanks is author of the Tragedy of Belchertown Series--a series of articles recently reprinted in the Collegian from the Union.

Attorney Beryl Cohen, former state Senator from Brookline, is also scheduled to speak at the conference. Cohen is now representing the 28 parents, who filed the suit in federal court against the state.

Three sub-committees of SOS have been formed. One is the Membership Drive Committee, which will set up a table in the Campus Center after vacation where interested students can sign up to join SOS.

There is also a committee composed of SOS members to work with the Concert Committee for joint fund raising efforts. The committee and SOS have made an agreement whereby each group has the option to share in the work and the profits in any fund-raising activity initiated by the other group.

The Student Support Committee--an SOS sub-committee--has collected 100 dollars through door-to-door fund-raising in the dorms.

This committee has divided the campus by dorm areas, fraternities, sororities and commuters, and needs students in each of these areas to talk to students for the purpose of gaining publicity for SOS and for collecting funds.

Robin Portman, chairman of the Student Support Committee, said students interested in this type of work should contact her for further information.

Kathy Freese said students interested in selling raffle tickets for the SOS fund-raising drive should immediately contact her.

Wood Labels Cuts Policy Interference

By MDC STAFF

After expressing confidence that some of the funds cut from the UMass budget for fiscal 1973 will be restored by the legislature, University President Robert M. Wood called them not only more than budget cuts, but interference "with educational policy."

Wood, speaking in his first weekly press briefing, stated that the Ways and Means Committee will be more lenient than some expect.

The conference covered topics ranging from faculty ratios, new positions, and tuition increases to termpaper business. The briefing was held on the telephone with the Collegian, Mass Media (the UMB newspaper) and WMUA.

As for further action on the tuition increase bills, Wood stated that they are still seeking information on sliding scale and deferred tuition bills. He said that his office must find where the other higher education segments are. He agreed that the state college trustees had weakened his position by endorsing a $100 per year tuition increase.

Wood said that he sees the Chancellor of Higher Education as a friend of the University. He also stated that "more money is needed to keep quality education going." He said current meetings with legislators are not deadlocked.

15.6 to one in Amherst and 17.6 to one in Boston were the figures Wood stated as the actual student faculty ratio if no restriction is made to the budget. He mentioned that the discrepancy between his figures and Governor Francis W. Sargent's figures were from the respective exclusion and inclusion of faculty at the experimental station in Waltham.

Wood condemned the termpaper industry, which has reportedly been growing strongly in Boston, as a dirty business. He stated the values of termpapers in the academic community and added that "common action" from the Boston area colleges will soon be forthcoming.

He indicated that the Trustees have not particularly reacted to the disruptions of the last two meetings. He added that the Trustees thought they have been open, and receptive to all sides of the several issues recently brought to them.

When queried, Wood said that no hearings have been set yet on the Frieda Salzman case.

Auto Pool Established To Serve Student Groups

By HUGH OWEN

The Student Senate recently voted to establish and fund a Student Senate Auto Pool which will serve Recognized Student Organization (RSO) groups in need of transportation.

In the past organizations such as the Drum and the Collegian had their own cars funded by the Senate. These cars remained idle when not used by the Drum and Collegian and were more than often unavailable for use when other groups were in need of them.

To alleviate these problems the Student Senate established an Auto Pool to provide vehicles to needy groups on a basis of priority. Organizations such as the Collegian, Drum, WMUA and Spectrum who have press and broadcasting deadlines to meet will be placed at the top of this priority list.

Other groups will be placed according to the disgression of a dispatcher who will handle the scheduling of the usage of the cars.

The Auto Pool will also provide regular servicing of the cars, whereas in the past the cars were only serviced when the need arose. In this way, it is hoped that the cars will remain in operating condition for a longer period of time.

Bids for two cars and one microbus will be received this summer and the vehicles should be purchased and ready for use for the fall semester.

Rental of the cars will be $0.10 per mile. This fee will be paid out of the Transportation Budget which the Student Senate allots to each RSO group in need of transportation.

Student Senator Skip Casper, in speaking of the Auto Pool, said, "We hope that by institutng an Auto Pool we can be assured of better usage of the Senate-owned cars and keep them for a longer period of time."

Muskie Takes Illinois Primary

chord" with the voters.

McGovern was in Washington. "We thought we could win 20 delegates, and I still think we will," said Frank Mankiewicz, campaign coordinator for the South Dakota senator.

None of the 38 delegates candidates entered in McCarthy's cause was leading. McCarthy said he didn't consider delegate contests very important anyhow.

On the Republican ballot, delegate candidates pledged to President Nixon were leading in 44 of the contests reported, and Nixon was expected to take all 48.

Muskie's preferential primary victory was a landslide by any standard, but it came over a less-than-formidable rival.

In a victory statement in Chicago, Muskie said, "We're going to keep on winning, through all the primaries, through the Democratic National Convention and across the entire nation next November.

"This is the message that the people of Illinois have just sent across the nation," the Maine senator said.

McCarthy, in his first campaign of 1972, staged an intensive and costly hunt for votes, spending about $250,000 to about match Muskie's outlay, and investing heavily in television advertising.

Furthermore, since McGovern wasn't entered in the preference poll, many Democrats who supported his delegates slate likely parlayed that with votes for McCarthy in the popularity contest.

On Illinois primary day, Muskie campaigned in Milwaukee and went to Cleveland for a private fund-raising dinner.

At a news conference there, he was asked whether there is any chance he will quit the race. "Pull out?" he retorted, "I'm the only candidate who has won anything."

McCarthy said in Chicago he was "quite content and satisfied" with his showing.

"We take assurance from the fact that between 37 and 40 per cent of the voters indicated they want a Democratic party which offers a significant choice on the critical issues which face this country," the former Minnesota senator said.

McCarthy said he intends to raise in Wisconsin the issues he raised in Illinois, where he accused Muskie of failing to take clear positions on topics of major concern to the voters.

"The people in exile have begun to return," said McCarthy, who began the challenge to former President Lyndon B. Johnson four years ago.

On a rainy election day, Republicans in droves crossed over to cast ballots in the Democratic primary.

State-wide, the switches appeared to be helping Muskie.

But the cross-overs spelled trouble for Daley and his Democratic organization.

Insurgent Daniel Walker was leading Lt. Gov. Paul Simon, Daley's choice for the Democratic nomination for governor.

And Edward V. Hanrahan won re-nomination as Cook County state's attorney, in the biggest upset of Daley's long reign as Chicago Democratic leader.

Primary At A Glance

CHICAGO (AP) — The vote totals in the Illinois Democratic presidential preference primary with 70 per cent of the 10,858 precincts reporting:

Housing Dominates Rents And Fees Meeting

By STEVE TRIPOLI

The Rents and Fees Committee called for state payments for dorm security, educational equipment in dorms, and a deficiency budget to cover this year's low occupancy rate as part of a thirteen point policy statement put before representatives of the Housing Office at the second of two meetings yesierday. The first meeting concerned proposed increases in the cost of meal tickets and the Campus Center Fee.

Last night's topic was housing, with Chuck Hampton of the Housing Office and a host of other administrators, including Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services Thomas Campion present.

After an opening discussion on the proposed telephone increases, in which Hampton explained that the service was "strictly a break even thing" in which students must pick up the cost, the topic turned to housing in a discussion which lasted nearly three hours.

Chairman Robert Chiller outlined some policy changes which the committee had come up with. They included:

1) Educational equipment for the dorms. The committee felt that since this equipment was used in classes held in the dorms, the state should pay for it as it does regular educational equipment. The equipment is presently paid for out of student rent money.

2) A deficiency budget (in which the State makes up the dificit) be sent to President Robert Wood and the state legislature. Chiller's rationale for this was that since the budget is needed to make up for low occupancy levels in the dormitories (which he claimed was management's fault and not the student's) the state should pick up the bill-not the students.

Pam Pepper of the committee also pointed out that the rent increases of last year were justified by the administration because they were to go to such things as renovation of the dorms, and the low occupancy level caused them to be diverted elsewhere-in effect billing the students for management's problem.

Vice Chancellor Campion expressed the hope that the committee would be willing to take steps to remedy the situation.

3) Security in the dorms be paid for by the State, not student rents. The committee's reason for this was that the students are generally forced to live in dorms, so security should be the University's responsibility. There was some disagreement between the committee and administrators as to whether they had been promised State money for security next year.

4) The committee proposed to Campion for his analysis, a possible plan to get more student janitors in dormitories. This is done with the understanding that there will be no layoffs among present personnel. There was disagreement again between committee members and administrators as to whether students would or could be able to take care of their own dorms.

5) That janitors and student janitors be under the supervision of Area Business Managers.

6) To keep a dorm open with student janitors and as little a room charge as possible for people whose financial aid had been cut.

7) A five year financial plan to transfer costs to the State for many of these expenditures.

8) That in dorms in which the State retains the titles renovations should be charged to the State.

9) That construction companies which fail to execute what they are here to do be sued.

10) A long range plan to make room and board optional to all.

11) A total investigation of the Physical Plant to start before the end of the semester.

12) A staff-student labor committee to be set up before the end of the semester.

The longest discussion of the night concerned the proposed rule that would make it impossible for 21 year olds to move off campus until they turned 21. The present rule allows students to move off any time in the academic year in which they will turn 21.

There was great dissension on this question, with Campion pointing out that the committee's position (against changing the rule) was not in keeping with their commitment to lower rents as far as possible (a change in the rule would slash about $40 per dormitory student from the increase).

The committee's position was that this solution was at the cost of the students once again, and they reiterated their position that students should not be made to pay for management's mistakes.

The last article of the night concerned the proposed charging of a $100 premium for single rooms. This was again the topic of some disagreement and no real answer to the problem was reached. It is still being considered.

The 7 A.M. morning meeting focused on meal ticket price increases and Campus Center fee increases, with Gerry Grady and Joel Stoneham representing Food Services and Campus Center Manager Terry Grinnan representing the C.C.

Stoneham of Food Services opened by explaining that the budget being presented was by no means the final draft of the 1973 budget. Grady then explained some of the financial aspects of the budget first proposed at last Thursday's meeting, and discussion turned to methods of raising revenue and cutting expenditures of the operation. Some suggested means of cutting corners included:

1) Allowing students to pay a $60-70 fee in order to cover Dining Commons expenses. Paying this fee would exempt them from the meal ticket requirement.

2) Exploring the possibilities of a long range plan that would provide for the employment of more students in the Commons.

C.C. Manager Grinnan next presented his case, in which he asks for a $5-10 increase in the Campus Center fee. He presented highlights of his projected 1973 budget as he had at last week's meeting and the committee decided that the only possibilities were in the five dollar raise or (preferably) no raise at all. The proposed $10 raise was "out of the question", in Chiller's words.

The committee was also concerned with a long range projection of a $100 Campus Center fee by 1975. They asked Grinnan to bring some kind of long term figures concerning this to his next appearance before the committee, and indicated that the $100 figure was outrageous, considering that the average Campus Center fee at other colleges is about $29.

The committee will continue to consider all increases until a final price is set on all of them.

Health System Chastised

By LUCILLE HRYNIEWICH

Ms. Robin Dizard, a teacher from Amherst, spoke at the Orchard Hill Women's Colloquium last night on the health system in the U.S. at present. Ms. Dizard revealed some of the elitist, sexist, and capitalistic aspects of the Health ystem.

She began claiming that people deplore the chaos of the health care system at present. In reality the U.S. health system is a highly organized big money maker she stated. Sixty-two billion dollars was spent in 1969 for health, 11% over 1968 and prices keep rising. The problems of hospitals, medical professionals, employees, and insurance and pharmaceutical companies were expressed.

Hospitals were described as monopolies that are given government subsidies. They appear as consolidations much like the oil companies as they have become conglomerates headed by Blue Cross Insurance Co. and medical schools. Blue Cross, begun in the depression to make sure hospitals were paid, has now become an exploitation of capitalism Ms. Dizard claimed.

Insurance companies reimburse the hospitals and drug fees. Since they are assured of being paid, they do not conserve on both hospital time or drug administration. There appears to be big money spent in the health system she said. As Forbes and Wallace referred to the hospital supplies and drugs stock, "This is glamour stock" which is steadily increasing in worth.

Health Pact 1970 stated that there is continued escalation of prices with continued depersonalized services. Ms. Dizard stated these depersonalized services especially affect oppressed groups.

The medical services reveal built-in racism and oppression. The poor people of the cities are used by interns for practice rather than the rich paying patient according to Ms. Dizard. Harlem is described as a "vast laboratory" where poor people are used as experimental risks. Also lower class people are rarely consulted by the doctor for their treatment, while educated people are more frequently.

She stated women also have problems with male doctors. She asserted since women in our society have been treated as objects, they find physicians are no less hung up than other men.

Gynecologists have performed mastectomies and hysterectomies without consulting the patient many times according to the speaker. Women's pains were also termed psychological many times when they were legitimate physical problems, according to Ms. Dizard.

Women were not only the largest receivers of care, but they also compose 75% of the hospital workers. They are strategically placed in the health system so they should be able to do something she said.

Their positions though are not equal in pay or number. Only 7% of doctors are women and this number is decreasing she stated. Seemingly backward countries in the near east have 9% women doctors.

Men, who comprise the positions of directors, and trustees make the decisions on the jobs, uniforms, and pay of hospital personnel Ms. Dizard commented. For the same technical work in the hospital, women receive 15% less than men. The speaker claimed nurses were many times given a role subordinate and subservient to men.

It was stated that doctors can expect to make two million dollars during a lifetime. Only dentists have a higher return for their education. The shortage of doctors is being filled by importing doctors from countries such as India and Taiwan which already have their own shortage.

Court Strikes One Year Residency Rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Tuesday opened the way to the ballot box for as many as 5.5 million Americans when it struck down Tennessee's one-year-residency rule and implied anything beyond 30 days may be unconstitutional.

Lengthy waiting periods are unnecessary to guard against fraud at the ballot box, and they pose an unconstitutional barrier to travel, Justice Thurgood Marshall said for a 6-1 court. All but a handful of states now require at least six-month's residency.

Marshall added there is no reason to suppose that a new resident has less knowledge of election issues than old residents and observed "obviously many longtime residents do not have any." Chief Justice Warren E. Burger stood alone in the dissent.

The decision climaxes the filing of waves of lawsuits across the country aimed at laws which some estimates say bar up to 8 per cent of otherwise qualified voters from filing every year.

Marshall said the constitutionally acceptable period to make sure only legitimate residents vote "is surely a matter of degree." But he said even a three-month rule is too long and that 30 days "appears to be an ample period of time for the state to complete whatever administrative tasks are necessary to prevent fraud."

In 1970, Congress prohibited waiting periods of more than 30 days for presidential and vice presidential elections. The court's ruling appears to apply a similar standard for state and congressional elections.

Since the sweeping decision finds even a three-month waiting period unjustified it apparently will have an impact on every state.

The Tennesse law was declared invalid earlier by a federal district court as a result of a suit brought by James Blumstein, an assistant professor of law at Vanderbilt University.

Justices Lewis F. Powell, Jr., and William H Rehnquist did not participate in Tuesday's decision because they took their seats two months after the case was argued.

The day was notable for the two freshmen justices however, in that they announced their first majority decisions for the court.

Rehnquist delivered a 6-3 ruling that it was harmless error for Florida prosecutors to use an incriminating statement by a co-defendant in a murder trial although he did not appear as a witness and could not be cross- examined.

Powell wrote a 6-3 decision defeating a government attempt to tax income which banks earn through insurance policies on the bank s borrowers.

In a fourth ruling, the court held a man cannot sue to stay out of the Army simply on the ground his draft board was wrong in classifying him 1A. This 4-3 decision was delivered by Blackmun.

In Brief...

But They Still Won't Go Down...

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Treasury Department reported Tuesday it is collecting more money from the tax system than previously estimated and thus will be borrowing less in the next few months.

Treasury officials said that in February the government collected $1 billion more than anticipated and so far this month, $500 million more than estimated.

Government Denies Berrigan's Charges

HARRISBURG, (AP)-The government today called "baseless" and "totally irrelevant" defense charges that a paid FBI informer entrapped the Harrisburg Seven conspiracy defendants to plot the kidnapping of White House aide Henry Kissinger.

Defense lawyer Leonard Boudin claimed use of the informer, Boyd Douglas Jr., constituted "provocation, instigation, entrapment, and indeed crime," and asked that the charges against antiwar priest Philip Berrigan and six others be dismissed.

24 Escape Cincinnati Jail

CINCINNATI, (AP)-The FBI joined the search Tuesday for 19 inmates still at large after a mass escape from the Hamilton County jail.

Although there was initial confusion as to how many prisoners fled the downtown jail Monday night, Chief Deputy H. D. Culler said 24 persons escaped. Of these, two men and three women were back in custody Tuesday.

Beard To Be Questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seven members of the Senate Judiciary Committee plan to question Dita Beard in her Denver hospital room Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, Sen. Philip Hart, D-Mich., said Tuesday.

A new report from doctors attending the ailing 53-year-old lobbyist for International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. said her health has improved sufficiently to allow longer interviews than had originally been planned.

Hart is chairman of a special subcommittee named to question Mrs. Beard about a memo attributed to her by columnist Jack Anderson.

The memo appeared to draw a connection between settlement of an antitrust suit against ITT and ITT's commitment to partially underwrite the cost of the Republican National Convention in San Diego this summer.

Mrs. Beard, hospitalized with a heart ailment, has denied she wrote the memo. ITT has produced a different memo it says she wrote the same day. This note does not mention the antitrust case.

A spokesman for the Committee chairman, Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., said both memos have been turned over to the FBI for what he called technical analysis.

Women May Not Be Draft Exempt

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Tuesday refused to exempt women from the draft in working on a proposed constitutional amendment guaranteeing women equal rights.

The vote was 73 to 18 in the first Senate floor action on the constitutional amendment already passed by the House.

"I believe if women want equal rights they should have them all the way," said Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill.

In effect, senators declined the advice of the Armed Services Committee chairman, Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., who said the women's right amendment would create "great doubt, chaos and confusion" with the draft and in the military.

Sen. Sam Ervin, D-N.C., proposed the draft exemption as an amendment to the women's rights measure. But he urged his colleagues to vote against it "if they believe in their heart that women should be drafted and sent into combat where they will be slaughtered and maimed by the bayonets, bombs, bullets, grenades, napalm and poison gas of the enemy."

Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., manager of the amendment, did not deny women might see combat duty.

"If the country needs them I see no alternative but to require their services," he said, and they "will answer the call."

However, Bayh said, women would be eligible for all service benefits and be assigned as commanders see fit, just as men.

Mothers could be exempted by federal law if the amendment passed, Bayh continued. And in any event, the number of women drafted and assigned to combat duty, if the draft continued, "would be significantly less than one per cent," he said.

This would be because some of them could not meet required physical tests such as doing push-ups.

The constitutional amendment would neek the approval of 38 state legislatures after two-thirds passage in the Senate.

Senators approved a women's rights amendment two years ago but the measure did not get through Congress.

Former Feds Uphold LIFE

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Two former federal investigators described as accurate Tuesday portions of a Life magazine article charging that the Nixon administration "seriously tampered with justice in San Diego."

Richard Huffman, a former special assistant to U.S. Atty. Harry Steward, said Steward prevented him from pursuing an investigation into alleged illegal use of Nixon campaign funds in 1968. Huffman, now chief deputy district attorney of San Diego County, said Steward caused a subpoena issued for a key witness to be withdrawn.

David Stutz, a former Internal Revenue Service agent in San Diego, said "Washington" refused to allow him to testify in the bribery trial last year of the San Diego mayor and other local officials.

Huffman said the Life article "seems to be essentially correct as to those things with which I'm acquainted." He was a deputy state attorney general appointed as special assistant to Steward and to the U.S. Attorney in Los Angeles.

Life said Steward squelched an investigation that political contributions for the Nixon-Agnew campaign had been shuffled illegally through an advertising company controlled by C. Arnholt Smith, identified as a longtime friend and financial ally of President Nixon.

The magazine also contends that the administration delayed a grand jury investigation of tax fraud charges against John Alessio, a San Diego businessman and associate of Smith, until the statute of limitations had almost run out.

Steward issued a statement Monday denying the Life charges but refused to answer reporters' questions.

Four Bombs Blast Londonderry

BELFAST (AP)-Four bomb blasts rocked Londonderry Tuesday and guerrilla gunmen fought a two-hour battle with British troops that the army called the city's biggest confrontation since street fighting began in August 1969.

The bombings were preceded by warnings, permitting the areas to be evacuated, but police said 25 persons were hospitalized with shock or minor injuries. No casualties were reported in the gun battle.

The gunmen ambushed a British army squad Tuesday night deep inside the Bogside district. Army reinforcements were ferried in by helicopter at the height of the shooting.

Two of the bombs were 100-pound gelignite charges placed inside parked cars. Both cars had been left where the explosions could do the worst possible damage toshops and offices.

The third bomb, estimated at 50 pounds of gelignite, was dumped at a railroad depot.

The fourth, placed in a parked car, wrecked an electric equipment showroom and damaged other stores along Strand Road.

The bombings contrasted with an incorrect tip given authorities Monday, with disastrous results. The guerrillas warned of a bomb placed on one Belfast street, and crowds streamed to a nearby street where a 100-pound gelignite charge went off in a parked delivery truck, killing six men and wounding 150 other persons.

Security forces blamed the blasts on outlaws of the Irish Republican Army, which is battling 15,000 British troops in a bid to join the north with Roman Catholic Ireland to the south.

Blame for the Belfast explosion-which scythed through Donegall Street packed with lunchtime shoppers-has not been fixed.

The IRA's Marxist Official Wing has denied responsibility. Its militant nationalist Provisional wing so far issued only a blunt no comment.

Northern Ireland's prime minister, Brian Faulkner, completed a final round of talks with his parliamentary Unionist party colleagues before flying to London to hear details of Prime Minister Edward Heath's peace initiative for the province.

A statement after the meeting said Faulkner's party had repeated its support for "his determination to maintain Northern Ireland as an integral part of the United Kingdom and to uphold and defend the constitution and Parliament."

Details of the package will reportedly include the phasing out of internment of suspected IRA men, a bigger Catholic voice in Ulster's government and possible moves toward a United Ireland.

An injured woman is carried from the scene of Monday's bomb explosion in Belfast's Donegall Street. Latest figures list six persons killed and 114 injured. (AP)

IRS Asked To Investigate Possible Price Violations

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Cost of Living Council has asked the Internal Revenue Service to look for possible price violations by 17 large firms that have failed to file required reports with the government.

At the same time, government officials said Tuesday that 13 large merchants have rolled back prices voluntarily after violations were found earlier during a similar investigation. They include the S.S. Kresge retail chain and the distributor for Yamaha motorcycles.

The moves are part of what officials say is a continually escalating attempt to enforce wage and price controls strictly.

They say also an indirect effect might be to reinforce voluntary compliance. "I don't mind scaring these guys a little," one official said.

The 17 newly investigated firms which officials declined to name, are mostly large manufacturers. None has sought permission for price increases or pledged not to raise prices. And all are apparently late in filing required quarterly reports with the Price Commission.

Richard B. Cheney, the Cost of Living Council's enforcement overseer, said in an interview that this silence makes him suspect the firms may be trying to raise prices illegally.

The news comes one day after Price Commission officials disclosed the first results of a tentative survey showing as many as 10 per cent of large manufacturers and merchants may possibly be liable for price rollbacks.

A tentative sampling of 160 quarterly reports showed apparent increases in profit margins, which are forbidden. Chairman C. Jackson Grayson Jr. said the commission would order rollbacks if the increases turn out to be illegal. But he said the staff is investigating the possibility that the increases are due to arithmetical errors or allowable seasonal variations.

Grayson, Cheney and other officials said in interviews that they are convinced the vast majority of Americans are complying with wage and price regulations without government coercion.

But at the same time they conceded that if the government makes only a halfhearted attempt to catch the cheaters, or even appears to go easy on them, others might be tempted to try cheating too.

Lawyer Loses

BOSTON (AP)-A New Bedford lawyer has lost his court appeal over being denied his driving license because he wouldn't give his Social Security number.

The state Supreme Court Tuesday ruled in favor of the Registry of Motor Vehicles which had refused to renew Louis Ostric's driving license in 1969 when he declined to submit his Social Security number.

Ostric contended the number was a personal matter, and the law requiring him to submit it was an invasion of privacy.

Justice R. Ammi Cutter in the decision, said the registry use of Ostric's number "may be conveniently ascertained in the interest of sound motor vehicle regulations and public safety."

Nixon Threatens Petty Bureaucrats

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon said Tuesday that if "petty bureaucrats" fail to cooperate in mounting a coordinated federal antidrug program, "heads will roll."

Nixon used the strong language in off-the-cuff remarks as he signed into law the Drug Abuse Office and Treatment Act of 1972-a measure that won unanimous passage in both the Senate and the House.

While his East Room audience cheered, Nixon said the new Special Action Office for Drug Abuse Prevention, directed by Dr. Jerome Jaffe, must coordinate the activities of 13 federal agencies involved in countering the drug program.

Declaring that in some agencies "petty bureaucrats seeking credit" are more interested in empire-building than in doing the work at hand, Nixon said he is making Jaffe responsible "for knocking heads together."

If tha fails to produce full coperation, he added, "then heads will roll."

A sizable bipartisan congressional delegation witnessed the ceremony. It cheered anew when Nixon said he had received personal commitment from visiting Turkish Prime Minister Nihat Erim to assist in international efforts to curb illicit drug traffic to the United States.

The President said Erim told him at a morning conference at the White House "that the present Turkish government is totally committed to stopping the growing of the opium poppy and totally committed" to doing its part in combatting the smuggling of drugs.

Under an American-developed program, Turkish opium growers will be subsidized-to halt poppy cultivation and devote their lands to the production of substitute cash crops. Opium is the base for heroin.

The President, who flew to New York Monday to inspect law-enforcement activities there in the drug area, said enforcement efforts have produced a scarcity of the drug, with prices rising and quality declining.

Jaffe's office was created last summer by presidential order "with the responsibility for overseeing all federal programs-excluding law enforcement, international diplomacy and intelligence gathering-related to the control of drug abuse."

The measure also authorizes greater outlays for federal financing of drug treatment, rehabilitation and prevention programs.

For the 1973 fiscal year that begins July 1, federal funds of $611 million are authorized-$246 million more than the amount budgeted prior to passage of the bill.

Ecologists Win Big Case

WASHINGTON (AP)-In a major test case that could affect hundreds of projects, environmental groups have won a court injunction requiring an environmental-impact study on a government-aided stream-channelization project.

Stream channelization is a widespread practice, often conducted under the auspices of the U.S. Soil Conservation Service, to widen, deepen or straighten stream beds for better control of water flow.

Environmental groups have argued that it can damage or destroy valuable aspects of local watersheds including fish populations and plant life.

They took their case to a federal district court in North Carolina last November after the Soil Conservation Service, an agency of the Agriculture Department, decided it did not have to prepare an environmental-impact statement for the Chicod Creek Watershed Project in Pitt and Beaufort Counties, North Carolina.

In a decision dated March 15 and made public here Tuesday by one of the environment groups, District Judge John D. Larkins Jr. ruled that an environmental-impact statement is required and must be submitted within 30 days.

He issued an injunction blocking federal action on the project until the statement is filed with the President's Council on Environmental Quality and is circulated for comment in compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

'The Art Of Getting Your Own Way'

WASHINGTON (LNS) -- "Conventions all over America are bought all the time by the business communities, and everyone in this room knows it," steamed Senator Roman Hruska (R. Neb.), exasperated after two weeks of hearings about the $400,000 ITT promised for the Republican National Convention in exchange for comfortable settlement of an anti-trust suit. The Senate hearing room broke up, laughing in embarrassment. It was like a scene from The Emperor's New Clothes.

For two weeks Washington has become embroiled under what may be the really big scandal of the Nixon administration (as opposed to an atrocity like the air war over Indochina) and a juicy campaign issue for the Democrats. And Nixon with all his innate and well-practiced public relations abilities may have a hard time pulling out of this one. (But then Nixon managed to turn another juicy campaign issue in 1952 about shady campaign contributions from businessmen into his grandstand play Checkers speech where he dragged out his wife Pat and her "respectable Republican cloth coat", his two little daughters and their dog Checkers.)

It all started when syndicated columnist Jack Anderson printed a memo in his column written by Dita Beard, the chief Washington lobbyist for ITT, to W.R. Merriam, the head of ITT's Washington office. It talked about "our noble commitment"--that is $400,000 that ITT agreed to put up to guarantee that the city of San Diego would get the Republican National Convention (that means that if Republicans couldn't raise enough money locally, ITT, through a subsidiary--Sheraton Hotels--would pay the difference, up to $400,000).

You see, Nixon desperately wanted the Convention to be in San Diego. He has called the city "my luck city"-- conservative San Diego County and equally reactionary neighboring Orange County gave Nixon his biggest victory in the country. More than half the amount that he won by came from these two counties. So, though the city of San Diego wasn't all that excited about having what they expected to be a repeat of Chicago 1968 on their home territory, they started getting into it when the White House put the screws on.

At the same time all of this was happening, Richard McClaren, head of the anti-trust division of the Justice Department, was looking into ITT's recent acquisition of three companies--the Canteen Corporation, a food-vending service; the Grinnel Corp., a water sprinkler manufacturer; and the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. McClaren is hardly anti-capitalist. In fact, before he joined the government he was a lawyer defending the major corporations his department was supposed to prosecute. But he seemed to take his job more seriously than most Nixon-men and made a couple of tries to prosecute big corporations for gobbling up small ones and expanding at an amoeba like rate. In at least two other cases with ITT, McClaren tried to prevent mergers with other companies. Both times he was overruled by Nixon's candidate for Attorney General Richard Kleindienst, then Assistant Attorney General (after ITT lobbyist turned on the pressure at the White House).

In 1969, after he was overruled in an ITT merger, he threatened to resign. In fact many people wonder at the speed he was recently slipped into the judgeship of resigning Judge Julius J. Hoffman in Chicago. Magoo offered to stay into the spring, but he was practically pushed off the bench in an effort to get McClaren in.

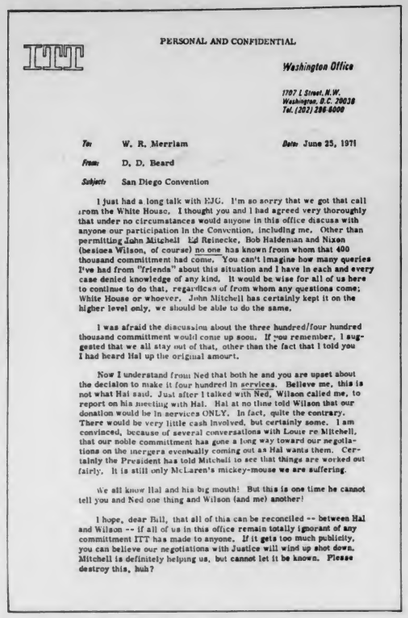
Anyway, McClaren was putting together a case against ITT's newest acquistions. At the same time ITT was sending out its stream of professional lobbyists--like Dita Beard--whose main job is to pressure government officials and who makes over $50,000 a year for her efforts. Corporation executives started making phone calls and visits. For them this is not conspiratorial, in some cases it's just meeting with friends on their first off hours--Kleindienst lives next door to an ITT executive and claims that it was merely a neighborly chat that persuaded Kleindienst that he should talk to some ITT people to hear their predictions about how the whole economy would crumble if the merger was stopped.

It was Hartford Fire Insurance ITT was particularly interested in. Hartford brings in $1 billion to ITT and when the merger was approved it became the biggest merger in U.S. history. According to arguments that were supposedly used, if the merger didn't take place it would damage the corporation's credit rating which would eventually have "some indirect negative effect upon ITT's balance of payments contributions."

Dita Beard's memo is clearly up front about the whole agreement. Her last sentence is "Please destroy this, hugh?" She cautions Merriam that the agreement is one only known at the upper levels: "Other than permitting John Mitchell, Ed Reinecke (Lieutenant Governor of Calif.), Bob Haldeman (Assist. to Nixon), and Nixon (besides Wilson, of course) (U.S. Rep. from the San Diego area) no one has known from whom that $400 thousand commitment had come." Someone had talked to a lower level assistant at the White House about it and she was obviously worried. After all "John Mitchell has certainly kept it on the higher level only, we should be able to do the same...If it gets too much publicity you can believe our negotiations with the Justice Department will wind up shot down. Mitchell is definitely helping us, but cannot let it be known."

When Anderson's story broke, the Senate Judiciary Committee had just approved Kleindienst's appointment as Attorney General (it then had to go to the Senate for approval). Even with Kleindienst's record--a powerful advocate of wire-taps, formulator of the government's Mayday strategy, one of the designers of Washington's anti-crime bill (no-knock, etc.), advocate of preventive detention--none of the liberals on the Committee felt any of Kleindienst's views would make him unacceptable as Attorney General. After all, said Senators Kennedy, Bayh, Tunney, etc., the president has a right to select his own cabinet.

The first question to come out of people's mouths after the memo came out was "Where is Dita Beard?" Anyone who read the memo realized that she must have been on ITT's shitlist because not only did Anderson have the memo (which he could have gotten in the same way he got the Bangladesh Pentagon Papers) but quotes from her outlining the meetings that took place between the government and ITT officials, her talks with Mitchell and his agreement with the plan to drop the suit against ITT.



Well Dita Beard was nowhere to be found. She told Bob Wilson, the Calif. Congressman who was a close friend as well as a participant in the $400,000 agreement that "where I'm going, they won't be able to find me, and I won't be able to talk to them." According to Wilson, she said she'd "been up to New York and ITT was putting her on a leave of absence, and that she was going to get out of town." Soon after that ITT shredded up her papers regarding the case.

When the mystery woman was found she was in a Denver hospital recuperating from heart trouble suffered on the plane on her way over. Her condition has been so fragile that she wasn't able to see reporters never mind testify at the hearings.

So the hearings went on without her at the beginning concentrating on tearing Dita Beard and her reliability down. "The reputation of Mrs. Dita D. Beard is being fed through the shredder, just like her files..." said one Washington columnist. "I smell blood," said one government worker who attended one of the hearings.

Her doctor and her former friends like former Ky. Gov. Louie Nunne went on into excrutiating detail about how she drank heavily, "had mental lapses" and was "mad and disturbed" when she wrote the memo. The doctor and his wife at later turned out were under investigation by the Justice Department for falsyfying Medicare bills. He visited the Justice Department both before and after his trip to Denver.

In the meantime, Kleindienst, Mitchell, McClaren, various ITT officials, Nunne and many of the participants involved paraded in front of the hearings. Kleindienst chain-smoked, McClaren blew up a few times (under even the firm but polite questioning of John Tunney). ("I think it's absolutely outrageous the way these committe proceedings are going. There was no hanky-panky about it!"). Mitchell absolutely denied that his meetings with ITT people had anything to do with the anti-trust settlement.

Subject: San Diego Convention

I just had a long talk with EJG. I'm so sorry that we got that call from the White House. I thought you and I had agreed very thoroughly that under no circumstances would anyone in this office discuss with anyone our participation in the Convention, including me. Other than permitting John Mitchell Ed Reinecke, Bob Haldeman and Nixon (besides Wilson, of course) no one has known from whom that 400 thousand commitment had come. You can't imagine how many queries I've had from "friends" about this situation and I have in each and every case denied knowledge of any kind. It would be wise for all of us here to continue to do that, regardless of from whom any questions come; White House or whoever. John Mitchell has certainly kept it on the higher level only, we should be able to do the same.

I was afraid the discussion about the three hundred/four hundred thousand commitment would come up soon. If you remember, I suggested that we all stay out of that, other than the fact that I told you I had heard Hal up the original amount.

Now I understand from Ned that both he and you are upset about the decision to make it four hundred in services. Believe me, this is not what Hal said. Just after I talked with Ned, Wilson called me, to report on his meeting with Hal. Hal at no time told Wilson that our donation would be in services ONLY. In fact, quite the contrary. There would be very little cash involved, but certainly some. I am convinced, because of several conversations with Louie re Mitchell, that our noble commitment has gone a long way toward our negotiations on the mergers eventually coming out as Hal wants them. Certainly the President has told Mitchell to see that things are worked out fairly. It is still only McLaren's mickey-mouse we are suffering.

We all know Hal and his big mouth! But this is one time he cannot tell you and Ned one thing and Wilson (and me) another!

I hope, dear Bill, that all of this can be reconciled -- between Hal and Wilson -- if all of us in this office remain totally ignorant of any commitment ITT has made to anyone. If it gets too much publicity, you can believe our negotiations with Justice will wind up shot down. Mitchell is definitely helping us, but cannot let it be known. Please destroy this, huh?

Indian Affairs Cutting Back

PINE RIDGE RESERVATION, S. Dakota (LNS)--"A new era for the American Indian"--one in which "the Indian future is determined by Indian actions and by Indian decisions." So Nixon promised in 1970.

In December of 1971, however, he ordered reductions in the federal payroll, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs began cutting back on teachers and other school personnel. The Oglala Sioux on Pine Ridge Reservation responded by conducting a survey which showed that any cutbacks would destroy the already inadequate educational program.

In protest, parents and students at reservation schools wrote complaints to their Senators and Congressmen.

Several weeks later, Robert Usher, an Interior Department investigator showed up at Pine Ridge and began questioning teachers, administrators, parents, and students.

The excuse for the probe was told to N.Y. Post columnist Jack Anderson by James Hall, an Interior Department official. "Several" of the Indians letters had been mailed in postage-paid government envelopes.

Panama: Stars And Stripes Forever

It is October 11, 1971. General Omar Torrijos Herrera addresses a crowd of over 200,000 supporters, saying the time may be here "for one generation to offer its lives" to secure the next generations their freedom. "What people can bear the humiliation of seeing a foreign flag planted in the very heart of its nation?"

The scene is the U.S.-controlled Canal Zone in Panama. The man speaking is not from a small leftist organization--he is the head of the Panamanian government. This is the context of the latest round of negotiations between the U.S. and Panama for sovereignty over the area. This is the beginning of yet another crack in the U.S. empire's control over Latin America.

In 1821, Panama became part of what was then called La Gran Colombia, an area which included Venezuela, Ecuador and Colombia. In 1903 the Heran-Hays Treaty gave the U.S. the right to build a canal in the Territory it now occupies. But the Senate of the Gran Colombia rejected this treaty. To get around this hitch in its imperialist plans, the U.S., under the direction of Teddy Roosevelt, instigated a rebellion, and sent in U.S. army troops which "aided" the Panamanian oligarchy to secede from Gran Colombia.

Panama's "independence" was proclaimed on Nov. 3, 1903. Three days later Panama was recognized by the U.S. The door was opened and the Treaty for the Canal was signed by the new government.

The construction of the Canal was begun on the new U.S. territory: 500 square miles of Panamanian land. The building of the Canal was carried out in the great tradition of U.S. labor policies--blacks from Jamaica and neighboring islands formed the majority of the work force. It is estimated that over 20,000 blacks died during the construction of the Canal, many from yellow fever, a tropical disease.

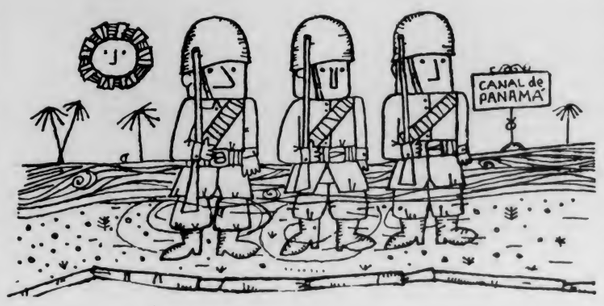
According to the Treaty, the U.S. rents the land from the government of Panama. The rent is now $1.9 million a year while the revenue from the Canal totals over $100 million a year in operations charges which go directly to the United States. While this profit is an important factor in the U.S. interest in the area, it is not the only reason for the continued U.S. domination of the Canal Zone.



Strategically, the Canal is the door to Latin America, and as such it has become a center for the U.S. military and economic control of the entire hemisphere. The Zone houses the infamous counterinsurgency (counter-guerrilla) training school where U.S. experts instruct Latin American military men in the latest methods of repressing revolutionary movements within their respective countries. It is here that the forces who stalked Che Guevara in Bolivia were trained.

This territory is also the home for a number of U.S. military bases and missile-launching emplacements (conveniently facing the Carribean and Cuba). Just this year, a new U.S. installation was set up in the area. The U.S. aerospace Cartographic and Geodetic Service established a base in the Canal Zone for a photo mapping project. This project covers 88,000 square miles which include Ecuador, Colombia and the border of Argentina and Chile.

Photo mapping, as we know from the war in Vietnam, is crucial for counter-guerrilla activities--it provides the repressive forces with the knowledge of the terrain that the guerrillas already have. It is no coincidence that this "scientific" project was set up at a time when rural guerrilla warfare is on the upsurge again--especially in Colombia.

Panama is also important for the multinational corporation and for international finance. Old friends like the First National City Bank, Chase Manhattan, and the Bank of America have all gathered in the capital city in order to take advantage of Panamanian laws. These laws do not tax foreign deposits, provide no restrictions on interest rates, and do not tax profits of firms located inside Panama but which trade exclusively with other countries.

The Zone itself has no export levies, no customer duties and no processing taxes. Cheap labor should not be forgotten either. A pamphlet the government puts out says, "Well-educated, bilingual, trained personnel can be employed for most office categories at salaries 50% less than salaries in the U.S."

Over the past decade, the Panamanian people's struggle for control of their own land has been increasing steadily. In 1964 there was a large student demonstration during which the U.S. flag over the Canal was torn down. The demonstrators were met by U.S. military men who killed 27 people and injured over 700.

Since that time, the U.S. has relied heavily on CIA activities to try to regain control of the situation. In 1969, while Torrijos was in Mexico, the CIA engineered a coup by several army men. Upon Torrijos' return the government was restored and the men were denounced as CIA agents. In 1970, these same three men "escaped" from jail and were given asylum in the area of the Zone and later were flown back to the states. In June of 1971, there was an abortive attempt on the part of the CIA to have Torrijos assassinated.

Despite this series of attempts to crush it, Panamanian resistance has grown stronger and stronger. While a U.S. State Department memo states that "Continued U.S. control and defense of the existing canal are non-negotiable U.S. requirements in a new treaty," the people and the government of Panama seem to be saying--no treaty.

It is difficult to assess exactly what will happen in the Canal Zone. While still very important for the U.S. in the other areas that were mentioned, the Canal itself has become less so with the increase in freight shipment by air.

Strategic control of the Zone still remains an important issue. If the Panamanian government refuses to give in, the question is simply what course of action will the U.S. government take. It has been seven years since the U.S. landed troops in the Dominican Republic. Will the Panamanians be met by the same U.S. military force?

Lewisburg Prisoners Strike

LEWISBURG, Pa. (LNS)--The prisoners at Lewisburg Federal Penitentiary began a work stoppage on February 17 to protest the conditions they are forced to live and work under. For two weeks, almost all of the prison's 1,500 inmates participated.

The inmates are demanding: a federal minimum wage; no slave labor.

The end to racist attacks on black and Latin prisoners.

Legal counsel on all institutional procedures; due process in all areas that may result in punishment (solitary, loss of good time, and transfers).

Decent housing; an end to overcrowding and housing up to national and state standards.

Abolish segregation (solitary).

Uniform parole standards; legal counsel at all hearings, automatic parole after 1/3 of the sentence is served, decentralized parole boards instead of the eight-man parole board in Washington that exists today.

When the strike began, the prisoners elected a strike committee to negotiate with Warden Noah Alldredge. (The committee was composed of 50% blacks, 35% whites, and 15% Puerto Ricans--the same makeup as the prison.) At first the prisoners demanded no reprisals, access to the media, reinstitution of visiting rights, legal representation at the negotiating sessions, and recognition of the strike committee before they would publicize the demands.

Alldredge threw most of the committee members into segregation, the rest of the inmates in 24-hour lockup, and continued suspension of visiting rights. One inmate was stabbed, and at least one was beaten.

After isolating the strike committee, the warden was able to convince several hundred inmates to return to work, but the others are still on strike, as are prisoners at Atlanta Prison (Georgia), Danbury (Connecticut), and Sommer State (Connecticut).

25,000 Pickles Planned

SAN DIEGO (LNS)--Over 200 members of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee picketed the Republican Convention headquarters in San Diego on March 16. One of the supporting groups at the demonstration was the San Diego Convention Coalition.

The day-long picket was called because of the recent move by Peter Nash, general counsel for the National Labor Relations Board and Nixon appointee, to get an injunction blocking the farm workers from using the secondary boycott.

This action came as a part of a nationwide action directed at the Republican Party who the farm workers feel is behind this latest attempt to stop their organizing. Farm workers are planning to continue focusing attention on the GOP. Carlos Legrette, a spokesperson for the farm workers, recently stated that upwards of 25,000 farm workers would be on hand next summer to protest during the GOP convention.

Take A Break

Stop! Take three steps backwards and don't think about any by-laws until after vacation. Yes, we're talking to both the SUG Board and the Administration about their current dispute over hiring and firing power on Campus Center management personnel.

It seems that both sides are presently becoming too emotional in this affair. We say take off from this problem until after vacation. When we return after Easter, both sides can sit down and begin anew; minds clear, ready to work out a solution.

No one will have to get upset over how much coverage one side or the other gets in the Collegian or WMUA. Both sides will sit down with each other and work out a by-law suitable for both of their purposes.

Students feel that they should have control over the management of those operations for which they pay. This is certainly a natural feeling. However, the administration is the one responsible to the trustees and the state for how the CC is run.

Both sides should listen to the others wishes and respect their feelings. Much emotionalism and little constructive work has come of the current disagreement.

If a moratorium of one and a half weeks is not declared, irreparable damage to the credibility of both sides will be done, and the feeling of goodwill among them will cease to prevail.

School Of Education TPPC

Last year the School of Education affirmed its commitment to improving the preparation of teachers by creating a Teacher Preparation Programs Council (TPPC). TPPC was granted broad powers and resources to encourage all Center, faculty, and graduate students to become involved in creating an array of new and innovative alternative teacher preparation programs.

This year TPPC is currently re-evaluating and adding to its alternative programs system for the 1972-73 year. Last year sixteen programs, including an "Individualized" plan-your-own program were offered. For the coming year about twenty programs are planned, although the "Individualized Program" will be dropped.

This dropping of the "Individualized Program" is representative of policy changes TPPC is making due to the pressure of an overabundance of teachers in the job market. This teacher glut means that educators can no longer be satisfied with preparing candidated just for certification. Prospective teachers must be provided with a wide range of educational experiences so that they are more realistically prepared for alternative teacher roles. One way TPPC hopes to achieve this goal is by channeling prospective teachers into more specific programs and to do away with the large pool of uncommitted students in "The Individualized Program."

Another result of this teacher glut is that the School of Education is substantially reducing its number of undergraduate education majors. Since admissions are tight and may get tighter, TPPC urges students presently enrolled as education majors to check now at the School of Education's Undergraduate Advising Office (Room 121) to see that they are on the list of majors. As a safeguard against over enrollment, TPPC requires elementary education majors to gain admittance to the School of Education before joining a teacher preparation program.

Prospective secondary teachers also concern TPPC. If not already involved in a departmental program, secondary students are encouraged to investigate alternative teacher preparation programs. However, due to limited enrollment TPPC requires secondary students to consult with departmental advisors before applying to programs.

TPPC is encouraging all students who are interested in next year's programs to come and find out about them. On Tuesday, April 18th of Marathon Week each undergraduate Teacher Preparation Program will present an introduction to its program. Additional specific information will be available during interviews and all admissions to programs must be completed before the preregistration period.

The programs, of which there are about twenty, cover a wide range of interests. Alternatives vary from Early Childhood education, Outward Bound, Urban Education, Special Education to Alternative Schools. In all the programs the main aim is to more closely combine theory and practice. Internships, field experiences, tutorials, and pre-practicums are an integral part of all programs because agreement is virtually unanimous that the greatest learning takes place in off-campus classroom experiences.

Remember: TPPC's new policy requires all prospective teachers to gain entrance to a teacher preparation program other than the "Individualized Program." To find out all about these programs, come to the School of Education, Tuesday, April 18th. Make a note of it. Write it down.

Presidential Aptitude Test

WASHINGTON--If there is one thing America prides itself on, it's that anyone in this country can grow up and run for President of the United States. Nothing has proved how true this is more than New Hampshire and Florida primaries.

It is quite possible that there are thousands, perhaps even hundreds of thousands of people who would like to run for the Presidency. But they are not sure if they have the qualifications. Therefore, as a public service, I am printing the first presidential candidate aptitude test. If you can pass this test with a score of at least 65, then you are as worthy of running for this office as any of the candidates who have announced so far.

Get a pencil, and no cheating, please.

First, multiple choice.

1--You and your wife have been attacked by a hard-hitting, unscrupulous newspaper publisher. You (A) ignore him and go about your business; (B) attack him on TV; (C) cancel your subscription to his paper; (D) break down and cry in front of his building.

2--You are asked where you stand on the issue of school busing. You reply (A) my record speaks for itself; (B) I am not for busing or against busing, but for quality education; (C) schoolchildren should not become political footballs; (D) I will support the Constitution of the United States, at least until I am elected President.

3--You are addressing a B'nai B'rith dinner and are asked what you would do about unemployment in the United States. You reply that you would (A) give Phantom jets to Israel; (B) make the Suez Canal an international waterway; (C) send the Sixth Fleet to Haifa; (D) attend the wedding of Moshe Dayan.

4--You are asked to speak at a St. Patrick's Day communion breakfast and the question of Social Security is raised. You suggest (A) breaking off all relations with Great Britain; (B) giving Phantom jets to the IRA; (C) sending American troops to Belfast; (D) you reveal for the first time that you had an Irish grandmother.

Now for some mathematical problems. You have five minutes to solve each problem.

1--You are trying to raise money for your party to hold its national political convention. A large corporation, which has an important case pending in the Justice Department, offers you $400,000 to underwrite it. But you need $600,000. How much would another large corporation, also having trouble with the Justice Department, have to offer you to make up the difference?

2--Your campaign debts include $1 million owed to the telephone company, $800,000 to the airlines, $100,000 to the printer, $50,000 to your advertising agency and $2,000 to your make-up man. How many hundred- dollar-a-plate tickets would you have to sell to lobbyists to pay off your debts if you win the Presidency? How many years will it take you to pay off the debts if you lose?

1--Pizza	A--Jewish vote
2--Sauerbraten	B--Youth vote
3--Tamales	C--Italian vote
4--Egg foo young	D--German vote
5--Knishes	E--Mexican vote
6--Pot	F--Chinese vote

True or false

1--It would be impossible to win with a black Vice President.

2--Women have too many physical and psychological problems to be given positions of responsibility.

3--"Hail to the Chief" is the greatest piece of music ever written.

4--There is nothing nicer than having your daughter married in the White House.

5--If I can't be President of all the people, I'd rather not be President at all.

To The Bank President

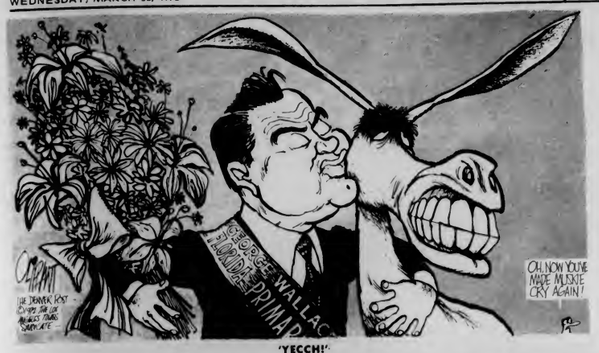
A notice that the bank did not honor

Some check I gave for groceries arrived

The day I wrote a poem which described

Dawn smashed awake by a red sun-hammer.

My poem and notice on the window-sill;



Bright thrill of words and pretend funds are not

The same; cold vault locked from one hot

Vision of the blinding, sparking anvil;

Still eloquent mold to translucent day's stammer.

Letters To The Editor

Where Responsibility Lies

To the Student Body:

How many of you know who your Student Senators are? Does all of the information you get come out of the Collegian? If this is the case, then your Student Senator isn't doing his job properly. Available to all senators are the facilities to publish one newsletter a month, of which he can make two hundred copies and distribute to his constituency. This only takes a few minutes of the senator's time, and might enable his constituency to know certain unimportant facts about him/her--facts like "What is my senator's name?", "Where does he live?", "How and where can I get in touch with that person who meets every week in the Campus Center to discuss the problems of the students here at UMass, and how can I tell him/her how I feel about these problems?" or even "What can I do personally about these problems?". If a student has no way of knowing what exists on this campus, then what the hell can he do about it?

Of course, there are some senators who try--but they get no response. Good God, if you get a senator like that, go down and pester him or her with questions--they'll love it. The problem that exists with so many of the things that a senator who is trying to be representative runs into is that he gets no response. There's no interaction or exchange of ideas if you're talking to a lump of apathy. Respond!

If you don't know who your Student Senator is, seek that person out, or respond to his call for help. Help the Student Senate become more responsible. Remember, it's your Student Senate and everyone who enters UMass is a member of the Student Government Association, not just senators.

For more direct action in the SGA, you can join any of the Student Senate Committees or Subcommittees. Contrary to popular belief, these are open to all students and deal with everything from Academic reform to Rents and Fees to the problems of women on the UMass campus. Your help is sorely needed and will be greatly appreciated. You can apply for membership on any of these committees by contacting either John Hogan or myself in the Student Senate Offices, located on the first level of the Campus Center in the Student Activities Offices.

But again, if you don't know who your Student Senator is, then find out who he or she is. They were elected to represent the students who elected them--the ultimate responsibility lies with you.

A Good Lad

To the Editor:

Until several weeks ago, I was a member of our illustrious undergraduate Student Senate. My reasons for leaving were varied, but all led me to the conclusion after two years that the Senate is simply not living up to its own ideals.

Most Senate meetings are taken up by a small group of individuals who feel called upon to speak on almost any issue. Bills eventually get passed; the work does get done. The Senate is seldom given credit for this. But there is something basically wrong in the philosophy of much of the Senate. Phrases like "what's good for the students," and "what the student wants" are constantly thrown around without any conception of where the student interest lies on an issue, or whether it exists at all.

These are perhaps the major failings of the Senate that I've seen this year. They are, I feel, correctible. In a few weeks, the Senate will be conducting its elections. Larry Ladd is running for the presidency, the job that supposedly determines the direction the Senate will take for the next year. As a Senate Vice-President, he has consistently demonstrated to me a knowledge of what the real problems are before the Senate.

Ladd is the candidate who I feel is most capable of handling those problems and, perhaps more importantly, of closing the gap that presently exists between students and their Senate. I would strongly urge those still in the Senate to consider these points when they are electing their president.

SUG Board Replies

To the Editor:

It is time that the students on this campus be made aware of the conditions being perpetrated by the Bromery administration. It has become evident to most that the Student Union/Campus Center Governing Board, the students' representative in the Campus Center, is attempting to gain control of the Center. The rationale for student control of this building rests in the fact that the overwhelming proportion of money expended in the Center is student money.

During this conflict, the administration has, on numerous occasions, chided the officers of the SUG Board for allowing publication in the MDC of letters and articles regarding this issue. Obviously, the administration has a stake in insuring that the University runs smoothly at this time, as a new Chancellor is currently being selected by the Chancellor's Search Committee and the Board of Trustees. Such conflicts as this one threaten the continuation of the present administration. Therefore, the administration has attempted to postpone a publicized confrontation for control of the Center until a permanent Chancellor has been appointed. At the same time, SUG Board Chairperson Barry Cohen has been admonished against politicizing the situation by Dr. Robert Gage, Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs. Dr. Gage also denies the obvious in stating that the administration itself has not politicized the conflict. Undeniably, such hypocrisy as this does not serve the student body well, nor does it increase the credibility of the administration. Indeed, when developments such as these come to light, the entire administration must pay the price of its action.

We the undersigned therefore endorse the IMMEDIATE resolution of the forementioned problems by means of negotiation in which the administration assumes a responsible role. In short, we demand a higher level of integrity from the administration!

High Times

To the Editor:

After having read the article by Geoff Levine, in yesterday's Collegian (3/21), I personally investigated the program. The information attained might be useful to the University community.

The reading of the Passover Haggadah will be accompanied by some of the traditional foods of the holyday; however, no major meal is planned. Moreover, a different perspective on the discussion of Exodus will be prepared for consumption.

Upon further questioning, it was discovered that the night's activities will border on the mystical and a forewarning about drinking more than the traditional four glasses of wine for religious purposes, would be frowned upon. Yet, I was definitely guaranteed a very high time, without chemical stimulation.

There will be a small donation asked for to defray the expenses incurred by purchasing the traditional symbolic foods.

Although the sponsor, Merkabah University, is a non-money profit organization, those who participate will undoubtedly be benefited.

To quote a spokesman from the group, "First the mystical experience, then the mystical interpretation."

Breaking Point

To the Editor:

There comes a point when you can't go on being a student anymore. It probably does have something to do with age, at least in the sense of what comes with age, like experiences or so. There comes a time when you hatch, when the shell just breaks, when you can't be a passive sponge anymore, when you are 'grown up', when you are ready to act and speak on your own. And to remain a student beyond that point--sitting in classes, throwing verbal garbage at each other without listening, feeding on other people's stuff, writing papers and tests for evaluation, constantly reproving your worth and answering to a master, etc.--can be a drag.

Correction

To the Editor:

I wish to correct two errors in your article last Friday reporting the general faculty meeting of Thursday. First, the Constitutional amendment presented by petition of 50 faculty members that would restrict the purview of the Faculty Senate to academic matters only was not voted on at the meeting; hence it was not killed, as you report. The amendment was presented for a first reading only; it will be voted on at the next meeting of the general faculty scheduled for April 20th.

Second, Professor Bussel did not present an amendment to the Constitutional amendment that would alter the composition and charge of the Athletic Council. Rather, he moved that the faculty overrule the action of the Faculty Senate which adopted the Constitutional amendment for consideration by the general faculty. The Faculty Senate is the governing body of the faculty; the faculty, therefore, can overrule any of the actions of the Senate by majority vote, as provided in Section 7 (e) of the Senate's Constitution. The effect of Professor Bussel's motion, had it passed, would have been to leave the Athletic Council as it is presently constituted. In fact, Professor Bussel's motion failed, so the Athletic Council amendment will carry over to the April 20 faculty meeting for a vote.

Your Decision

To the Editor:

During the past few weeks, various departments have started to show signs of new life by taking a look at what they have erred upon in the past and what could be looked forward to in the future. Two such departments are TCEA (Home Economics) with their student liason committee (which is advertised as meeting weekly) and the English department with last week's career counseling session. A third department to be added to this list is the Human Development department-also under Home Economics.

Any student in the major and most of the faculty know of the confusion and unrest and population explosion within, all of which have been intensified by University budget cuts. Specifically, what this means, is absolutely no hiring of new Human Development faculty to ease the outrageous and preposterous strain on present overburdened faculty members. The result of this: greatly reduced advising and office hours, over-enrolled courses and shortage of ordered books and reduced course offerings (on a mad flight of first-come-first-serve sign up basis).

In short, we desperately need more money for the purpose of hiring more competent faculty. WRITE to your state legislators and let him/her know your cause for concern and how it most definitely is effecting the quality of your education (especially those of you on a waiting list to enter the department).

Is 8¢ and a few minutes too much to invest in your future? The decision is yours to make.

Rectification

To the Editor:

Dick Bresciani's letter of 3/21 concerning my sports commentary of 3/15 was an interesting display of implying a lot and saying a little.

He states that my status as a fresman exempts me from making qualified statements about UMass sports. This is implied in his references to my "limited knowledge" of the subject. I'd like to assure Mr. Bresciani that my being a freshman does not exempt me from investigating the past and making INFORMED comments on it.

He also employs the tactic of stretching a phrase to its furthest literal meaning ("The way the council is set up now, any kind of reorganization will be an improvement") to prove a point. This is obviously worthless.

Further on in the letter he asks, "Because the Student Senate endorsed a desire to grant athletic scholarships strictly on the basis of need, does that mean the Council should immediately agree?" My answer is an emphatic YES. Regardless of how well informed he feels the Senate's decision is, the fact of the matter is that's what they want. After all, the Council IS representing us, aren't they? Why won't they listen to our voice?

As far as the Bernie Dallas memorial affair goes, I must say that I certainly respect the accomplishments of Bernie Dallas, and merely omitted his name because when talking about misuse of funds I felt it unfitting.

I admire Mr. Bresciani for taking the initiative to write the letter (at least is shows someone's reading my articles), but I feel that he has done me an injustice, and I hope to have rectified it here.

Tanker Grounds Off New London

NEW LONDON, Conn. (AP) — A barge pumped oil from the tanker F.I. Hayes in hopes she might be floated off a rocky reef where she ran aground and spilled oil into Long Island Sound in Tuesday's pre-dawn darkness.

The 63,000-gallon spill created a slick of light, almost colorless oil that covered 10 square miles of the Sound's eastern entrance, the Coast Guard said. It stretched from within a mile of beaches at Waterford to within a half mile of Fisher's Island, N.Y., the Coast Guard said.

By early afternoon there still weren't any reports of oil washing up on beaches, but the federal Environmental Protection Agency sent biologists to the scene to see if there was any ecological damage, the Coast Guard said.

The reef on which the tanker ran aground is a submerged rock formation that has claimed a number of other vessels over the years, according to William Hawley, president of the New England Pollution Control Co. which was supervising the cleanup.

The ship was reported aground at 3:45 a.m., and a flotation boom was placed around her by 7 a.m. to contain the leaking oil, according to Larry Worth, a Coast Guard spokesman at Governor's Island, N.Y.

Worth said two of the ship's seven holds had been ruptured.

By the time the boom was in place, he said, enough oil had seeped onto the Sound to cover an area stretching southeastward for about five miles.

Winds and seas remained calm Tuesday afternoon, and the ebb and flow of the tides was expected to help disperse the slick, Worth said.

Worth said it would be "almost impossible" to contain the slick that had already escaped the immediate area of the ship, but Hawley said, "It should evaporate and spread itself out. It's pretty light, with no heavy concentration."

Worth said lighter components of the oil would probably evaporate, but "the heavier elements will undoubtedly sink."

Home heating oil, known to the oil industry as No. 2 is unlike heavier industrial grades of oil in that it is highly refined and relatively light.

It is the same type of oil spilled in January, 1971, about 50 miles west of New London, when the tanker Esso Gettysburg ran aground at the mouth of New Haven Harbor and spilled 336,000 gallons into Long Island Sound. That spill was eventually allowed to dissipate with tidal action.

The Hayes was described by Worth as a 240-foot coastal tanker that plies waters between East Coast ports. She was en route from Bayonne, N.J., to New London, Worth said.

Her capacity is 2.5 million gallons but she was only partly loaded and was carrying less than a million gallons, the Coast Guard said.

Race Imbalance Act Repeal Protested

BOSTON (AP) — Crowds estimated variously between 2,000 and 3,000 jammed the State House today, as 10 legislative committees held hearings on 170 bills, including Gov. Francis W. Sargent's state budget recommendation and a measure to repeal the state's Racial Imbalance Act.

Bills to repeal the Imbalance Law drew the largest crowd, as more than 1,200 persons crowded into the Gardner Auditorim which has a seating capacity of some 600.

Veteran observers said the crowd at the auditorium was the largest ever to turn out for a public hearing at the State House.

In contrast, the House Ways and Means Committee attracted an audience of 16 at a public hearing on Sargent's budget recommendation of more than $2.1 billion for the 1973 fiscal year.

Other bills heard by various committees included a measure proposing a change in the welfare payment system and another providing increased retirement allowances for public employees.

Mrs. Hicks, in her testimony, called Sullivan a "community wrecker."

She told the committee she was "seeking the stringent execution of this law that requires arbitrary mathematical mixing of the races, and which has punitive measures making impossible the construction of schools where they are most needed."

Mrs. Hicks said the imbalance law has failed. In 1965, she said, Boston had 46 racially imbalanced schools. Now, she said, there are 66 racially imbalanced schools in the city.

Mrs. Hicks said the imbalance act is "unworkable without forced, massive cross busing of school children.

"The Racial Imbalance Law will destroy the neighborhood school concept, which is more than just a tradition. It is a time-honored and meaningful force for community well being," she said. Capitol police estimated that the crowd which turned out for the hearing was "easily over 1,000." Gardner Auditorium at the State House, where the hearing was held, has a seating capacity of 600. The aisles were crowded, and the audience overflowed into the lobby adjoining the auditorium.

Many others who showed up for the hearing could not even get into the lobby.

Harvard OK's SDS Convention

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Harvard University Tuesday granted students for a Democratic Society SDS permission to use college facilities for a national convention on racism from 3 p.m. March 31 through April 2.

Dean Archie Epps said the permit does not cover the full amount of time asked by SDS.

The group asked to begin the convention Thursday, March 30, but Epps told the group he could not grant them the time on Thursday or all day Friday because classes would be in session.

However, the Harvard Crimson, undergraduate newspaper, in Tuesday's editions quoted an SDS spokesman saying they plan to start Thursday anyway.

Epps said Harvard granted permission for the convention "because the university continues to respect its traditional freedoms where groups can have meetings, but this does not imply endorsement of the views of those groups."

The SDS earlier sought to use Massachusetts Institute of Technology facilities for the first two days of the proposed four-day session, but were turned down by MIT officials.

About 30 persons picketed University Hall for about an hour today over the SDS-meeting issue.

Some Vets Have Trouble Readjusting

By DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

Q: "I did a tour of combat duty in Vietnam. I've been back for eight months and started school this semester. I've had great difficulty concentrating on my studies. I'm often very nervous and seem to be "too aware" of what is going on around me. I stay up all night and sleep uneasily during the day. Although I date, I find that I'm pretty bored with girls. I'm particularly worried because I was functioning very well in the service before I came home. I'd like to think that for me the war is over but sometimes I wonder."

A: Vietnam veterans are reporting a wide range of problems readjusting to civilian life. These include concerns about the morality of the war and questions about military experience in general. In addition veterans returning to college find that they are often older and more experienced than their classmates which makes it more difficult to comfortably assume the adolescent role of a student. This can lead to feelings of social discomfort and isolation. Some Vets are still trying to integrate traumatic events associated with the war itself. Another complex area of major concern relates to adapting to severe changes in environment. Your behaviors which are motivated by "safety" or survival needs which would be more suited needs take priority over others, much as the needs for achievement or social affiliation are reflected in pursuing academic and social activities. It may take some time, perhaps a year, to get your own personal motivation priorities reordered. It may be worthwhile to seek out other veterans to talk with them about their problems in readjusting. If you feel that additional support or perspective is needed a visit or two to MH may help.

Q: "I have had a problem of impotence for some time now, but have been too embarrassed to talk openly about it. I am becoming more and more worried about my sexual normalcy. Recently I have begun to wonder if I am a latent homosexual. Could this be the case?"

A: Impotence in relationships with women does not imply and underlying homosexual orientation. It does, however, reflect a high level of anxiety about heterosexual relationships, the nature of which could relate to a variety of issues: fear of women, fear of ones own assertiveness; fears of loss of control; underlying religious conflicts; and etc. In any case, when the heterosexual impulse is blocked, secondary fears of homosexuality often emerge. This in turn is likely to add to the anxiety about your masculinity and could well intensify the problem you describe. Your question said little about the quality and character of your relationships with women, which cannot in our opinion be separated from the question of sexual performance. If, for example, you find it hard to function within a close, long-term relationship, the implications would be different than if the difficulty occurs in a series of brief impersonal encounters. An individual consultation with a member of the MH staff would, of course, be necessary to explore the problem in more depth and provide a more adequate answer to your questions.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will accept questions in strict confidence for possible appearance in "Your Head." Send or bring your inquiries to Mental Health, 303 Machmer Hall.

Museum Curator Barry Gaither

Barry Gaither To Present Lecture/Slides On Black Art

Barry Gaither, museum curator of the National Center for Afro-American Art and Director of visual arts for the Elma Lewis School of Fine Arts, will present a slide-lecture presentation on Wednesday, April 5th in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

Gaither will be bringing with him part of a collection of 9,000 slides which he has been assembling at the museum to be an archives of Black artists--their work and careers.

Gaither's many other projects include running an art school for inner city youth in Boston, writing and researching tirelessly.

Brother Gaither was born in South Carolina, graduated with honors from Morehouse College in 1966, studied further at Georgia State College and Brown University, completing his M.A. at Brown.

His experiences since school have been many. He has taught Afro-American art, worked and catalogued many exhibitions including one entitled "Jamaican Art Since The Thirties" and has lectured on numerous college campuses.

Mr. Gaither has also found time in his busy schedule to publish several pieces. He is currently writing an entry on Afro-American Art for the Negro Reference Book and has been invited to write a book for secondary schools by the New York Graphic Society in Connecticut.

The scope of his expertise and talent indicates that April 5th will be a colorful and educational experience. Some of the National Center's permanent art collection will be on display during the week in the Art Gallery of the Student Union complements of Program Council.

Barry Gaither will be on hand for questions and explanation on the evening of the 5th following his slide show.

M. L. King Series Lectures In April

During the week of April 4-7th, following vacation three events of paramount importance will take place on the UMass campus which should sharpen the understanding of Black people-their politics and their culture.

The Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial Lecture Series will be presenting this year a series of three events in order to commemorate the death of Dr. King. The series is funded by the Distinguished Visitors Program with the help of Program Council and the Orchard Hill Area Government.

The events are:

Tuesday, April 4th--IMAMU BARAKA (LeRoi Jones) discusses the "Civil Rights Movement-Dr. King and the Present Black Struggle"-Campus Center Auditorium.

Wednesday, April 5th--BARRY GAITHER will show slides and discuss "New Dimensions in Black Social Art-Commonwealth Room of the Student Union. (Story and picture above)

Friday, April 7th--GEORGE HOWARD AND THE PRIMITIVE DANCE CO. will present "Black Roots"-African and West Indian folk dancing-Campus Center Auditorium.

All events begin at 8 p.m. and are free to the public.

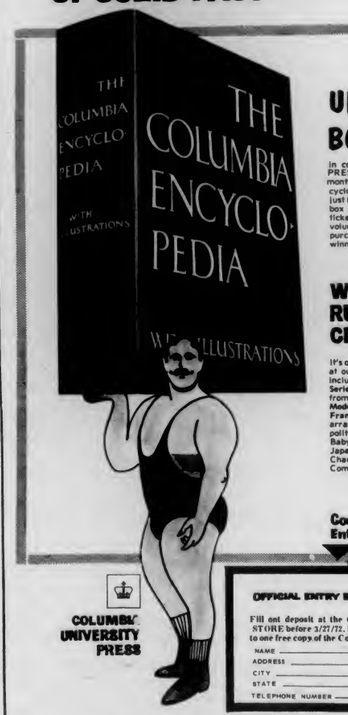
Henry Tragle Appointed Grad School Asst. Dean

Dr. M.H. Appley, dean of the UMass Graduate School has announced the appointment of Dr. Henry I. Tragle as assistant dean of the Graduate School.

Dr. Tragle has been serving as director of the Office of Degree Requirements in the Graduate School. As assistant dean, he will maintain his responsibilities in this area and will also be responsible for the admissions and records functions of the Graduate School.

Dr. Tragle, a native of Virginia, attended the University of Richmond in 1932 and 1933 and subsequently held management positions in industry for several years. He entered the military service in 1941 and remained on active duty in the U.S. Army until his retirement as a Lieutenant Colonel in 1964. Dr. Tragle is a graduate of the Army Command and General Staff College and the Industrial College of the Armed Forces.

Dr. Tragle resumed his undergraduate studies upon his retirement and received his B.A. degree, cum laude, from the University of Massachusetts in 1966. He received his M.A. in 1967 and his Ph.D. in 1971 from the University in history. Dr. Tragle is a specialist in American history, and is the author of several articles on slavery. His dissertation dealt with Nat Turner and the slave revolt and has appeared as a book, "The Southampton Slave Revolt of 1831," published by the University of Massachusetts Press in 1971.



Dr. Tragle is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Phi Kappa Phi, the American Historical Association and the Organization of American Historians.

Detective Section Finds Ripped-offs

Missing property valued in the thousands of dollars has been recovered as the result of an investigation by the UMass Police Department. Included is scientific equipment, automobiles, electronic equipment, tools and household goods.

The total value is close to $100,000 and it includes items reported missing from UMass, the University of New Hampshire, the University of Virginia, Amherst, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, Cooley Dickinson Hospital, local businesses and residences.

The investigation is being conducted by the two members of the University's new Detective Section, Detective Sergeants Philip J. Cavanaugh and Francis X. Mazzei. Since it began March 15 four arrests have been made-- three in Amherst, Ashfield, Belchertown, Cambridge and New York City.

The investigation is continuing and more property is expected to turn up. Approximately $20,000 worth of electronic equipment reported missing from the Pioneer Valley Cablevision transmitter site in Pelham has been recovered. Other items include six Porsche sport cars, an oscilloscope, optical equipment, a microwave oven, TV sets, stereo and sound equipment, laser equipment, tools and household goods.

UMass Security Director David Johnston said: "This is an extraordinary amount of property to be recovered in a community of this size and the success of the investigation is a tribute to the relatively new Dectective Section at UMass. The case represents solid progress against a major problem in this area--larceny from institutions and individuals."

Learn; Drink Champagne

French champagne will add sparkle this semester to the hotel, restaurant and travel administration curriculum at UMass.

UMass and three other institutions in the country with outstanding hotel and restaurant programs have been chosen to participate in a champagne educational program sponsored by the Champagne Producers of France and the Champagne Committee of the National Association of Alcoholic Beverage Importers. The other three are Cornell, Michigan State and Denver Universities.

"The purpose is to establish direct contact with men and women who will hold positions of responsibility with restaurants and hotels within the next few years," a Champagne Committee spokesman said. "Knowledge of true champagne is a necessary part of their education, and we believe our program represents a constructive step in assisting students with their careers."

The program includes lectures on the background and history of French champagne--including its high degree of acceptance in the United States and all parts of the world, its production from the time of the harvest until it is bottled for world consumption and the strict measures of quality control exercised by the Champagne Producers of France. The lectures conclude with a tasting of various imported champagnes and the students themselves take turns at opening and serving the wines correctly.

The second phase of the educational program involves an essay contest on the theme, "What Makes French Champagne Unique?" The students must complete their papers by May 31, and the four winners, one from each university, will be given a $1000 travelling scholarship to France's Champagne region.

In the final phase of the contest, the winners will arrive in Rheims and Epernay at the beginning of the champagne harvest in mid-September and be the "working" guests of the Comite Interprofessionnel du Vin de Champagne and various producers.

Christian To Meet Tonight

Tonight, from 8:00 to 9:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, the first of two programs sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ, will be held.

The program, which is commonly referred to as "College Life", is organized and directed by students who are experiencing, what they refer to as, "a personal relationship with Jesus Christ."

The program will feature Wayne Harvey and his wife Pam, as well as students who will share experiences of the relevance of Jesus Christ in their lives.

Wayne attended graduate school in psychology at UMass. and is currently teaching in Brattleboro, Vermont. He is also the organizer of the folk group, The Messengers, which has performed in concerts and coffeehouses throughout the Northeast.

Refreshments will be served following the program, as there will be opportunity to rap on an informal, yet personal, basis with Christians about their experiences.

The final "College Life" for this spring will be held on April 12. Emphasis of the program will be on the international student and his relationship with Christ.

Student Art

The Student Art Association is holding a meeting this evening, Wednesday, March 22 at 7:30 p.m. in room 165, Campus Center. There will be a panel discussion on Art Education. The panel, consisting of both Faculty Members and Graduate Students, will include: Jerry Kearns, Elvira Lopez, Saul Ostrow, Norma Phillips, Sid Porita, and Jerry Sawma. Anyone interested is invited to attend.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Cancer can hang on, retain and consolidate. A native of this zodiacal sign, once wealth is obtained, can preserve it. There are more Cancer persons in "Who's Who in Commerce and Industry" than any other zodiacal sign.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Disputes could flare over property rights. Long range view is best now. Family may be divided. You are asked to carry extra load. Utilize innate qualities of initiative, originality. Discomfort is but temporary.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Hold off on journeys. Check calls, messages. Be sure of directions, instructions. Relatives now. Patience is a necessity. Make clear fact that you have life of your own to live.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid speculation. Stick to familiar ground. One who advocates risk does so with your money. Be mature. You won't get something for nothing. Strive to insure valuables. Be specific. Demand collateral.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Necessary to utilize alternative methods. Usual paths may be blocked. Act accordingly. Take special care with legal documents. Be versatile, independent. Sagittarian could figure in prominent way.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Attend to immediate questions, problems. Be aware of fine points. Read between the lines. One who makes promises may not be in position to fulfill them. Self-reliance now is a necessity. You will understand.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be analytical. Find reasons for recent changes, inquiries. Perceptiveness now pays dividends. Respond accordingly. Gemini plays key role. Friends could be well meaning but misinformed. Do your own checking.

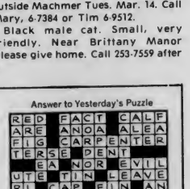
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): To achieve desire, you need co-operation of those who know you. To be happy, you must first make loved one happy. To overcome barrier to success, you must stop insisting. You will comprehend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Much uncertainty is featured. Be willing to wait. Now is not time to demand, threaten. Obtain hint from Libra message. Be analytical. Perfect techniques. Practice. Avoid fooling yourself. See in realistic way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You need not rush or be extravagant. If balance is maintained, you advance. Heed voice of experience. Avoid basing actions on impulse. Member of opposite sex may be making you jump through hoops.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't be in too much of a hurry. Outlook is bright if you plan, analyze. You should finish rather than begin. Means complete project; tie loose ends. Aries figures prominently. Steer clear of legal complications.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You learn what you need to know. Key is to properly utilize knowledge. Fresh viewpoint is required. Ideas should be developed. Premature action can result in loss. Size up situation. Avoid quarrelsome relative.



PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Young persons can pose problem. Follow intuitive intellect. Means trust hunch. Teach and learn. Don't adopt dictatorial attitude. If you give, you also will receive. Be receptive. Aquarian is involved.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you were on your own at relatively early age. You are separated from crowd. You succeed when you act in individualistic manner. Adhere to beliefs. Have faith in your dream. You will be stronger and more successful in 1972, with September a key month.

Wooden Optimistic

LOS ANGELES (AP) — UCLA Coach John Wooden doesn't worry that his No. 1 assistant of last season is coaching his No. 1 opponent of this year's National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball championships.

"There is no advantage for him in having known our personnel," says Wooden of Denny Crum, the first-year coach of Louisville. "You really don't know personnel that well the year before or as freshmen.

"If he knows Bill Walton extremely well, it would be to our advantage."

Wooden implied that Walton, the 6-foot-11 sophomore center named Player-of-the-Year by The Associated Press, might instill some fear into an opposing coach and opposing team.

UCLA, seeking a seventh consecutive NCAA title, meets Louisville on Thursday night at the Los Angeles Sports Arena while Florida State faces North Carolina. The winners play Saturday afternoon for the title.

Wooden appeared in person at Tuesday's special meeting of the Southern California Basketball Writers while Crum, Dean Smith of North Carolina and Hugh Durham of Florida State spoke on a telephonic setup.

Durham, asked what 6-foot-11 Lawrence McCray had added to his club, answered:

"He gives us a legitimate center, a true post man. Still, his major contribution has probably been in the area of defense. He can block shots. And, on offense, he can shoot over some people we couldn't have shot over in previous years."

Smith's second-ranked Tar Heels will be the only team not working out Wednesday in the Sports Arena. Instead, he chose the court at nearby Pepperdine College.

"No, it's not superstition," he says. "But there is not so much fanfare when you practice away from the scene of the tournament."

Then he directly contradicted the superstition idea, saying: "We only worked out at a game site once during the season-at Princeton and we lost."

Most of the interest centered on Wooden and Crum, the man who played for UCLA and later became an assistant coach.

The Kentucky head man was asked if he used the Wooden philosophy.

"A lot of it," he answered.

"The things he does in a large majority of the cases are right. If you work with a great coach and something doesn't rub off, there is something wrong with you. We had differences in some respects but I try to do a lot of the things he does."

Wooden was asked if he had anticipated his student would do as well as he had at Louisville.

"Yes," said Wooden. "I thought he would. He had some fine returning personnel, some good freshmen and I have always respected Denny's ability."

Billy Conigliaro And Joe Lahoud Find New Home With Brewers

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Baseball moved one team from Boston to Milwaukee 19 years ago. One-fourth of a team made the same trip last winter.

The Milwaukee Brewers of the American League have six members of the 1971 Boston Red Sox on their roster, and all figure heavily in Manager Dave Bristol's plans. On some days this season, five BrewSox may be in the Milwaukee lineup.

"The Brewers had good pitching last year," says Joe Lahoud, one of the newcomers. "They just didn't have enough punch. I think we've got a lot more now."

Lahoud and Billy Conigliaro, outfielders who competed for the Boston right field job for several seasons, are the happiest of the new Brewers. Both are natives of New England, the area which sent the Boston Braves to Milwaukee in 1953.

"We're still competing here," Lahoud says, "but not against each other. There are 12 outfielders on the roster. I know I'm working harder than I ever have in the spring."

Lahoud has been playing left field, Conigliaro right field so far this spring. Both are hitting well, along with third baseman George Scott, who hit .263 and belted 24 home runs as Boston's first baseman last year.

Conigliaro and Lahoud hit .262 and .215, respectively, last season and both had differences with Manager Eddie Kasko over his platooning policy.

"I knew they were going to trade Joe and me. I had no idea where I'd go and didn't really care," says Conigliaro.

"That was some trade, wasn't it?" says Conigliaro. "I still can't keep all the names straight."

Fighters Suspended

MONTREAL (AP) — National Hockey League President Clarence Campbell said Tuesday he will decide Wednesday at the earliest whether to discipline Boston's Wayne Cashman and Minnesota's Dennis Hextall for Sunday's sticks-winging affair.

Until the decision is announced, Campbell said, neither player will be permitted to compete. Thus Hextall will miss the North Stars' Tuesday night game against California. The Bruins are idle until Thursday night.

The incident in Sunday's nationally televised game in Boston, won 7-3 by the Bruins, apparently began when the two players slashed at each other with their sticks.

A videotape replay showed that, moments later, Hextall raised his stick at Cashman's face and, shortly thereafter, during a scuffle involving several players, Cashman raced toward Hextall, who was being restrained by an official, leaped over the official's back and swung his stick at Hextall's head.

The two players, along with North Stars and Bruins officials, met with Campbell for nearly two hours Tuesday.

Nate Archibald: Challanging The NBA Giants

CINCINNATI (AP) — Six-foot guard Nate Archibald, overlooked in the National Basketball Association all-star game this year, is rubbing elbows with 7-2 Kareem Jabbar of the Milwaukee Bucks.

Archibald, a speedy second-year man with the Cincinnati Royals, has been averaging 27.6 points a game, and only Jabbar tops him in scoring in the NBA.

Archibald has played his best ball since the all-star game. He admits that it may be coincidental.

"Before the all-star game, I thought I was playing pretty well," said Archibald, who is one of the NBA's best one-on-one players and who isn't afraid to drive even on Wilt Chamberlain. "It was just one of those things. I wasn't picked. There is no sense in dying. Maybe I've played just a little bit harder to show them I am capable of scoring and excelling in assists."

Royals Coach Bob Cousy, who labels Archibald "fantastic," said he thinks "the snub in the all-star game has probably made him work even harder." New York Knicks Coach Red Holzman calls Archibald "a great all-around player."

"He is going to be a genuine superstar for years to come," Cousy said.

Taking advantage of improved outside shooting and ability to gyrate around taller players, Archibald began playing standout ball consistently since about Jan. 1. He has only been under 20 points in one game since.

The former Texas-El Paso star has tallied 30 or more points in 11 of his last 12 games. The span included performances of 55, 46, and 45 points. And he is making a strong case for selection to the first all-pro NBA team.

"I never thought I would be up that high," Archibald said of his high point totals. "I thought I would get my 15 to 20 points a game this year and that would be it."

Regarding his chances for being named a first-team all-pro Archibald said, "I don't think I'll make it, but it certainly would be a privilege.

"From past experience, it seems that only guys who have been in the league much longer or first year men like Jabbar or Elvin Hayes, or Oscar Robertson make it."

Leaman Laments On "THE" Losses

By MARK VOGLER

A loss is a loss in any coach's judgment, regardless how close or wide the margin is. The only difference, as UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman would suggest, is that "some hurt a little more than others."

Coach Leaman was sitting at his desk and recuperating from the recently concluded, heartbreaking basketball campaign Monday morning when this Collegian reporter entered his office and approached him on the topic of losses.

It was hardly the type of discussion which the builder of UMass' finest hoop squads considered pleasant. "I wish we could talk about some of the games we've won," Leaman proposed. Yet, when asked to recollect the defeats which hurt the most during the course of his coaching career, he went right ahead and scribbled down three team names on a sheet of paper.

A quick glance at the paper revealed the initials P.C. at the top of the paper. And it wouldn't take an avid follower of UMass sports to figure the reason why.

The Redmen went into Providence nine years ago undefeated and vying for a crack at the New England Championship, an honor they had attained the previous season. But their chances were crippled by the Friars in a close, nip and tuck battle, 73-72.

"I was extremely disappointed," recalled Leaman. "We got the breaks, but didn't cash in on them. Julius Erving, probably one of the finest players in New England, missed an uncontested layup toward the end of the game. In fact, we had three shots in the last ten seconds and missed them all."

The coach remarked that the club took the defeat a lot harder than the normal setback. "Naturally. It broke a string of 11 straight wins and moved us back to second place in New England, a place we never recovered from for the rest of the year. Providence kept winning and we just couldn't catch them."

Leaman's next selection was a loss which he considered had the most effect on any of his teams. He referred to the Harvard game earlier this year in which UMass was boasting a 6-0 record before falling to the Ivy League school by a mere two points.

Signs of dejection were evident on the coach's face as he described how his squad led Harvard by a point three times in the closing minute of play. The Redmen even by-passed an opportunity to tie the contest with five seconds remaining.

"It was undoubtedly a much tougher loss to take," Leaman declared. "We didn't have the experience and the big man that we did a year ago. But we still had a talented team and never did get back our confidence after that. It was probably the turning point of the season for us. We certainly never did regain the touch we had prior to then."

Leaman's final choice was surprisingly, not a close ballgame, but rather a mockery. Frowning on the 90-44 shellacking administered by North Carolina in last year's NIT, he labeled the game as "the most bitter defeat of all."

Leaman said that UMass was down by 10 to a very fine team which eventually won the tournament. Then all of a sudden, things took a turn for the worst. The coach explained that UMass fell apart when John Betancourt sprained his ankle and Julius Erving fouled out with 18 minutes left to play.

By this time, Leaman was jingling a set of keys as he reconstructed a frustrating chapter of UMass basketball history. "It was the worst beating that we've ever taken here at UMass," the coach stated. "It left us in such a state of shock that nobody talked about the game afterward in the locker room."

"We're very fortunate that it was the last ballgame of the season," rationalized the coach. "Because I don't think could have gained back our confidence after that poor showing."

When asked how he coped with these losses as a coach, Leaman replied: "It's the coach's responsibility to resign himself to the fact and to teach his kids to accept difficult losses where it won't get them down.

"The mental aspect of the game is so much more important than the physical aspect right now, because most of your athletes are in such great physical condition that it really doesn't matter. Mental preparation is the thing that makes winners and losers."

Sox Deal Fiore

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — First baseman Mike Fiore, who saw little action the last two seasons with the Boston Red Sox, took news of his trade to the St. Louis Cardinals in stride Monday. However, he thought he should have received a better shake.

"I'm not bitter, but I thought I'd get more of a shot at the first base job than I did," Fiore said. "I hope I get a better chance with the Cardinals."

Fiore, a 27-year-old left-hander, hit .274 with 12 homers for Kansas City in 1969 and was traded to the Red Sox the following May. With slugger George Scott at first, Fiore was used sparingly, going to bat a total of only 112 times with Boston.

With Scott traded to the Milwaukee Brewers last fall, Fiore hoped to win the starting job with the Red Sox. However, the Red Sox are hoping rookie Cecil Cooper is ready. Fiore hit only .154 in nine exhibition games this spring. Cooper is batting .205 in 12 games.

The Red Sox acquired first baseman-outfield Bob Burda, a 33-year-old veteran, in the deal with the Cardinals. Burda has been a hold-out with St. Louis, but the Red Sox expect no trouble in signing him. In fact, he's due in camp Tuesday morning.

Burda led the National League with 14 pinch hits last year while batting .296. A left-handed hitter, he figures to be a utility man with the Red Sox, if he earns a job on the team.

Manager Eddie Kasko is getting a long look at some rookie prospects, much longer than in the past. The batterymen have been in camp working out since Feb. 18, the fielders since Feb. 24. All, except Fiore, still are around.

However, a few will get some bad news Friday when Kasko makes his first cut. Kids such as Dick Pole, Dwight Evans, Lynn McGlothlin, Steve Barr, Terry Williams, Vic Correll and Tom Maggard probably will be shipped across the street to the Red Sox' minor league training complex.

The complex is a bee-hive of activity with young players practicing on three diamonds under the direction of farm director Ed Kenney.

Among the instructors are former Red Sox coach Darrell Johnson, the new manager at Louisville in the International League, retired outfielder Don Lock, who will manage Pawtucket League, and scouts Frank Malzone and Sam Mele.

There also is a volunteer instructor on hand almost daily. He's Johnny Pesky, who, as a Red Sox announcer, still loves the game as much as when he was a star infielder and later manager with the Red Sox. Pesky particulary enjoys working with young players. Long after the regular practice the other day, three persons still were on a diamond. They were two starry-eyed kids-and Pesky.

Little Louis Aparicio puts the tag on Louis Melendez sliding into second base yesterday in an exhibition game between the Red Sox and the Cardinals.

Rules Changed

BOSTON (AP) — The NCAA today announced three rules changes in college hockey, including one that would allow body checking at any point on the ice, according to a spokesman at Northeastern University.

Jack Grinold, of the university public information office, said the NCAA college hockey rules committee meeting in Miami called him to inform him of the change.

Under the old NCAA rules, body checking was restricted to certain areas of the ice.

Another new rule provides that a player committing an infraction of the rules will not go to the penalty box when the other team takes a penalty shot.

The committee also increased the diameter of the face-off circle from 10 feet to 12 feet.

VOLUME XCIX, ISSUE 115 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS THURSDAY, MARCH 23, 1972

For the first hour or so of the Student Senate meeting last night, the Senate stuffed envelopes with letters for all UMass parents on the prospective tuition increase. The work is not done however. It will continue today at 1 p.m. in the Student Affairs Office.

Senate Gives Concerts Deficit Budget

By MARY SMITH

Fiscal appropriations for several RSO groups, including the Spring Concert Committee dominated the business during last night's Student Senate meeting.

The Senate accepted the budget authorization for the Belchertown Volunteers and an amended version of the Senior Committee budget. After lengthy debate a motion to guarantee the Concert Committee a maximum of $1500 should a deficit be incurred by the group, was passed.

The Concert bill allows the Concert Committee to contract a musical group and make arrangements for a sound system, staging, and security at the concert, as long as the Committee remains within a limit of $1500 over their authorized budget of $8,000.

The original vote concerning the motion passed by a 38-22-2 favorable vote. Treasurer Skip Olmstead, who was chairing the meeting at the time of the first vote, ruled that the bill had not passed. Stating that the $1500 would have to be obtained from the Stabilization Fund or as an amendment to the Budgets Act, a 2/3 vote would be necessary.

Bill Staton, tri-chairman of the Concert Committee appealed the ruling of the chair. Staton argued that at present the Senate was not appropriating the actual funds. The Committee was asking only for a guarantee. If the Committee does incur a deficit within the next few months, Staton argued that by that time there would be additional money available from any returning SATF.

Henry Bouffard upheld the ruling of the Chair. Bouffard argued that the Committee was asking for a guarantee for money that does not exist. The question concerning Olmstead's ruling was called and the vote upheld the ruling.

Gary Gomes, also a tri-chairman of the Committee, moved that the Senate reconsider its vote. An objection was made to the reconsideration, and the question of reconsideration was defeated.

At that point the Senate proceeded to debate the Budget Act for the fiscal year 1972-73. After consideration of the Senior Committee and the Belchertown Volunteers, Senator Denis Shimskowski noted that a quorum was not present at the time of Senator Gome's motion to reconsider, therefore the negative vote was invalid. This time the objection to the reconsideration motion was overruled.

A second motion to reconsider was made and also defeated. Senator Staton then asked for a revote. The revote resulted in a tie and Vice-President Hogan ruled that debate could be reopened, but only for ten minutes.

Senator Staton reiterated what he had stated earlier. The Committee has already received verbal agreements from a few sources totalling a possible $900 in additional funds. Since the Committee is planning to sponsor several smaller concerts and coffee houses, along with SOS, the chance that the group would incur a deficit appears unlikely at this time.

Staton then asked Hogan for another ruling concerning the required 2/3 vote. At that point, Bud Demers, representative of the RSO Office explained that the funds, if taken from the Stabilization Fund, would eventually have to be replaced if the Committee did experience a loss. Hogan then upheld the previous ruling that a 2/3 vote was necessary for the bill to pass. The motion to grant the $1500 to the Concert Committee was then passed by a vote of 46-21-1.

The Belchertown budget was authorized after little debate. The budget of the Senior Committee, which includes Senior Day and a class gift was amended so that the personal tax placed on Seniors will be reduced from $5 to $3.

The Senate meeting was delayed due to a project undertaken by the Senate to oppose any increase in rents and fees next year. The Senate is currently sending letters to the parents of each student concerning the bills to increase tuition and other fees currently before the State Legislature.

At this time, only one-half of the letters are ready to be mailed. Any student concerned with the possible increases is urged to donate their time to finishing the task. All interested are invited by Senate President Lee Sandwen to come to the Student Affairs Office in the Campus Center this afternoon.

Great Decisions

Discussion Ends Controversially

By MARK VOGLER

The eighth and final part of the Great Decisions series, held weekly in Noah Webster House Lounge, was climaxed last night by a controversial rhetorical statement made by moderator Luther Allen.

In his concluding remarks of the panel discussion, entitled: "Our Crowded World: What Solutions to Population Problems", Allen was quoted as saying: "A concern with stopping population growth at the present time as a whole raises the question of whether we're freezing the status quo in favor of white developed nations."

Right after Mr. Allen's statement, radio station WFCR had concluded its broadcasting. The remark undoubtedly stirred some flack from the audience in regard to the racial overtone.

One girl challenged the journalistical soundness of the remark. A young man took rather rash actions by storming out of the building and yelling back: "If that last comment was taped, it should have been scrapped." Another girl asked why the question wasn't raised earlier in the discussion.

Allen later said that he realized that the comment might have been used out of place, but that he thought it was his obligation to somehow tie things together. As for the radical reaction received from the male student, Allen declared that it was, "Challenging the very right of free and open discussion. If he felt strongly enough of his conviction, he should have stayed afterward to hash it out."

The nature of the discussion pitted two UMass sociologists against a pair of UMass biologists. Sociologist and demographer T. O. Wilkinson stated in his opening remark that population growth was obviously in response to individual behavior and individual action.

According to Wilkinson: "The question of population control is not a simple process. It's not just a question of getting people to realize that a serious problem does exist. We should think in terms of large-scale, social and structural change and how it makes sense to the individual with regard to his own behavior."

George Wilder, a grad student at the university in Geology, was the next panelist to speak. Being an active member of ZPG (Zero Population Growth), Wilder brought out some interesting statistics relevant to the increase of population.

He stressed the fact that the population has been calculated to double every 35 years. He also noted that if we had this enormous rate of increase in Christ's time, we'd probably have 100 people per square foot on the earth today.

"Man can't accomodate himself in a finite world with finite resources," Wilder told the panel. "The solutions to too many problems are mutually exclusive. Humanity is in the grip of an acute food storage and there's a compelling reason to halt the population growth immediately."

Carl Brandon, from the department of Zoology, also expressed how it was important to deal with the problems scientifically, rather than sociologically.

"If we don't stop population growth, we're headed for certain disaster," Brandon said. "All important resources will be used up. Education must expound a population control policy on a national level. We must help other nations no matter how great the volume or how high the cost."

At this point Wilkinson interrupted the discussion on the grounds that Brandon was overlooking the importance of viewing the situation socially. "Is technology really going to cure the problem? At best it's going to cure the problem for a very short time. We have to weigh the facts in their sociological context, they're just as important."

The Town

Selectmen Discuss Finances

By STEVE FINE

This Tuesday, the Board of Selectmen concentrated most of its time on the financial aspect of Amherst town government.

The Board met with Amherst Housing Authority and resigned the contract approving the construction of housing for the elderly in the town. William Mellen, one of the Housing uthority members, reported that the State will guarantee up to $2,000,000 in funds for the project and that no federal support is anticipated. Mellen also said that the authority has not decided the date construction will begin on the project.

In other financial business the Selectmen concurred with the town meeting's approval of giving a sum not exceeding $42,000 for the undertaking of surveys and administrative expenses for the Redevelopment Authority, which is concerned with redeveloping the Center School Complex in town.

They also read an official notification about approval to receive $2,000,000 from the Emergency Finance Committee on the bond issue for the new elementary school, and discussed a questionnaire on what federal, state, and local properties were exempt from taxes.

Selectwoman Nancy Eddy in discussing the name for the new elementary school, made a motion for the School Building Commitee, to get public support for any name they chose for the school. "We won't tell the Committee what to name the school, but will tell them to solicit a name by the public," she said. This motion was passed overwhelmingly by the Board.

Other issues of importance the Board acted on were:

•Passed a motion banning political advertising on a right-of-way with the stipulation that if the sign were put on private property, the owner would have to submit a request to the Zoning Board for their approval.

•Passed an extension of a January 13 motion on the public banning of sign advertising for political candidates and added that each major party may put up one political pavillion along the road of any nature they please. Also included was a proposal by Town Manager Torrey to erect stands in one place on S. Pleasant St. for display of banners.

•The Board agreed to review improvements by the Topics Committee concerning 8 intersections in the town now under study for renovation.

•Discussed the Board's power in making spot checks at restaurants and package stores.

Profs' Sons Arrested In Theft Crackdown

AMHERST, Mass. (AP)-Two of the four persons arrested thus far in a crackdown on thefts in the five-college Amherst area are reportedly sons of UMass faculty members.

Arraigned in Hampshire County District Court since the investigation began by UMass police March 15 were Mark L. Strother, 19, of 199 Shays St., Amherst, son of UMass Mathematics Professor Wayman Strother, and Robert E. Piedmont, 18, of 148 Red Gate Lane, Amherst, son of UMass associate sociology professor Eugene B. Piedmont.

Also charged in the thefts of some $100,000 worth of property have been Bennett Haffron, 38, of 34 Stephen Place, Newton, and Michael T. Wing, 18, of 305 Russell St., Hadley.

Police say they found scientific and electronics equipment, four sports cars and household goods in searches in the Amherst area, Cambridge and New York City.

They said more arrests are expected in the first major probe into the recurrent plague of thefts in the area.

SUG Board, Administration Reach Compromise

By DON BISHOP

In discussions held yesterday afternoon, a compromise was reached between the Administration and the representatives of the Student Union Governing Board on the controversial Article 7 of the SUG Board By-Laws. If approved by the SUG Board at their next general meeting, the Article will become effective upon receiving the signature of Acting Chancellor Bromery, which was virtually guaranteed at yesterday's conference.

In addition to Dr. Bromery, the meeting yesterday was attended by SUG Board members Barry Cohen, Lisa Mandell and Rick Savini, Student Senate President Lee Sandwen, and Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage. According to SUG Board Chairperson Cohen, the proposal was accepted by Dr. Bromery with only minor revision. It had been drafted by Cohen and Sandwen on Tuesday.

Article 7 of the SUG Board By-Laws deals with personnel procedures in the Campus Center Complex. In its original draft presented to the Acting Chancellor over two weeks ago, the SUG Board had given itself effective control over the hiring and firing of the management staff in the Campus Center, subject to the veto of the Chancellor.

This original draft was unacceptable to Dr. Bromery and other administrators, as have been other proposals submitted in the interim to yesterday's apparent settlement. In trying to summarize his objections to the previous proposals, Dr. Bromery said that SUG Board had been trying to delegate itself authority in areas that he as Acting Chancellor could not legally delegate them.

Nonetheless, SUG Board has been granted (in this compromise proposal) a major role in the selection process for vacancies in the Campus Center. A search committee will be formed when a position is open. The committee will make the nominations to the Chancellor to fill the positions

Nonetheless, SUG Board has been granted (in this compromise proposal) a major role in the selection process for vacancies in the Campus Center. A search committee will make the nominations to the Chancellor to fill the position, for which he must give his final approval. It has been stipulated that any search committee formed must be broadly representative of the University community.

The Board will be allowed to initiate procedures for dismissal of any staff member, and clearly have considerable impact in this realm.

Satisfaction was expressed yesterday by both sides in regard to this latest and apparent final proposal for Article 7. As written, the proposal reads:

A. All permanent or temporary professional appointments shall only be made from Student Union/Campus Center Governing Board nominees.

B. Vacancies:

1. The Board chairperson of the SUG Board will receive from the Director of the Campus Center notification of all openings for any professional position.

2. The chairperson will appoint a search committee, broadly representative of the community, containing no less than three (3) Board members to nominate to the full Board, candidates to fill the position permanently.

3. The Board shall forward to the Chancellor a candidate for his approval. If the nomination is unacceptable, the Chancellor shall request an additional nominee; at the same time he shall communicate to the Board chairperson in writing his reasons for rejecting the nomination.

4. If necessary the SUG Board shall nominate to the Chancellor at least three (3) candidates to fill, on a temporary basis, the vacant position within nine (9) working days from receiving formal notification of the vacancies.

a. If the nominess are unacceptable, the Chancellor shall request additional nominees; at the same time he shall state in writing his reasons for rejection of the prior nominees.

C. Dismissals:

1. The Director or any Board member may initiate procedures for the dismissal of any staff person.

2. The Board chairperson may appoint a committe, broadly representative of the community, containing no less than three (3) Board members to investigate the pending dismissal. The recommendations of this committee shall be forwarded to the Board.

3. Dismissals shall be forwarded to the Chancellor for approval, conditional upon a two-thirds (2/3) vote of the Board members assembled.

4. If the Chancellor does not concur with the action of the Board, his reasons shall be communicated in writing to the Board chairperson within (9) working days.

5. Such actions as dismissal will be considered in executive session if requested by the staff member under consideration.

Trustees To Interview Golino Next Week

(Editor's Note: An interview with Vice Chancellor Timothy Healy of CUNY will be in tomorrow's Collegian.)

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Carlo L. Golino, one of three men nominated for the UMass Chancellor's post, will meet with the Board of Trustees next week in Amherst.

Golino, Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs for the University of California at Riverside, was contacted last night at his Southern California home for a 20-minute interview.

Golino said last December's Report of the President's Committee on the Future University of Massachusetts was very instrumental in making his interest in UMass "grow by a considerable degree."

The report stressed the importance of developing new means of involvement between the University and the surrounding community.

Agreeing very strongly with the "thrust" of the report, Golino said he was against the concept of the closed university.

"Why does the University have to be restricted to a small group of citizens?" asked Golino.

He is in favor of the concept of open admissions as long as the necessary provisions are made to assist all incoming students with their adjustment to university life, said Golino.

"The public university should respond to the needs of the society in which it lives, without sacrificing principles or compromising its integrity in searching for what it should be,", said the 58-year-old Golino.

Golino, as well as Acting Chancellor Bromery and Timothy Healy, Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs for the City University of New York have been chosen by the Chancellor Search Committee for presentation to the Trustees.

Golino's decision to visit Amherst next week means it is extremely doubtful that the Trustees will make their final decision on the next chancellor at their monthly meeting next Tuesday in Amherst.

The fact that the names of the three nominees was leaked to the press did not bother Golino, who had informed his Chancellor that he was considering the UMass post.

Golino, who has been a California resident since 1939 came to Amherst for an interview with the Search Committee last Wednesday during a heavy snowstorm.

He learned of the Committee's decision yesterday afternoon from a friend, who had learned of the news from the Associated Press wire services.

Later in the afternoon, he received a phone call from Robert McCartney, Secretary of UMass, informing him of the decision and inviting him to Amherst next week, he said.

Golino, who became Vice-Chancellor in 1969, found the three campus concept at UMass, very interesting as opposed to the one campus outlook.

He said the university system in California has accomplished a great deal despite making many mistakes on the way. He is prepared to use his knowledge of the California system to make sure the same things do not happen in Massachusetts.

Golino received his doctrine in 1948 from the University of California at Berkeley, and was a member of the UCLA faculty between 1947-65 before transferring to Riverside.

Golino, born in Pescara, Italy, came to this country at the age of 15.

Student ticket holders for the Thursday performance of the Alvin Ailey Dance Company are reminded by the Fine Arts Council that they must present their Student I.D.'s with their tickets at the door of Bowker Auditorium, for all performances. This is a standard Fine Arts Council policy.

There will be a musical presentation of the "Cross and the Switch Blades" at 11:30 a.m. today in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union Ballroom. A musical ensemble of 22 students currently on tour of the northeast will give the performance. The public is cordially invited.

Three AFL-CIO Leaders Quit Pay Board

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three AFL-CIO leaders quit the Pay Board Wednesday, declaring it has been slated against workers. The White House promptly countered that President Nixon won't let the action "sabotage" his economic controls.

"It has been a device to undermine and wreck collective bargaining," said AFL-CIO President George Meany in announcing the resignations of himself, Steelworkers President I.W. Abel and Machinists' President Floyd Smith.

"The President will not allow any leader of labor or any member of management-no matter how powerful- to put themselves above the best interests of the American people," responded White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler.

Ziegler read from a statement that associated the word "sabotage" with the resignation of the three AFL-CIO members.

Ziegler said:

"It is the President's view that a few labor leaders representing a small percentage of the 80 million wage earners in this country will not be allowed to sabotage the fight against inflation and the fight against higher prices."

The resignations left the 15-man Pay Board with only two labor members, Teamsters President Frank E. Fitzsimmons and Auto Workers President Leonard Woodcock, and Fitzsimmons immediately announced he would stay on the board.

The Auto Workers said in Detroit that Woodcock would make no immediate decision.

"I think it very likely that the Pay Board will go on, but how and in what manner remains to be seen," said the board chairman, George H. Boldt.

Government sources indicated that Nixon could seek other labor members to replace the AFL-CIO leaders; or cut down the present 15 labor-industry-public members to six to maintain an equal representation; or reconstitute the board as an all-public body like Nixon's Price Commission.

Meany, backed up by the 13.6-million-member labor federation's Executive Council, said Nixon's program has clamped rigid controls on wages while letting prices and profits soar.

He said many prices, along with rents, interest rates and profits, had been exempted from controls altogether.

Meany, who is expected to lead a major AFL-CIO effort to oust Nixon from the White House in November's presidential election, told a news conference that politics played no part in the decision to quit the Pay Board.

"It is our duty to report, after four months' experience with this board, that it is merely a district instrument of the administration's political considerations and the interests of big business," said the labor council in a statement read by Meany.

Boldt, in a statement of rejoinder from the five public members of the board, denied that they had lined up with the business members to outvote labor in board decisions.

Proposed Pot Penalties Bring Mixed Reactions

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A national commission's recommendation that criminal penalties for private marijuana use be ended brought qualified approval Wednesday from young people and some local officials.

But many law enforcement officers opposed the recommendations as too lenient or impractical. Some officials even questioned Congress' right to legislate in an area previously reserved for the states.

And the commission's proposal not to prosecute marijuana users but not to legalize it either was, in the words of Alabama public safety director W.L. Allen, like "trying to follow the line of being just a little pregnant."

Allen said he was in total disagreement with the commission and he described the recommendation for ending criminal penalties of users as "another incidence of national assininity."

But many student leaders around the country said the National Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse had taken a step in the right direction.

"I agree with the commission's report," said Mary Scifres, student body president at Indiana University. "For too long young men and women have been penalized for using a drug whose effects are not as harmful as alcohol, in my opinion."

Alan Fong, co-president of students at the University of California at Berkeley, said the commission did not go far enough.

"Full legalization is needed, including sale," Fong said.

The commission recommended that felony penalties be continued for growing and trafficking in marijuana.

Larry Anderson, president of the Idaho Association of Student Councils and a senior of Twin Falls High School, agreed with the commission-including its assertion that marijuana should not be legalized until there is more proof on its effects.

"It's kind of a bad thing when they don't repeal laws but rather start turning their heads or going around the law such as in this case," said Anderson.

Antibusing Program Faces Opposition

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's antibusing program ran into heavy opposition Wednesday from leading House Democrats, indicating a tough road ahead for it in Congress.

Rep. Emanuel Celler, D-N.Y., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said Nixon's proposal for a moratorium on new busing "appears unwise, impractical and unconstitutional" and promised to hold extensive hearings on it.

FBI Agent Says Douglas Not Promised Payment

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — FBI agent Delmar "Molly" Mayfield testified today that informer Boyd F. Douglas, Jr., "has not been promised one cent" for his testimony in the bomb-kidnap conspiracy case against antiwar priest Philip Berrigan and six codefendants.

But Mayfield acknowledged under cross-examination that he did recommend to his superiors that Douglas, the government's star witness, be paid a "certain amount of money on a regular basis to include expenses."

N. Ireland Premier to Meet PM Heath

BELFAST (AP) — Northern Ireland's premier meets Prime Minister Edward Heath today to discuss the British government's still-secret political proposals it hopes will de-escalate the communal warfare in the embattled province.

Premier Brian Faulkner flew to London amid continuing violence, growing tension and fears it may be too late to bring peace between Northern Ireland's Roman Catholic minority and the Protestant majority.

Muskie On Top In Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Sen. Edmund S. Muskie captured 59 Illinois delegate votes for the Democratic presidential nomination Wednesday as the last ballots were counted in a contest that put some momentum back into his campaign for the White House.

The senator from Maine outdistanced Sen. George McGovern, who would up with 14 Illinois delegates, after swamping Eugene J. McCarthy in a separate presidential preference vote Tuesday.

Eighty-seven delegates to the Democratic National Convention were elected uncommitted to any candidate. Almost all of the uncommitted delegates are sure to follow the lead of Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago.

Control of that big bloc of delegate votes, and a convention seat for himself, were the only things Daley won in a primary that saw his Cook County organization battered as never before by the state and county victories of two Democrats who challenged the mayor.

Muskie's showing boosted him back into the lead in chosen and committed delegates to the national convention that opens in Miami Beach, Fla., July 10.

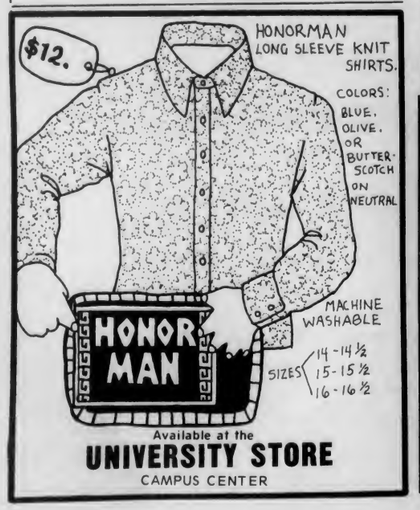
Muskie had a total of 81.5 delegate votes, Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace had the 75 he picked up in the Florida Primary March 14. McGovern was third with 28.5 delegate votes.

In the Illinois preferential primary, with 99 per cent of the precincts counted, Muskie had 747,887 votes, or 63 per cent, to McCarthy's 438,888, or 37 per cent.

It was a landslide margin, but it came over a candidate who is not a real contender in the crowded Democratic White House race.

Muskie said it was a clear cut victory in "the most accurate weathervane state in the nation."

Muskie's Illinois victories had been expected, but nonetheless, they send him into the pivotal Wisconsin campaign as a winner, and help eased the impact of his far-back, fourth-place finish in Florida. McGovern's managers had hoped to pick up at least 20 delegates in Illinois.



Muskie now needs a convincing showing in Wisconsin April 4, a victory or close to it, if he is to reclaim the front-runner status he enjoyed before the primaries.

ITT, CIA Charged With Hindering Allende's Election

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration reportedly was prepared to do all possible short of armed intervention to prevent the 1970 election of Chilean President Salvador Allende, according to a memo attributed to two ITT officials.

The memo released by columnist Jack Anderson said the State Department, on Sept. 15, 1970, authorized U.S. Ambassador Edward M. Korry "to move in the name of President Nixon."

The memo, said to have been written by two officials of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., Hal Hendrix and Robert Berrellez, declared the State Department gave Korry "maximum authority to do all possible-short of a Dominican republic-type action-to keep Allende from taking power."

The State Department refused comment on the allegation but Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said that during a closed session Wednesday Secretary of State William P. Rogers denied any U.S. intervention in the process.

In a column published Tuesday, Anderson said ITT and the Central Intelligence Agency "were plotting together to create economic chaos in Chile, hoping this would cause the Chilean army to pull a coup that would block Allende from coming to power."

ITT officials have denied the allegation.

The purported Hendrix-Berrellez memo was dated Sept. 17, 1970, some two weeks after Allende's popular election but more than a month before the choice was ratified by the Chilean congress.

Anderson released more than 100 pages of memos which he attributed to ITT officials.

According to the memos, ITT sought the assistance of the White House, Congress and various federal agencies in an effort to stop Allende and thereby forestall nationalization of the firm's multimillion-dollar properties in Chile.

Fulbright told reporters that allegations of ITT influence in U.S. foreign policy are "very bad business, if true."

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, called for a thorough inquiry into business influence on foreign policy.

Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania told newsmen he has "not the slightest interest" in the ITT memos.

"This whole ridiculous farce has gone far enough," he said, predicting the current case will be followed by "a series of Bobsey books entitled ITT in Vietnam, ITT in East Germany, ITT goes to Sea, ITT in the House of Representatives.

"Some publicity seeking character," he added, "will suggest that the President of Chile be subpoenaed," Scott said.

Women Drafted?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Wednesday completed congressional approval of a constitutional amendment giving women equal rights-including the right to be drafted into the military forces if Congress wishes.

The lopsided, 84-8 vote was greeted by a high-pitched war whoop or two from women in the gallery hailing a triumph at the end of four decades of effort. The House approved it last year 354 to 23.

The Senate's action sent the question to state legislatures since presidential approval of the proposed amendment is not required.

The states have seven years in which to act and the amendment would become effective two years after ratification by the 38th state-the minimum number required to make it effective.

The National Women's Political Caucus viewed the passage of the ERA as a major victory.

"The significance of women as a new and powerful political force is demonstrated by the overwhelming margin of passage of the ERA" said Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., co-chairwoman of the caucus.

The caucus is now urging women in all states to maintain the momentum by pressuring for ratification in their state legislatures.

"Forgive them, Father, they know not what they do," said Sen. Sam Ervin, D-N.C., in concluding his unsuccessful fight for a host of amendments. This brought a hiss from around the gallery which was dominated by women three to one.

In voting down a series of Ervin amendments, the Senate by lopsided majorities pronounced itself in favor of drafting women, sending them into combat, and lifting work laws some feel discriminate against them.

Actual drafting of women, of course, would require congressional revision of the Selective Service Act - and presumably would not come about unless there were a major warfare emergency. Compulsory national service including women was invoked by some countries in World War II.

Ervin, who led the opposition alone through three days of debate, said the amendment will create chaos in the nation's legal system.

Ervin saw the amendment as a blow to states' rights. "State legislatures will be meaningless zeroes on the map of the nation," he said.

Sen. Marlow Cook, R-Ky., said, "I was not aware states maintained their power by legislating discriminating laws against women."

Contraceptives Legal For All

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Wednesday established the right of single persons to use birth control devices on the same basis as married couples.

If married people are allowed contraceptives to guard against pregnancy, then the state cannot make it a crime for single people to use them for the same purpose, said Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., in a 4-3 decision.

The ruling upset the 1967 conviction of William R. Baird, a birth control crusader, for handing a package of vaginal foam to a young woman attending his lecture at Boston University.

Struck down also were provisions of a 93-year-old Massachusetts law that allowed contraceptives for single people only to prevent disease and contraceptives for married people to prevent pregnancy.

Twenty-five other states have similar laws. Most, or all, apparently will be declared void by lower courts on the basis of Brennan's opinion. However, the decision does not prohibit Massachusetts or any state from limiting distribution of medical contraceptives, such as "the pill," through physicians and pharmacists.

Brennan, the court's only Roman Catholic, rested the decision on the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee "equal protection of the laws." He said this means that "whatever the rights of the individual to access to contraceptives may be, the rights must be the same for the unmarried and the married alike."

Justices William O. Douglas, Potter Stewart, and Thurgood Marshall joined Brennan, while Justices Byron R. White and Harry A. Blackman added their votes against Baird's conviction for a different reason-the foam he gave the woman can be bought generally without prescription.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger alone voted to sustain Baird's conviction. He said that since Baird is not a physician or pharmacist he had no right under the state law to dispense contraceptives to anyone single or married.

In a second ruling, the court held 5 to 4 that prosecutors should not attempt to discredit criminal defendants with old convictions that may be no longer valid. The dissent came from the four Nixon administration appointments-Burger, Blackmun, Lewis F. Powell, Jr., and William H. Rehnquist.

The decision grants a new hearing to a man convicted in 1947 in Harris County, Tex., of raping his eight-year- old stepdaughter and sentenced to 50 years in prison. The only witnesses were the defendant Otis Loper and the child.

The prosecutor brought up a series of past convictions in trying to convince the jury that Loper's word was no good.

A Good Decision

Now that the Chancellor Search Committee has finished its work, it is up to the trustees to pick a new Chancellor for the Amherst campus. This decision should, of course, be well thought out each candidate being given his opportunity. However, this process should not take overly long, either.

For the trustees to meet and consider each nominee, it would seem that a final decision could not be accurately reached by next Tuesday's Board meeting. However, it does not seem fair for the nominees to be kept in suspense until the next regular monthly meeting towards the end of April. All considered, then, a special meeting in a few weeks should be called to announce the final appointment. Then all concerned parties would be able to continue making plans for next fall.

Six months is a long time for a person to hold a position called acting-anything. It does not allow for the most efficient means by which to run a University campus. UMass-Amherst is ready for a permanent chancellor.

We hope the trustees will make their speedy decision without having to sacrifice the quality of any decision made. This decision is one in which there has been much speculation during the secret work of the Search Committee. Go to it, trustees.

"You Are In Great Shape And Are Merely Experiencing An Expected Post-Freeze Bulge"

(Herblock is on vacation)

Ed Bryant

Positively Fearing St.

It was a lie. Every bit of it was untrue. Not that the statements themselves were false; rather the lie lay in that he was simply refusing to say what was on his mind. I tried to get him to tell me what he was thinking about, but it's hard for me to penetrate beyond the wall he has set between us. The ethics of schizophrenia are delicate indeed.

One thing was clear. He was terribly dissatisfied about something. No great deduction that; it was written all over his face, the only honest thing he had managed to write all day. Maybe the day was the key to the matter. He hadn't shown any great desire to get out of bed until long after it was inevitable that he do so. His reintroduction to the woken world was hardly cordial; I could see then that he was in no mood to smile at much of anything. Certainly the thought of the work ahead couldn't have cheered him any. He honestly had no desire to do the things that were asked of him yesterday. By delaying he could conceivably not do them until he was in the proper mood, or maybe not do them at all. Yet he saw through that game even before he started playing it. And at that, it wasn't even an unusual day for him.

It wasn't the day then. There are prcbably those who would dismiss it as p.a.d.'s, but God knows he's had too many days like that recently to blame them all on drugs. Tripping days were perhaps the sole exceptions to an otherwise endless string of days ranging from mediocre to atrocious on the happiness index. No, it wasn't even the drugs.

As I say he doesn't even let me get close enough to find out what's bothering him. It is frequently obvious to the point of pathos that he's having a hard time with something, but he refuses to confide in me. He makes it seem as though his problem may well be the lack of anyone to confide in, but that's ridiculous. To confide in someone you need to have something that needs to be confided. Otherwise you just talk, with no special gravity attached.

What it is, he wants to confide in some woman. Methinks he's confusing his cock with his soul, or maybe just his past with universal truth.

Has he no flexibility? He gets an idea in his head and can't shake it for months, even if the idea is so half-baked it shouldn't last more than two minutes in the mind of a sane person. I told him once that he was right, it would be nice to own California and give it to his friends, but that he oughtn't to get depressed because he didn't have it to give. I was exaggerating to make a point; he understood, but refused to acknowledge. It is fair to say that he is his own worst enemy.

Take HER, for instance. He insists that he's playing with him. She doesn't even know the game exists, let alone how to play it. It's a game he made up all by himself years ago, and he just will not believe, it's his alone.

Oh, I sympathize with him a little...His motives are kind; he means well, it's just that he's a bit fucked up. To see the situation, though, as I know he does and to fail to act seems to me to be inexcusable. I guess I would call him a moral coward of sorts. Do you understand what I mean? Shalom.

The Socialist Challenge

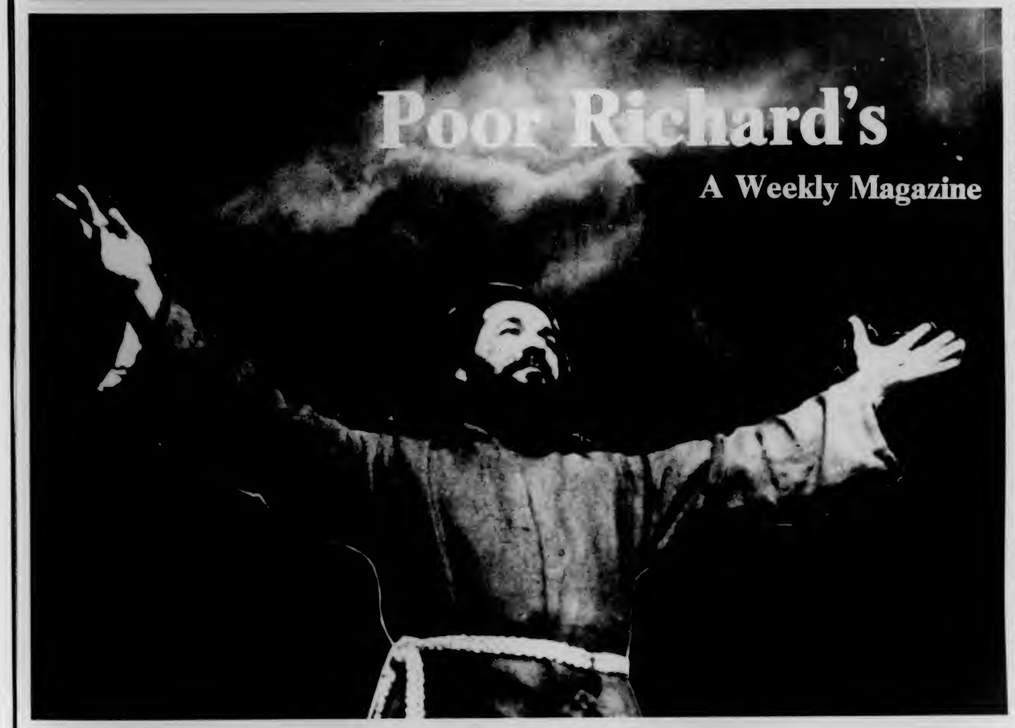
This election year is unique in that most college students have been, for the first time, electorally enfranchised. Among other benefits to be derived from this recently granted right is the fact that the campaigns of all candidates have penetrated the campuses more seriously than ever before. We can observe numerous "Youth for..." groups arising on a national scale. Student interest in local, national, and international social and political issues finds an avenue for expression in the upcoming presidential election. The increased politicization of American students should, at this time, provide the climate for a frank and open ongoing discussion of any and all questions facing the people of this nation.

For far too long the electorate has been treated to non-confrontational political campaigns, which have been long on slogans, fanfare, and tinsel, but short on clarity and honesty. Thus far in '72, New Hampshire has brought us a "defeat" for "Weeping Ed" Muskie who garnered 48% of the vote, and a "victory" for George McGovern who drew 37%. However, it was the McGovern camp that laid the arbitrary boundaries delineating success and failure. If Muskie received less than 50%, it would be a defeat; if McGovern got 25%, it would constitute a victory. However, we hear from an impeachable source involved with McGovern's campaign that his New Hampshire machine was counting on 35%; therefore, they publicly projected 25% as an indubitable victory. What could be clearer? An especially noteworthy event of the New Hampshire campaign was that rousing 5-way "debate" that turned out to be an object lesson in the old hidden program trick. But soon it was on to Florida.

George Wallace, running for the nomination of the same party as George M., Ed, Shirley, Hubert, et al, seems to thrive in a warm climate. Wallace walked away with over 40% of the vote, but, somehow it turned out to be a victory for Humphrey. For the most part candidates steered clear of one another, reinforcing what has become an American political tradition.

In Illinois the scramble for committed delegates goes on, but one significant point stands out: nobody hassles Daley. Richard (Chicago 168) Daley, the man whose Cook County party machine makes Tamany Hall look like a loose coalition, is feared and avoided by the seekers of this country's highest office. And yet they ask for our confidence, our support, and our vote.

Where are the clear cut differences in political perspective? Where are the burning disagreements that would distinguish the candidates, give them a forum for debate, and let us know exactly what we're to vote for?



There are, of course, verbal differences among the various Democratic and Republican candidates. Remember the vast differences between Johnson and Goldwater? Humphrey and Nixon? Well then, Why aren't these "differences" clearly visible in '72? What is Muskie's general economic orientation? Exactly how and when does McGovern say he'll end the war? Have any candidates come out in favor of abortion on demand? And if not, why not? What is their answer to institutionalized racism? There are entirely too many points on which the candidates of America's two capitalist parties have either no differences, or instead, pragmaticly vague non-positions.

A significant question before us now is whether this political swamp must encroach upon the university. Will the questions posed in the present period go unanswered, or will they be, as they can be, dragged into the light of day and systematically examined and decisively answered?

One of the main goals of the campaign of Linda Jenness and Andrew Pulley is to do just that. Their campaign is a sustained effort to confront, in a resolute manner, the issues of war, racism, sexism, unemployment, imperialism, and exploitation. Their revolutionary socialist program, their alternative to the politics of the Republican and Democratic parties, is a political catalyst of growing proportions. Paul McCloskey probably did not expect to debate a Socialist when he first announced his candidacy. Yet well before his campaign uttered its final gasp, he was eyeball to eyeball with Linda Jenness trying to defend his history of support for the war in S.E.Asia, his trigger-happy position on the Pueblo incident, his untarnished record of support to the House UnAmerican Activities Committee, and his refusal to take a stand on the Angela Davis case. George McGovern didn't expect to face supporters of a Socialist campaign at nearly every public meeting he attended, but now, we are warmly known in the McGovern camp as the "Jenness people".

At the present time on this campus there is consistantly visible support for the campaigns of Linda Jenness of the Socialist Workers Party and for George McGovern of the Democratic Party. Supporters of Chisolm, Lindsay, and Muskie have made their appearance, and Matt Tackeff has clearly come out for Ashbrook. Why shouldn't there be one or several direct debates among the supporters of these candidates? Youth for McGovern took an active part in the recent National Student Anti-war Conference, supporting immediate, total, and unconditional withdrawal of all U.S. forces from S.E.Asia. That is a tremendous first step inasmuch as their candidate has a somewhat different position on the war. Why not carry it a step further? George McGovern's refusal to debate either Linda Jenness or Andrew Pulley is no reason for McGovern supporters to take the same stance. Here on a university campus we have a unique opportunity. Historically, Socialist politics have been either systematically slandered and distorted, or specifically omitted, and at times violently suppressed. At this time, when interest in socialism is increasing, we must not allow the prejudices, vested interests, and crude propaganda that have in the past so hideously limited our political perspective, to impose those limits on us here.

Herewith, we extend an open invitation from the Young Socialists for Jenness and Pulley to debate the issues, to clear the air, and to provide what has hither to been lacking - a choice.

Exclusive: Son of God Tells All

BY JAMES E. LAVRAKAS

To believe or not to believe, that was the question paramount on the minds of everyone Friday last when Brother Julius Christ spoke to an attentive crowd in the Campus Center Auditorium. Christ, the Son of God, walks the earth once again, he claims. He says that he is that Christ.

As Christ, Brother Julius's main objective in his lifetime is to teach the Word of his alleged father, the Lord. In his capacity as mouthpiece for God he strains with a great "thorn in the side", so to speak. His problem is that in his desperate need and desire to prove and defend his alleged paternal link with the Lord he has to divert his attention from his main objective. The poor man's predicament is so typical of those persons throughout history who have sacrificed the preeminence of a cause for the sake of priving their own sacred identity which, in turn, insures their validity.

The afternoon of listing to Brother Julius was a frustrating experience because of his inability to sustain a consistant tone towards his subject. More frustrating, however, was the supposed rational debates that took place between Brother Julius and members of the audience. Most of the people who questioned him saw him either as a false prophet or a quack. The attacks manifested themselves in three distinct approaches.

The first approach was the quickest of the lot. A man in the audience stood up and leveled the charge that Julius Christ was the Devil, not Christ. Then he told him to go to Hell. In the following attempt by Brother Julius to rationally and logically talk to the man about his charges, the man slowly but surely inched his way out of the auditorium, much to the frustration and embarrassment of Julius Christ.

The second method of attack was a little more frustrating because it was futilely naive. Instead of attacking Brother Julius as a false prophet or as Satan in the flesh, the young ladies doing the questioning decided to debate logically and unemotionally using the Bible as a testing ground for Julius Christ's authenticity as the Son of God. Needless to say the debate soon got bogged down in academic trivia. And, needless to say, the self-proclaimed Christ held his own. Good grief ladies, anyone knows that the first thing that any prospective son of God must have as a prerequisite is a complete knowledge of the Bible, backwards and forwards. I seems that Julius knows a few other dimensions when it comes to knowledge of the Bible. For every passage that those young ladies came up with to stump Brother Julius with that man came up with five passages to confuse them all.

Then the Jesus Freaks started in. They were insulted, flabbergasted, and outraged. They went wading into battle emoting and desperate in their attempt to consume time and knock Julius Christ off of his pedistal. The show they put on was by far the most frustrating due to its nonsensical and blubbering attitude.

And through the smoke and heat of battle Julius Christ stood undaunted, cool, calm, and collected. So sure of himself, yet never arrogant he was, at many times, a captivating orator (although his grammar could use a little brushing up). So captivating was he, in fact, that at times people just plain missed the contradictory statements that escaped from his sacred larynx.

"...God is real, but you cannot find him through knowledge or information..." Yet, he went on to describe his purpose at the university as being strictly informational. What the difference between his information and other information consisted of hinged on the acceptance of the fact that he was the Son of God. He said, "I will tell you without boast, without hallucination--I am the son of God, the one, the only...the Son of God."

As many in the audience could not accept that as fact his information was no less valid or no more valid than any other theologians'. The whole afternoon was a great head-banging session with people standing around beating so many dead horses.

The only thing that Julius Christ did that could be considered god-like was the Herculean stamina that he displayed in his three hour non-stop lecture. There were times, however, when his lecture turned from the serious to the comic. It was at these times that the imprint of his identity as Christ on the audience was marred beyond all recognition. It was these comic sequences where his self-indulgence led him to the point where the credibility of any of his serious points was destroyed.

So, when he said, "...You have fifteen senses. There are twelve dimensions. You only know about three possibly four. You only know about five natural senses" and then went on to lambaste the audience for "perverting the truth" and for being mentally lazy he was looked upon as an eccentric (never bothering to explain the other ten senses, or the other eight dimensions) and as a scolding father figure who couldn't get his arguments straight. He played the fool, and that was sad.

When asked by a passive member of the otherwise agitated audience about his background and his first realisation that he was the Son of God the comic act was never better. Spirited out of his body to a throne where the Lord was sitting Julius Christ said, "I flipped out. Hey, I said to myself, he smilin' at me!"

When asked whether he would be crucified like Christ he was very mysterious. He said that he would "die in mockery" only after something else had happened. One of his roving followers pointed out the passage in the Bible that supposedly describes his own death. "And I will grant my two witnesses power to prophesy for one thousand two hundred and sixty days, clothed in sackcloth...and the beast that ascends from the bottomless pit will make war upon them and conquer them and kill them, and their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city...where their Lord was crucified."

The follower said that this passage means Julius Christ will die three years hence. He will be shot to death in Jerusalem in a mockery of his teachings. The question is, exactly, what is the creature from the bottomless pit, and who and where is the other prophet? Julius Christ never bothered to answer these questions.

As the people in the auditorium marched out many of the comments that were made aptly expressed by their tone and content the frustration and uncertainty that was rampant that afternoon. "Either he's the biggest asshole in the world, or he's the Son of 'God'", said one totally confused listener on her way out.

In the back of people minds were two promises that Julius Christ had made. "This is only the second university that has allowed me to speak to a group of people", he said. "When the day comes, I will remember how you all treated me."

Another promise he made was one with a condition in it. He said that he could not force his love on anybody that a person that have and returned his love would live in eternity, and in health. "I can heal you of every sickness and every disease. I don't care how incurable, I don't care how longstanding."

Maybe there is no hope for me. I walked into the auditorium with the worst sinus congestion I have ever had and I walked out with it ■

The Overthrow: The Finale

It all started out with an innocent question, remember? Like so many innocent beginnings, however, the whole thing soon developed with a mad frenzy into one of the most confusing and emotional situations I've ever had the dubious honor of taking part in. Anyway, it all started out with an innocent question: "You get all the courses you signed up for?" And after that. . .the deluge.

This was the end of it all and we felt like hot shits, Nick, Big Louie, and I as we sat in Nick's room and gloated and reminisced. Then the chivalrous streak started to show. We talked about the way WWI ace fighter pilots used to salute their fallen enemy by flying over their hospital.

"We'll carry on in the true spirit," I said. "We'll visit Brogan (and bum him out one more time) at Cooley-Dickenson keeping in the spirit of the vanquished and the vanquisher."

"Straight ahead!" they echoed.

"I gotta stay here", said the Midget. "I'm supposed to meet somebody in an hour. I still got the spirit, though."

"In that case," I told him, "here's the little piece of "action" that I promised you if we survived this ordeal." I pulled out the four-day supply of Darvons that I had procured for the Little Guy and, with a cat-like grace he snatched them from me and swallowed four.

Nick and I left for Northampton. We were picked up by a '57 Chevy. Ironies of irony, who should be at the wheel? Eric the Rat himself. Being with that famous revolutionary that part of our blood began to warm and we told him what we were up to. He said that he had just finished building lewd snowmen, and women, down by the campus pond. We all laughed it up and were great buddies by the time the hospital came up over the hill. He let us out.

We made our way to Brogan's private room where we donned our infamous ski masks. When we went in he looked semiconcious, but when he saw us he bolted upright.

"I do not pick my toes", he asserted. "I have nothing to do with the 'rosy fingers of dawn', or 'the finer things in life', or Homeric epithets. I just take orders. " Tears swelled to his eyes. "I'm the tragic hero in this story."

Son of a Gun, I thought. It's the old "pass the buck" trick. He won't get away with it. I let him have it with some news that I knew would drive anyone beserk:

"Howard O. Brogan, I am here to announce to you that you have been nominated for the Chancellorship of this mighty institution."

He gasped, turned white, then red, then blue (being the patriotic soul that he is). Then he went out. We left our masks and a copy of Euripides on his chest as a momento of our visitation with him.

our hero revealed

Back safe and sound in Southwest we headed to "Bites and Sucks", our usual stomping ground. There at our table in the corner sat Big Louie, looking completely blown away, stuffing himself with egg salad. We went over and clapped him on the back.

"I'm pissed off he said. I just found out that the computer gave me the fuck over in two course grades for last semester. I wish there was something we could do about those damn things." His eyes lit up. "Hey, I suppose there is!"

We leaned in close, whispering to each other, then glancing around, planning our revenge for the Midget with another over-throw in the future.

Touchie, Feelie

When someone sneaks up from behind and very casually slaps you on the back are you riled? Are you bothered when you make eye contact with a familiar face and there's no response? Well, there are a myriad of answers to these rhetorical questions, some of which are answered in Desmond Morris's latest best-seller Intimate Behavior. A zoologist by training, Mr. Morris brings his vast knowledge of animal physical interraction into the human realm and comes to some interesting conclusions about what sexual and social contact may mean. Barry Starvo reviews this latest best-seller on page four and in the process gives us some of Morris's insight into the way we behave.

Remember The Big Bopper?

Fifteen years ago, some of the biggest hits of the year were "At the Hop" by Danny and the Juniors; "Get A Job" by the Silhouettes, and "Chantilly Lace" by the Big Bopper. Ten years ago, a random sample of the big singles includes "Twist and Shout" by the Isley Brothers, "Green Onions" by Booker T. and the MG's, and "Do You Love Me" by the Contours. Well, if you have fond memories of these songs, you may well appreciate Frank Baglione's revealing look at Little Latin Larry and the bash which took place in the Union last Friday night. Fifties Nostalgia is beginning to become the "in" thing these days, at least amongst those who want to let loose; but is it really fair to disguise the Fifties look with songs your local band used to play at your Junior High dances? "Good Lovin'" anyone?

Wilkommen, Bienvenue, Welcome

Christopher Isherwood was a young British scholar who wrote of his extended stay in Berlin during the early Thirties in his Berlin Stories. Playwright John Van Druten interpreted his stories in his play I Am A Camera and made a star of Julie Harris as the amoral Sally Bowles. This character made a triumphant return in 1967 when the smash hit Cabaret rocked Broadway. The musical altered the form, giving it a fresh concept through which a story could be told. The film version further accentuates the brash, ingenuity which so distinguished the stage production and has emerged as the brightest, most exciting film musical in seasons. A review of Cabaret can be found on page eleven where Bob Nesti has found the film much to his liking.

And Bringing Up The Rear

With all due respect to you, the reader, here's what else can be found within this issue. First, on page five Donald Robadue reviews Without Marx or Jesus. This controversial analysis by French journalist Jean-Francois Revel makes the startling conclusion that America is the only country capable to have and maintain a social and political change of order. Could we replace Coca-Cola? Then following our centerfold, there's the two album pages Ken Sulin reviews Malo and gives it  (Two Stars): Steve Feld reviews Al Kooper and gives it maybe  (three big ones). Then Frank Johnson tells you how to care for your records, no matter how you rate them on page ten. On the back is Weekend, this time with a bit of a change. With Vacation coming up, the listing expands to list events in the Boston area which may be worth seeing. Two regular items worth reading are on your left and right. On page three, are more letters concerning Frank Baglione's "Women In Revolt" which has clearly upset many; on our left is The Finale to "The Overthrow" which may finally bring a response from Erma and the whole, sick crew in Bartlett.

Correspondence's To Poor Richard's

To the Editor:

I am, at present, sitting in my UMass cubicle seething, to put it mildly, over that travesty of "a sharp look at a seemingly unfiery struggle" on pages eight and nine of your magazine. There's plenty of fire in my eyes, brother. And I may burn the paper.

Men like Mr. Baglione are a prime cause of the bitterness of the feminists that he so loudly decries. He speaks of a "couple of silver-haired ladies, older women who in their desire to remain young had abandoned maturity, discretion, and dignity, the gifts of age," among the marchers on Women's International Day. I personally have only admiration for these women--they had guts enough to expose themselves to the ridicule of people of Mr. Baglione's ilk for something they believe in. The same ridicule was levelled at Sojourner Truth and Susan Brownell Anthony. As for the men who marched, I hardly think they were suffering from "lack of balance and feelings of insufficiency," I think they had plenty of courage. Men with feelings of insufficiency would have been standing on the sidelines making snide remarks to cover their insecurity.

Regarding the fact that "everyone wore pants or long skirts," I don't see what difference that makes, other than the fact that Mr. Baglione could not look at their legs. Anyone who wore a short skirt on Wednesday was crazy anyway - it was damn cold out.

In response to Maggie Houghton's statement that "We must control our bodies," Mr. Baglione says, "by the time you need an abortion, you have already lost control of your body." There can be several answers to this--one--women in today's society have very little control over their bodies, never mind their lives, two--maybe the men should have more control over theirs--there aren't that many virgin births these days, three--so what, if the woman has lost control of her body by getting pregnant in the first place, that's no argument against her regaining control of it by having an abortion. I could go on, but I feel that's sufficient to illustrate my position.

By the way, Zoe Best, who co-ordinated the Women's International Day, has an identity of her own. She is much more than merely "Mrs. Michael Best, wife of the economics professor."

I fail to see Mr. Baglione's reasoning that "Whatever is to be done about job discrimination, about abortions, about equal rights, will be done in Washington or in the state capitals." Maybe the actual legislation will be enacted in the state and national capitals, but the pressure on the legislators will come from the people. And the only way that the people are going to put pressure on the legislators is if they are aware of these problems.

I fail to see where "non-sexist day-care centers where men and women rear the child" demonstrates "irrational" reasoning and "displayed the radicals' infatuation with communism." If anything, that statement displays Mr. Baglione's reactionism.

Mr. Baglione states that "People are no longer intimidated by name calling"--why then does he do it? "Slovenly, fleabit street people," "a cheap panderer to all the different organizations," "the comedy team of Shields and Penny,"etc., look like pretty good examples of derogatory name-calling to me.

"More emphasis must be placed on how to shoulder the burdens our race or sex places upon us rather than attempting to throw them off..." That sounds like a parody on the white male minority's attempt to keep the oppressed majorities in their respective places. Maybe I'm just a malcontent, but I see no reason that I should adjust myself to an unfair lot rather than trying my damnedest to change it.

In closing, I would just like to say that I haven't found being a "grown women" and a "sister" mutually exclusive.

Charlotte M. Newell

Dear Editor:

Women's International Day wasn't an exhibition of tactics or antics that have died; it was an exercise in presentation, a coming together, a demonstration. The effort, attack and thrust of the movement doesn't rest on such an activity nor does it rest on buttons and posters. It rests on the "quiet" untiring effort of women across the country whether in their homes, on the streets, in government, or on committees to rearrange this society so that it offers equal opportunity to all, not a few--to give a choice, not a decision.

Mr. Baglione tries to convince us that there is a completed cycle of change when in fact history is an evolutionary sequence of events with no revolution of instant, dramatic, total change. Because one set of demands by one group has been met is no reason to believe that the end of change has come. What he terms compromise is merely an intellectual liberal mask for the dying and insensitivity that come from one who has lost heart. Those who laugh may have tried, tired and died long before their time; it's they who sit and reap the benefits of the "foolish" who still work their guts out for change. Because young people are now quiet is no reason to believe that they've grown to nobility, that they're still working for change.

An example of Baglione's deadened sensitivity is the manner in which he writes of abortion. Abortion isn't a humorous topic for the thousands of women who are by economics and by law forced to die in back alleys or have children they don't want. He snidely commented that "No one pointed out, however, that by the time you are in need of an abortion you have already lost control of your body." The other side lies in the men who are irresponsible and out of control by impregnating a woman who shouldn't be or doesn't want to be, men who don't have a concern for birth control, and a woman's rights. Any man who's responsible for an unwanted birth or needed abortion should be considered guilty of the grossest kind of negligence.

Inevitably his idiotic babbling said that Lesbianism is the ultimate Women's Liberation and implied that Lesbians are the most hateful of men (there are many married women who hate men more than any Lesbian). Not all or even most of us are Lesbians because we hate men, but because we have come to love a woman. And, we've achieved an economic and emotional independence from male dominance. His mocking tone of idle snobbery grows from his tinny, unstated belief that all a woman needs to keep her happy is a good lay. Obviously Lesbians are happy without him, so he tries to belittle Lesbianism as mere man-hating.

Mr. Baglione condemns moral arrogance and yet he indulges himself by making judgements on topics he doesn't understand or know about. He clouds this obvious lack by personally assaulting and insulting women who have more wisdom, strength, and grace in their little fingers than he has in the male appendage wherein his brain resides. Isabel Arnold doesn't cling to young people; it's the young who look to her for experience and direction. If Eileen Stewart seems dramatic, it may be relative only to the stagnation and insensitivity around her. The committees named have worked to uncover gross discrimination against women at UMass and to work for change. The men who support Women's Liberation may be confused but it's only that confusion which comes from growth.

We don't hate men; we fight those male leaders who oppress us. We are angry not hateful. We'll continue to speak, march, and work until change, for us, comes--and, then we'll pay our respects to the dead and dying who passed before us, who lost their heart before the struggle was over. May your soul rest in peace, Mr. Frank Baglione.

To the Editor:

Concerning Mr. Frank Baglione's article "Women in Revolt," I would like to offer the observation that "subjective reporting" (as the piece was labeled) is a kind of writing whose success is hard to realize. Success is hard, I think, primarily because subjective reporting depends on the writer's inherent wisdom and the particular keenness of his sensibility. Obviously, good subjective reporting is then a rare thing, for there are few who possess the necessary wisdom, perspicacity and ability to express themselves.

Poor Richard's, however, is fortunate to possess Mr. Baglione, who seems gifted with all the keenness of the bulldozer operator at your local sanitary landfill. I refer specifically to his observations about some of the participants in the Women's Day at UMass. Now I have known Isabel Arnold casually for two years, but I am sure even those who have known her longer and better were as astounded as I at the subtle and penetrating accuracy of this pithy description: ". . .a greying (sic), middle-aged lady, who gave off an air of suburbia."

Mrs. Arnold, who grew up on a Kansas farm, who has lived in the south Pacific, who has organized free schools, tutored ghetto children, counseled draftees, who is possessed of convictions formed long before they became popular--Mrs. Arnold, giving off an air of suburbia! One would have never thought it. And yet, I suppose it took the insights of a subjective reporter to reveal her true inner nature. One can only guess at the subtle workings of Mr. Baglione's remorselessly perceptive mind: "Hmmm. . .greying (sic) hair. . . middle-age. . .air of suburbia! Q.E.D." Yes, friends, there it is, gen-u-ine subjective reporting. So subjective, in fact, that one cannot but wonder whether that air of suburbia might not have emanated from Mr. Baglione's own armpits.

"There were also a couple of silver-haired ladies," continues Norman Mailer, Jr., "older women who in their desire to remain with the young had abandoned maturity, discretion, and dignity, the gifts of age."

How he slices through the surface to reveal the ugly bones of truth! With what pathos that metaphor, "Gifts of Age," underscores the irrevocable damnation of these poor old women. Did Mr. B. talk with any of these silver-haired, greying (sic) ladies who had so foolishly tossed away the Gifts of Age? No, for this subjective reporting is all instinct and gut reaction, never to be tinctured with sterile objectivity. A good subjective reporter like Mr. Baglione must stand off to one side, picking up the vibes, sniffing out the airs of suburbia. He must rely only on his own sensibility; in this case, a sensibility so incredibly attuned that one can, without much difficulty, picture Mr. Baglione jotting down his fantastic revelations about discretion and dignity without ever noticing that his fly is unzipped.

I cannot think Mr. Baglione is middle-aged, or silver-haired, or even greying (sic), but it is comforting to know that he is possessed of the greatest of the Gifts of Age: humility. We know this to be true because he tells us: "The period of moral arrogance is passing." Unless with that phrase he is ushering in a briefer period of unintentional irony.

A Plea For The Release Of Feeling

BY BARRY STAVRO

INTIMATE BEHAVIOUR by Desmond Morris

Desmond Morris, the author of the best selling The Naked Ape, has written a new book called Intimate Behaviour. In this book, as in the others he has written, he looks at the "Human animal" from a zoological perspective.

His premise for this book is stated in the introduction, ". . .something special happens when two people touch each other physically, and this. . .I have set out to study. . .The outward signs of love are readily observable, and there is no reason why they should not be examined like any other type of behaviour." Morris concludes his introduction with the working hypotheses that people in todays societies do not touch enough. He feels that despite stong desires to do so, social custom inhibits most from expressing their genuine feelings.

In the first chapter Morris states that the human's introduction to intimacy comes within the womb itself. This intimacy continues after birth, as the baby constantly receives attention and nurturing from his mother. It is here that the child becomes indoctrinated to the much needed act of physical contact. Morris then declares that these earliest acts of touching, feeding from the mother, embracing, patting, burping, all of these acts are subconsciously ingrained in the individual and he desires them to return (in some form) throughout his life.

As the child grows out of early childhood, he begins to develop an independence, and concurrently, social pressures against "letting hourself go" start to affect his behavior patterns. Consequently, Morris believes that people use substitute actions to express their want for physical contact. For instance, he says, "The smile itself is a symbolic embrace operating at a distance." He calls child play fighting disguised intimacy. He also mentions hand waving, back patting, and holding hands as disguised transmitters of physical desires.

As the person grows older his or her style of dress can be recognized as symbolic signs of the individuals desire to be loved. Morris lists tight-fitting clothes as a socially accepted device to encourage the opposite sex to take a physical interest in you. Similarly, women's make-up, like false eyelashes, eyeshadow, and lipstick, are all used to convey the "feminine signal."

These attracting devices naturally lead to, in the most ideal of conditions, true love. Here Morris makes the argument that the social and psychological pressures against "letting go and trusting (someone) is enormous." Yet, Morris says, "Often against all reason, we fall in love." And that falling in love breaks all rules of bargaining and dealing that we have used in other adult relationships. Since there is some type of primitive drive to love, Morris concludes that the desire to touch and be touched is similarly biologically based.

Next, Morris considers the human love affair. He opens by saying that the progress from first attraction to a total intimacy is a long and complex one. Then, he conveniently breaks this sequence down into twelve stages. Examples: stage number one Eye to body, stage number four Hand to hand, stage number seven Mouth to mouth, stage number twelve Genitals to genitals. Accordingly, Morris believes there is no such thing as love at first sight, rather, only a powerful attraction exists.

Unfortunately, Morris concludes that true love is not present enough today. He believes that in place of it there is an abundance of "violent and economic rape" (marriages made for money), along with the ancient form of "commercial rape" (prostitution). In discussing the freer atmosphere of sex today, he believes that while superficially satisfying, that there is an absence of true love. On the sex manuals he says, "the emphasis is no longer on loving, but on sexual athletics." In short, Morris believes there is a possibility of a "tyranny of the orgasm" due to phony love.

Morris also discusses other modern day alternatives and substitutes for physical contact. He lists in this line of thought the category of "specialists who are licensed to touch." These include doctors, hairdressers, barbers, shoe shiners, and masseurs. These professions serve the role of supplying touchers. Morris admits that our patronizing of these businesses to satisfy our touching needs is not conscious; nevertheless it evidences our need to do so. He also believes that a touching-hypochondria, of sorts, exists in the twentieth century. Specifically, he is talking about the high rate of non-disabling illnesses that we get which result in our receiving comforting treatment. Those who are accident or cold prone are also in this category. Morris feels that we induce these illnesses on ourselves to receive consoling acts of touching.

In object substitution for intimacy, Morris openly labels dogs and cats as objects that we can touch, fondle, or stroke at any time without being socially self-conscious. In effect, what Morris is saying is that the 90 million dogs and cats in the U.S. serve a role of love and sex substitutes.

This substitution extends beyond furry animals too. Morris singles out: dolls, cigarettes, posters, nibbling on food, gum chewing, pillows, blankets, warm baths, jewelry, all of these objects act as stand-ins for humans that we can touch freely without feeling stigmatized. According to this idea, the reason people have so much difficulty sleeping in strange beds is that the pillow and mattress aren't familiar to them, and therefore they cannot caress it and become as intimate with the bedding as at home; the result is a difficult sleep.

The last object substitution Morris talks about is "self contact," or "self intimacy." When you touch your face, cross your legs, hold onto your arms or legs, or masturbate, you are again replacing intimacy with artificial methods. He also mentions the recent development of "Encounter Groups." While these institutes evidence the burning desire that so many have for body contact and intimacy, Morris feels also that it points up some ludicrous aspects of today's society: that you must go to a scientific institute to be touched.

In his summary, Morris declares that old theories of child rearing such as not allowing the child to get the upper hand on you, and that you should treat the child as a young adult, are fortunately not followed any more. For if the child in infancy is not loved and touched, then it will never be able to trust anyone later in life.

The final decree Morris leaves the reader with is efficiently expressed in the final sentence of his book: "How much easier it would all be if we could accept the fact that tender loving is not a weakly thing, only for infants and young lovers, if we could release our feeling, and indluge ourselves in an occasional, and magical, return to intimacy."

Land Of Coca-Cola and Revolution

BY DONALD ROBADUE, JR.

Without Marx or Jesus: The New American Revolution Has Begun

By JEAN-FRANCOIS REVEL

The word is out all over Europe: America is the only possible site for the revolution of the twentieth century, and if it succeeds here, it will then spread to the rest of the world. So says Jean-Francois Revel, the French journalist responsible for Without Marx or Jesus: The New American Revolution Has Begun, published in France in 1970. It was written to shake up European Leftists and Third World revolutionaries out of their fantasy slumbers and tell them that America, a land they believe filled with fascism, capitalistic warmongering imperialism, repression, and other bummers, is the only nation capable of initiating and sustaining a true revolution. This is because the USA contains all the elements necessary to bring about significant changes: dissent, powerful technology, pre-existing political freedom, economic power, and people willing to act to produce change. These things exist together nowhere else in the world.

"It (U.S.) is the only nation where the poor are a minority..."

The Revolution that Revel talks about is one that will solve the world's economic, social, and political problems, bringing peace, prosperity, freedom, equality, and an end to war through world government. America is the only nation fulfilling his list of five prerequisites for a successful revolution. These criteria all revolve around dissent, which he sees as a vital fact of American life. Preceding a revolution there must be criticism of social, economic and racial injustice; criticism of the mismanagement of natural resources and the possible dead ends of technology; criticism of the exercise of political power and lack of the people's participation; and criticism of culture, morality, tradition, and the function of existing culture. In addition there has to be an insistence upon the re-emphasis of human relationships. All these elements, Revel says, exist in America today.

Revel is pleased at the energetic dissension going on in the USA and he mocks the inactivity of the French radicals and leftists who deliberately fall apart the minute they have a chance of getting into actual power by getting one of their coalition members elected to a high position. He notes the strength and proliferation of our dissent not only by students but blacks, women, and oddly enough, the workers. He cites the three month General Electric strike of 1969-70 and the Post Office strike of 1970 as indicative of the increasing vigor of the use of traditional forms of social warfare.

It is interesting to note the many misconceptions Revel says the Europeans have of us, and why the notion of a revolution in America, while perhaps boring to us, is so shocking to them. We are viewed as living in a society dominated by a monolithic Silent Majority (remember that cliche of a few semesters back?) and a handful of greedy capitalists robbing the poor and suppressing the blacks. Our government is controlled by fascist pigs and imperialist warmongers, the elections are rigged, and the media tell everybody what to do, with the consequence of homogenizing our culture. (Come now, you don't really believe all that stuff too, do you?) Europeans look down their noses at the United States as if it is the only country that pollutes its air and water, has poverty, crime, social inequalities, political injustice and corruption, corporations and bureaucracy, and in general has things wrong with it.

Quite the contrary is the case says Revel. Many of the things we take for granted here, such as freak shops, 'underground' newspapers, freedom of speech and publication, high school educations, and college educations for low income students, effective internal pressure on US foreign policy (anti-Vietnam war movement) and cultural diversity are all lacking in most nations of the rest of the world.

The American people are doing things unprecedented in world history such as registering a strong and effective protest to its government's foreign policy, and enjoying an unprecedented high standard of living. It is the only nation where the poor are a minority, making up 12% (25 million) of the population. Even the lable 'poor' doesn't refer to a class and is only a relative term that in 1970 described a family of four with an income of less than $3,700 per year. The annual per capita income of the US in 1968 was $3,412. In France it was $1436, and West Germany $1753. What we call poverty has more to do with lacking educational opportunity and housing rather than lacking income alone. By our standards the average European lives in dire poverty.

Europe, Revel says, is far behind the United States in enjoying personal and political freedom, educational and economic opportunity, and individual responsibility for social and political problems. For example, 'preventive detention' of certain kinds of criminals, being used in mild form in the USA, is a practice in widespread and arbitrary use in France and elsewhere in Europe. When Attorney General Mitchell came up with a watered down version of the 'no-knock' law, it was met with a storm of protest unimaginable anywhere else in the world.

Too many of us, the dissent of the far left, womens rights, gay liberation and a myriad of other groups and their causes is taken for granted and at worst, considered amusing. The enlightenment racial injustice, improvement in mental health programs, criminal justice, consumer protection, and other public issues are receiving both attention and action by the public. This dissent, to Revel, is a significant indicator of a healthy and free country, when compared to the state the rest of the world is in. We too must be constantly on guard against government repression, but the fact remains that we have some machinery to deal with it.

Revel's admiration for the spirit of our dissent is intriguing, in fact, almost sad, because if we in America are hardly satisfied with the state of our country, it is depressing to imagine what Western Europe, and worse yet, Russia, China, and the dictatorships of the Third World and elsewhere, are like, judging by our standards.

The second world Revolution that Revel envisions can only occur when a country has gone through the first Revolution, that is, when it has political democracy so that the poeple can openly dissent and obtain access to power. America went through the first Revolution in 1776. This is not the case in any totalitarian country such as Russia and China, nor in any European country, which lack substantial dissent to their authoritarian governments, not in the Third World nations, which lack democracy.

It also can occur only in a country with a powerful technology and knowledge orientation, and with economic apparatus sufficient to use this knowledge to same ends. Revel says that the United States has the best library system in the world and we spend a larger percentage of the GNP on education than any other country. We also have the highest standard of living and a competent, research oriented technology. The USA is not tied down to a past heritage of grandeur and aristocracy, and was in fact created out of a revolution and a heritage of pioneering and development. We have no deep rooted cultural tradition to look back on wistfully, which in Europe, Japan, and the Third World serve as strong retarding factors to change and progress in any area.

Thus primed, we can work toward abolishing the notion of national sovereignty, since for the first time in the history of the world, war is no longer a valid means of settling disputes. International institutions are needed to solve world problems like overpopulation, poverty, and impending ecological disaster. The petty quarrels between nations are no longer useful or relevant. Our economy has become increasing a world economy and not an international one, and our vision must be widened to include this fact. Our problems are all questions of mankind's survival, not the survival of one country at the expense of another. If we are to survive, and do more than survive but also lead gratifying lives, then indeed a Revolution must occur, and the present order must be changed. Revel sees America, land of diversity, dissent, knowledge, an economic power, as the perpetrator and leader of this change.

Revel's Revolution obviously is not a speedy or bloody one. It won't be obtained by the traditional revolutionary gendre that is typical of students in France. Revel writes: "We can easily see why it is necessary for workers to be miserable. 'Are you hungry?' students asked the striking workers at the Renault plant—to the astonishment, and amusement to the astonishment, and amusement of the workers. If the workers are happy, they can no longer be the dissenter's means of redemption." The traditional Left is essentially conservative. "We are not allowed to admit that the situation of the blacks in America has improved in the past twenty years".

He continues: "Radicals everywhere and even liberals, especially the intellectuals, are outraged if you questioned that their country's Establishment is fascistic, and that the future of their own struggle is hopeless. Maybe this political despondency is necessary as a psychological shield, in order not to compromise with the enemy. But by and by the habit of despondency can become so strong that you no longer are able to percieve the real changes when they take place, prefer not to hear about them, and feel deeply sad when you cannot avoid acknowledging an improvement."

I have quoted at length because what Revel says is important. Whether we see future change as a Grand Revolution or simply as change for the better, it will be accomplished only by continued political action and dissent, responsibility, knowledge, work, and an awareness of what has and has not been accomplished. This kind of action is occurring in America by both youth and adults. Because it is happening here and no where else, only America, says Revel, has the potential to produce the real changes needed to sustain and improve man's existance.

It is hard to beat a vision like Revel's, and he is the first to admit that it is a vision, no more, no less. Those people most enthralled by the word 'revolution' will probably reject the interpretation offered in Without Marx or Jesus. Those put off or amused by it will find the book tolerable, if not interesting. In any case, while Revel may be dead wrong about the future, and his conception of Revolution and the details of its unfolding cloudy and uncertain, working for man's survival is no ignoble task, and might even be worth spending a life time at.

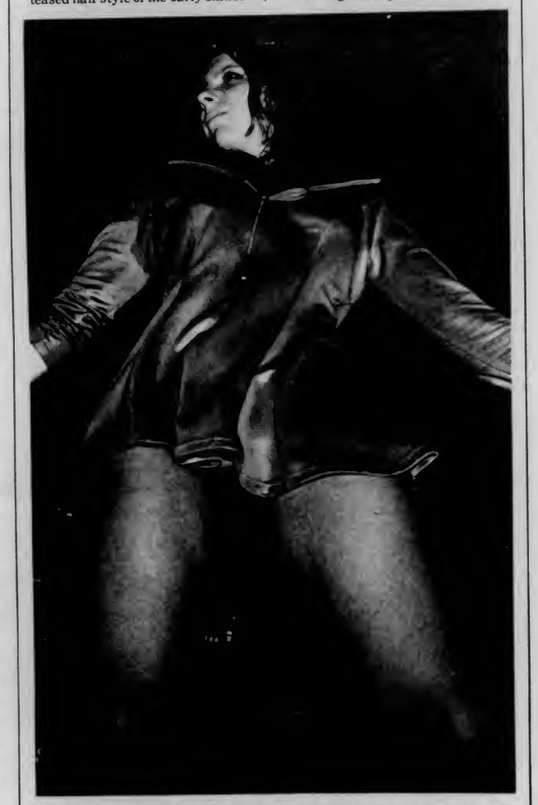
Did You Say 1957?

A Nostalgic Journey To Times Past By Frank Baglione



Revisiting the past is a risky business. There is little chance that you can remember it right and be the person you once were. If the visit is by means of personal recollection or the pausing over some bits of stored experiences, accuracy in the recreation is secondary to the emotions evoked. But when the visit is public, when it is in the company of others who try to piece together an image of what you and they once were, the collective inaccuracies can leave you feeling empty and looking ridiculous.

There has recently been many attempts at rock 'n roll revivals, an attempt to recreate for one night the music, styles and feelings of that period from the middle fifties to early sixties that had such tremendous impact on those struggling to grow up in the shadow of Elvis Presley. Some, of course, have never left that time of black leather jackets, slicked back hair and peg 14 pants, but we rarely see them on a college campus. For one thing they are too old, most of them, and more important nearly everyone has been converted to the music and styles that appeared when the Beatles seized our ailing rock 'n roll music before the middle of the sixties and propelled us into the second great era of the music. We are now entering a valley where the heights of the Beatle era, much less that of the Presley period, are faintly visible through the years.

Reunions are one thing, there we go to see how things have changed. Revivals are much the more hazardous for we are testing our memory and, in our recreations, showing our credentials. There were many who attended the Little Latin Larry "greaser" concert who had very good credentials. They had duck's ass hairstyles (DA's) that seemed to have been cultivated over years of combing; rebel flags and gang names graced the backs of leather jackets; dungarees and slacks hugged the ankles with a 13-inch peg; and "high water" pants were appropriately raised. Many of the girls wore calve length skirts, pleated, plaid, and flared. They had white bobby socks, high school sweaters with a letter, thick red lipstick, rouge, and pony tails. One girl had "Ronnie" tattooed on her arm; several men flexed a "mom."

For a while I thought they were the real thing, that they had crawled out from somewhere in Holyoke or Chicopee when they heard Little Latin Larry and his troupe were to appear at the university nestled in the never-never land of Amherst. While the warm up groups Fort Mudge and Keady, Smithline and Baltimore played some very good "modern" rock, the assembled greasers hooted and screamed for them to get off the stage. "No more faggot music," one gang taunted. It was an interesting gang that "cruised" around the ballroom threateningly punching one another in the arm and calling after passing girls. We had seen them before a hundreds of high school dances--the type that comes looking for girls, and, failing that, settles for a brawl. The difference was that back in 1961 they were for real, tonight they were a Disney recreation.

The lovliest people there were the girls who had decided on the teased hair style of the early sixties over the pony tails of the fifties. They wore short skirts of the pre-mini variety and tight blouses. The fifties girls were "Frans" and "Ronnies", but these girls were the "Sheilas" and "Shirleys" who could make a young man be thankful for puberty. Best of all, beneath their white blouses they wore bras, those ancient contraptions that gave real meaning to the high school claim of getting "bare tit." Even when just standing quietly in the dancing crowd they literally trembled with sexuality. They formed a nice contrast to the modern, lovely but sexless lead singer of Fort Mudge. They were sexy in the way they drew you in with the apparent promises clothed in chaste garments. It was not the simple "I'm on the floor of the Quicksilver" sexy; it was more complex and figurative.

Yet if some in the crowd with their cigarette packs rolled up in the sleeve of a tee-shirt could make you feel as though you had actually been transported back among your peers of the fifties, there were others who were not the genuine article...and that was a little scary. Hair was much too long on many, and mustaches and beards appeared too frequently. If the pants were properly pegged, the workshirts that complimented them were definitely out of time. Even those who had managed to avoid such tell-tale modern weaknesses in their wardrobe often conducted themselves as if they were at some Woodstock for greasers. Indeed, even the term "greaser" was an anacronism that betrayed the youthfulness of this crows having pretentions to a fifties' adolescence. For in those days when they dressed in black chinos, black jackets, black shirts, black motorcycle boots, black Garrison belts with studs and white socks, they called themselves "hoods." They were not overly concerned with the amount of vaseline on their pompadours, it was the "punk" image that had captured them. Paul Miele, Phil Rossie, Dick Borrelli and "Butch" Ciocca never thought of themselves as "greasers." The term is one given by a generation who went to school with tunes by Peter and Gordon on their lips.

Then who were these people? If they were really "hoods" where were the black chinos? When had they really first heard "You Were Mine" by the Fireflies and "Summer's Comin'" by Ronnie Dawson?--driving to Salisbury Beach on Route 110 in a 1951 Ford, or listening to some oldies show while racing down Route 495? They seemed too young to have heard Elvis Presley's recording of "Are You Lonesome Tonight" when it was first released. There was a suspicion that it was all a mock, an ill-planned mimicry. As one companion exclaimed, "This isn't the fifties; all they're doing is conjuring up album covers."

But the true test of this night was not deposited among the varying degrees of credibility in the audience's appearance; the burden of proof lay with Little Latin Larry and his group. The major rock 'n roll revivals that have played in this country have reached back into the past and plucked people like Bill Haley and his Comets to "Rock Around the Clock" one more time. Other oldies groups would appear on he same bill in order to represent the different personalities and styles that performed early rock--an Elvis figure, groups like the seven-man Monotones who did the carefully choreographed steps, turns and twists so characteristic of black groups like Little Anthony and the Imperials or even the early Supremes. An instrumentals only group like Duane Eddy and the Rebel Rousers; or a woman with a child-high voice like Kathy Young backed up by The Innocents. Could a travelling group like that around Little Latin Larry perform continually, not at occasional revivals, but on regular concert tours and still give an adequate representation of all these different facets of the rock scene?

Little Latin Larry proved the task is impossible. He had the Presley image, and a good back up group to play the instrumentals; he did have a Latin, if not black, three man group, the Latinaires, to do the rehearsed steps and arm flapping; and he did have two scantily clad, blonde young things for our prurient delight. But the overall effect produced a scene that was too crowded. Quality was sacrificed to quantity.

The entire performance was overstated and many added touches were clearly unnecessary (like one member of the group who would periodically go down to one knee when handing Little Latin Larry a towel to wipe his face). The introduction was in the worst shrill disc jockey style--"And Now!...The Band that says it all... Without saying a word..." The musicians started the performance with a good arrangement of "Nightrain." They were properly clad all in black. Next the three man Latinaires (and our towel burdened friend) appeared to give their best performance of the night, "Shop Around." And then, just before Larry himself appeared, the Latinettes were brought on.

The Latinettes, Angel and Fifi, put a noticeable lump in every male throat. You could hear people gasping for breath. Clad in skimpy purple skating dresses they danced onto the stage shaking their breasts in a delightful manner. The zippers on the top of their costumes were zipped down far enough so that each breast could make a valiant attempt to break lose on each bump in their dance. They were overwhelmingly sensual. The girls, however, did not sing, they danced, and thus seemed like Go-Go girls who had fallen back in time to the early rock era.

Little Latin Larry was introduced, somewhat hysterically, as "The King of the Greasers." Events proved his title should have been "King of the Screamers," for he punctuated his otherwise fine singing with an abundance of screams and grunts. He was dressed in an iridescent blue sharkskin suit, maroon shirt and black shoes. He looked very much like one's cousin Dominic--I was very satisfied with this image. After singing three sons that covered all points of the hood era "Runaround Sue" by Dion; "Johnny Be Good" by Berry; and "Hound Dog" by Presley--he left the stage during an instrumental break (they should have announced it as a lady's choice) only to reappear in an all black outfit, save for silver stripes on his pant legs. His fans liked this image much better. It was rougher.

After introducing the members of his group--twelve in all including Chico, Gregorio, Anthony, Dominic and Butchie the towel slave--Larry did a very strange thing. He raced ahead to 1966 to sing "Good Lovin'", song first done by the Young Rascals. It was mortifying. From Hound Dog he had jumped ten years, right over the twist lunancy (God was that an awful time), Right over the dull folk music depression, and two years into the Beatle years! Hardly had he gotten back on the track with "Lucille" by Little Richard, "Who Put the Bop in the Bop-sha-bop-sha-bop," and "Where, oh where can my Baby Be," then he plunged back like a magnet to 1966, to sing Van Morrison's "Gloria." This affront to the hoods was incredible. The audience loved the song, cheering madly, but they had already given evidence that the music of the middle sixties was the milk on which they had been bred. But this was supposed to be a "greaser," if you must, performance and the Young Rascals and Van Morrison were no hood heroes.

He was dressed in an irredescent blue sharkskin suit, maroon shirt and black shoes. He looked very much like one's cousin Dominic--I was very pleased with this image.

One's suspicions that he was surrounded by imposters now gained added credence. his was a Doris Day generation. These people had never trooped down to the Warner Theatre on Sunday afternoons to meet the opposite sex and kiss and feel their way through a double feature. They knew the Beach Party films, but few, I imagine, were familiar with the constant barrage of black and white gangster and crime films that the hoods had witnessed every weekend, waiting breathlessly for the inevitable scene when the two women in the script, (always two) would hussle up to their room "to change" before the "job", silently stripping down to bra and slip and thereby giving every thirteen-year-old boy in the audience a "bona", or what we now would call a "hard-on".

After "Gloria" the image was completely destroyed. You were at a masquerade party listening to Larry singing songs like "Money" and "Shout", and "Heatwave." You had come hoping to here songs like "You" by the Aquatones; "All In My Mind" by Maxine Brown; or even "Black Slacks" by Joe Bennett and the Sparkletones. They didn't even do "Blue Moon." You were handed a condensed version of everything you didn't like about early rock, a Readers' Digest interpretation of the period.

The disappointment of the evening was real, but it was not, happily, shared by the people (about a thousand) who had come to hear and see and participate with Little Latin Larry in what they all thought was a credible recreation of the "greaser" hop. Hordes of people danced gleefully, and hardly a soul listening to and watching the performance defected from the audience. The group was seriously handicapped in the performance by the fact that the staging provided them was much too small for the twelve man group. In addition, a bomb scare delayed their appearance, and time for only one set was available. The group did play well together and under better conditions the performance would have been quite credible.

In speaking to Little Latin Larry after the performance he said his group was not primarily interested in the "nostalgia thing" but rather were out to play a wide range of music from 1956 to 1966 that people could enjoy and dance to, pre-psychadelic music, perhaps. Taken in this light his performance gains some. Yet if this is his aim, it is not what one is led to believe from the groups promotions, which are that this is a "greaser" concert for the black clad, white sox, set that remember the music of the late fifties and early sixties as "their" music, not the music some older brother or sister played to them before bedtime.

It would be nice if Larry would given in to the image, if he would come out some night and sing "I've Had It" by the Bell Notes, or "You've Got Everything" by Bob Luman, songs older than Sputnik. Perhaps when his group appears again here at the University on April 22nd, they will have a larger stage to play on, be allowed a couple of sets, and have a few older songs that capture the better moods of the era they seek to portray. We don't know if the group has the potential for this type of performance, or whether they are well satisfied with the response, admittedly large, they receive for the sightseeing tour type of performance they gave last Friday night.

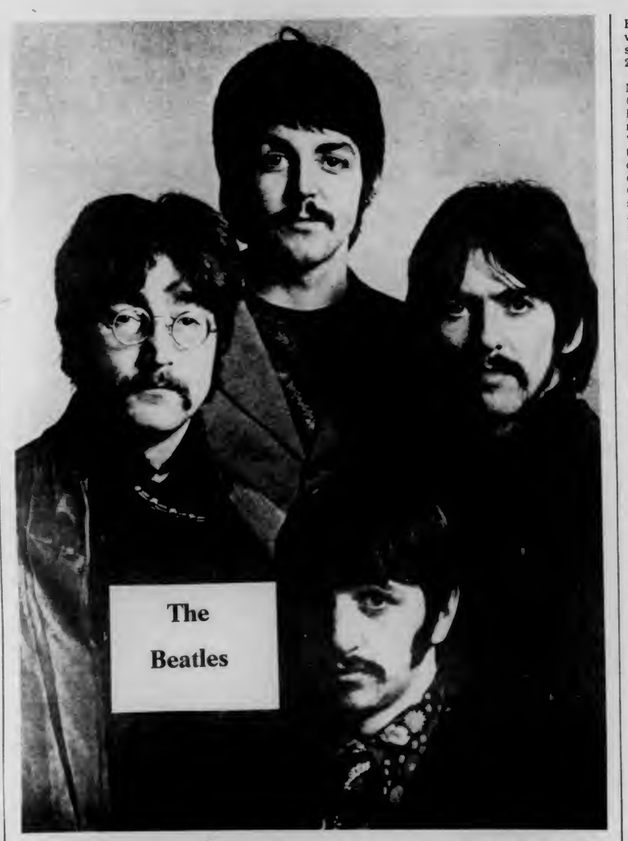
Did you say 1957??? I'm afraid not. Mimicry, a grand delusion that the freaks of this generation could capture the style and feelings of the freaks of an earlier one. Maybe some day a group of young people dressed in dungarees and thick woodsman shirts will come barefoot into the ballroom to hear the "dry look" sounds of today, and we will all see how different is the past in the present. The fifties are gone forever, you could only be glad that Carol Zannini, who taught you to do the "hop" so that you could dance to the music of Danny and the Juniors, was not there to see how distant the fifties really are.

"Paul Miele, Phil Rossi, Dick Borrelli, and Butch Ciocco Never Thought Of Themselves As "Greasers".

Singles — The Essence of Rock Music?

BY J. HANSON

Do you like singles? I hope you do, because 45 rpm records can be as good as recorded rock music ever is. The single says in two or three minutes what whole albums do (if at all) in thirty or forty minutes. It should be the backbone of the music industry, but it isn't.



Last fall I read an article about one of the leading East Coast AM radio disc jockeys. He seemed to feel that he was representing 'hip' music in his fight to program more album tracks on the air; the same article had his remarks on the 45--the essence of which was that hardly anyone over twelve listened to them. Obviously I take exception to that statement but there is some truth to it. Very few people do listen to 45s, unless they are in a car listening to a radio. This is the fault of many people--the record companies who hardly ever distribute singles, if they even release them. But if there was a demand for them the companies would sure as hell sell them. People are totally unaware of them. Case in point: last summer Capitol Records released an incredible single by the Move called "Tonight", which was then high on the English charts. This was quite a startling event, but the record's sales were pretty bad. So the Move came out with a new single a few months later called "Chinatown." If this record was ever released in America it was never distributed. Why should it be? No one would buy it anyway. So the companies really aren't to blame.

"Aha," you say, "But I did buy a few singles last year--Rod Stewart's 'Maggie May', Carole King's 'So Far Away', etc. Yes, but these aren't really singles. Here a definition problem arises. The singles mentioned above were all 'trailers', that is a 45 released comprising only album cuts. Both those songs could have been bought on albums before they were released as singles-- they were released solely to make money by getting people to buy the albums from whence they came. Most of the singles in this country are pretty much the same. I consider a single to be a single if at least one side hasn't appeared on an album or if it is substantially different from an album version. And I'm not talking about castrating a long song in order to make it playable on the radio timewise. Thus the Beatles' "Let It Be" warrants inclusion in a singles collection, but the Doors "Light My Fire" doesn't. The former was quite different from the album, having a "Moog sounding" guitar part, etc., whereas the latter was merely chopped down from the lengthier album version.

But this is all getting pretty technical. Every single has merits of its own, whether or not it is on an album. A trailer is just like listening to one album band of twelve. A single is a single, to be found nowhere else. And when a band makes a single intending it to be a single, and nothing else, the results can be awesome.

Have any of you ever heard the Kinks' "Autumn Almanac"? Or the Stones "I Wanna Be Your Man"? Or the Yardbirds "Questo Volta"? (If you've heard the latter let me know, as I've been trying to find it for quite a while.) The point is that there exists music on hundreds of 45s which is far and away better than most album stuff. And it's pretty frustrating to say that to people and have them think of David Cassidy, etc., and sneer. And while we're here I'd like to make a remark about David Cassity. The man is making music for an age group which obviously enjoys it. And most of us sit on our thrones and look down at him. He is doing something for a different group of people pretty similar to what many groups did for us while we were in high school. Remember "Popsicles and Icicles"? Or "Wild Thing"? Or "Hanky-Panky"? The last two came out while the Beatles were around and I don't remember any mass outbreaks from the same people who now laugh at the Partridge Family, whose music is at least miles above "Hanky-Panky". (Bit of snobbism there I know) Talk to ten year olds and see if they really care about James Taylor or Cat Stevens. We're judging everyone by our standards. Sorry about the length of this digression. I would take one of the Who's better 45s anyday to their albums. Does anyone out there really care? I sure hope so, because if people continue to ignore singles they'll all be aimed at the younger audience, which is fine for them, but it sure isn't for me. How much longer will gems like "Chinatown" or Family's "In My Own Time" be around? The answer is largely up to us.

We might as well start at the top. The Beatles have made a few more singles than most people think. The first one I know of is a version of "Love Me Do." This particular version came out on Canadian Parlophone. I hasten to say I haven't heard it, but I know someone who has. He says it has a strange kind of sound to it; it's like a bunch of kids let loose in a studio for the first time saying "Well, what'll we do now?" Voice quivers, etc. This was reportedly the first take--the second one was the British and American one.

Next one would usually put "From Me To You" but that can be got on a British album called "A Collection of Beatles Oldies." So much for that. For trivia lovers the Swan version of "She Loves You/I'll Get You" has "Don't Drop Out" printed on the label on (presumably) the later pressings of the song.

For all practical purposes, the first single we're concerned with is "Help/I'm Down" (Capitol 5476). Most people are pretty familiar with this song. It is one of Paul's best out and out rock songs. Memories of John playing the organ solo with his elbow at Shea Stadium. This song is kinetic as hell. Try to stand still during it. Try to move listening to some of Paul's later stuff. George & John's chorus and the nifty guitar solo add considerably to this record.

Next came "Lady Madonna/The Inner Light" (Capitol 2138). Again, the "A" side was on an album, but not the "B" side. There was a minor controversy about this record a few years back--apparently George pinched the words for it from somewhere (I could look it up, like Thurber says, but it doesn't really matter.) At any rate he won the Paul Kantner award for it from the fellow who first noticed it. It's from George's Eastern period, opening with a harmonium and sitar. (Please, no questions about who Lord Sitar really was.) This could well have been a George solo record--the others aren't easily recognizeable. The lyrics leave me a little flat, but I never went in much for this type of music anyway. It's pleasant enough, but it would have been in better company as part of George's "Wonderwall" Soundtrack.

The Apple single "Get Back/-Don't Let Me Down" is different a little from the version on the "Let It Be" album was--the "A" side anyway, as "Don't Let Me Down" turned up on the "Again" or "Hey Jude" album. Added conversation ("Wearin' her high heeled shoes and a low necked sweater. . .") over reprises of the main theme is the most noticeable difference.

For purists only, as the album version is pretty near synonymous with it. (Apple 2490)

"Let It Be/You Know My Name (Look up the Number)" (Apple 2764) was the only Beatles single where both sides never turned up on an album. "Let It Be" was much better than the album version--and quite different from it. The chief difference comes in the break. George's "Abbey Road" guitar solo is not to be found the album. The chorus is submerged just right in the background, John letting out beautiful "aaahs". Horns appear in different places. George Martin produced this one, not Phil Spector. The controversy about the Beatles and their producers is still a little too raw to go into, but, at least on this track, Martin is way ahead of Spector. But Martin on "River Deep, Mountain High" conjurs up awful visions. After listening to this I find it impossible to listen to the album version. It is one of the best things the Beatles ever did.

The "B" side is pretty different. This wasn't ever on any album. It's kind of a vaudevillean-calypso synthesis, John taking the lead vocal at first. A monologue introduces "Dennis O'Bell" who gives us a Legs Larry Smith (late of the Bonzo Dog Band) type croon. The backing is drums and piano-- John later takes over the vocal chores with a kind of nonsensical singing and grunting. But this leads into (surprise, surprise) a great saxophone solo by the late great Brian Jones. It finishes up with a belch and more of John's Mr. Micawber grunts. It's different enough. I can't remember who "Dennis O'Bell" was; I seem to remember something about it being Mal Evans, but I'm not sure--I don't know the name.

I'm not going to go into the Fab Foursome's individual post May, 1970 singles. Next to come, if there is sufficient interest, is the Rolling Stones. From "Come On" (1963) to "Let It Rock." (1971)

Malo: A Minimum of Expression

BY KENNETH SULIN

(Malo--Warner Brother Records)

Several years ago a San Franciscan group going by the name of Santana sprouted and brought with them yet another league of the pop culture; Latin music. They carefully arranged their sounds, perfected their techniques and eventually proved to be adequate competition for the already booming rock industry. The strange thing about Santana was their prevalent domination of rock and roll within the category of Spanish-Latin music, they simply were not followed nor met with a threatening group whose sound would parallel with theirs.

The time has now arisen when the members of Santana may be looking over their shoulders in concern for a new assembly calling themselves Malo are now breaking onto the charts. Although the foots began from the seeds of Santana, Malo is growing into the same shape only being a bit more detailed and exact than their predecessor. In fact the leader of the group is Jorge Santana, guitar player, organizer, and brother of Carlos.

Repeating, "the shape is the same" however the composition doesn't necessarily have to be and, by the way, is not. Malo has given themselves a lighter sound, one that is more relative to the class of South American music and representative to the class of South American music and representative of what you'd expect to hear coming from such a labeled group.

Being basically quieter and less affected than Santana, Malo has nevertheless withheld all the ingredients that are necessary in maintaining a Spanish-morroca tone. Unlike the blazing guitars and pounding drums one would plan on discovery that Malo makes an extensive use of horn arrangements, namely with trumpets, trombones and saxophones. Malo's problem is that they hardly escape a moderate imitation of Herb Alpert and can only be associated with night club styled music. The horns are no means offensive but they fail to carry any resemblance to the factors of rock and roll. It seems evident that such musical coordinations will only harm them with respect to any pop fans. Looking at the situation from a different point of view, through the eyes of the moonlight music entertainment one would place them on the ranks as being too robust and contemporary sounding. Malo is not extremely convincing, their musicianship is adequate and not immediately unappealing but on the other hand there is a lack of any definite correlation between content and intent.

Malo consists of approximately ten members; however, by listening to the album you'd think only four were actually performing. Their sound is definitely not cluttered rather it is exceedingly drawn out and becomes dull, uninteresting and bland. Each individual song, from beginning to end, doesn't exactly make Malo appear as patient group, in that their improvisations, and that's what they are, seem to be very, very unimpressive-closely relating to nothing more than studio jam sessions. Perhaps that's being a little too harsh on them, but the selections could have been put together by a number of groups in simply a day or two. One must admit that Malo is nevertheless a consistent assembly, consistent in producing all of the above.

As said before the horns, mainly trumpets, play the major role of the overall sound. More or less they try to replace the strength of a guitar which results in a loss of tightness along with a loss of flexibility. The music is dependent on horns and as a result it must function on the sometimes blaring duos that drift on into boredom.

The mixing of various selections becomes a peculiar entity in that the album usually breaks from a rapid paced tune to soft, happening again and again throughout each side. Just when you've sat down and relaxed to a smooth song you are nearly shaken to your feet with a follow-up piecing. The individual cuts exemplify this very fact in themselves by at times being appreciably serene and later rather vibrating and pressing. Malo has control over their musical vocabulary but they often get carried away, not being able to hold themselves to a constant sound.

The album consists of a variety of vocals some in Spanish some in English; however, they become monotonous and offer an absolute minimum of expression. As always congo and bongo drums have to be included with every clause of the record in order to coincide with the supposed mystical Latin American sound.

Although they appear to be a bit more sophisticated than Santana, Malo will have to push it some to get a piece of the public's recognition. Santana may look over their shoulders, but they'll probably smirk and not worry about Malo becoming a possible competitor.

Al Kooper Up To Date

BY STEVE FELD

A POSSIBLE PROJECTION OF THE FUTURE/CHILDHOOD'S END--Al Kooper (Columbia Records.)

Al Kooper is the kind of guy you know even if you don't know him. His credentials read like those of a giant, which intermittently he is. That's Kooper you here singing all the good songs on Blood, Sweat and Tears first album, Child is the Father to the Man, like "I Can't Quit Her" and "I Love You More Than You'll Ever Know". He originated the group, and left after that first album. "We called it Blood, Sweat and Tears because that's what it took to get the thing together."

His two supersession albums have won him gold records. The first was with Mike Bloomfield and Steve Stills, and the second was live from the Fillmore with Mike Bloomfield and friends. Both were good records, especially the latter, which contain some of best jams that I have ever heard.

Kooper started out as a session man for Columbia, first playing for Bob Dylan on Highway 61 Revisited, Blonde on Blonde, and maintaining their relationship to the present day by helping with Dylan's last, New Morning and also his latest, which he is presently recording in New York.

Today he is considered among the finest around on the keyboards (he can really tickle those ivories) and can probably show the likes of Jorma Kaukonen, Keith Richard and George Harrison a thing or two on the guitar. He is constantly in demand and has played with the Stones (Let It Bleed), Jimi Hendrix (Electric Ladyland), and the Beatles (that's him you hear on the organ in "Revolution", the flip side of "Hey, Jude").

And the guy can perform, too. He was at UMass last spring, down by the pond and he put on a helluva show, expertly displaying his versatility, constantly hopping from a baby grand piano, to a butterfly-shaped electric guitar, to a roaring organ. As thin as a reed, and with a voice that was once described as being like a gopher's (!), he played his ass off for over an hour, finishing with a twenty-minute explosion of the Stone's "The Last Time".

A Possible Projection Of The Future/Childood's End is Koop's fourth solo album and, like may of it's predecessors, falls short of doing justice to its creator. His first solo effort (I Stand Alone) created a bit of a stir because its cover had his face superimposed over that of the Statue of Liberty. It accomplished its goal, by illustrating the title, but since then he has had the stigma of being some sort of an ego-oriented individual (you know, one of "them"). I Stand Alone and You Never Know Who Your Friends Are were laden with brass, still with Kooper from his BS & T days, and were bad albums. Through them though, he was asked to write the score for the movie The Landlord, and by the time his next album came out, Easy Does It, Al was showing some signs of pulling through.

His finest solo record to date is his last one, New York City (You're A Woman). After seeing him perform here last spring, I was compelled (along with the metaphorical title) to buy it and since then have gotten many hours of enjoyment from it. On New York City, he did a fine version of the Elton John-Bernie Taupin song, "Come Down In Time" (he did it by the pond too), and layed down several fine tracks ("Going Quietly Mad" "Nightmare #5", "The Warning Someone's On the Cross Again"). The title track is a snatch from a symphony he is writing, New York City: 6 AM to Midnight.

Interestingly enough, it was Columbia Records' own advertisements for New York City (You're A Woman) that explained Al Kooper's primary problem as a solo artist. On the ad, a sexy voice sighed, "With an Al Kooper album, you know the performance and the production is going to be good, so all that leaves are the songs. Listen..." It worked with New York City, but it doesn't with his latest.

In a time when it is fashionable for an album to have no title at all (Santana, Led Zeppelin), Al Kooper's has two. But unfortunately, the potentiality of the titles is never reached (remember George Harrison's "What is Life"?). "A Possible Projection Of The Future" starts off with synthesizers Moody Blues-type sound effects and a booming, reverberating voice explaining:

"I say, if our generation can survive all the hate that surrounds us, we will grow to be a rare breed of senior citizens. What follows here then is a possible projection into the future. Let us imagine ourselves in 50 years."

Besides being identical to In Search Of the Lost Chord, the song doesn't say a damned thing. It's ridiculous and the word "pretentious" has never before been as justified to use. Why, at least the Moody Blues have a theme throughout their albums and they make some sort of observations. Here, Kooper is an old man, not telling of the future, but looking back into the past. The song is vagrantly autobiographical where he tells of his accomplishments like a Columbia Records' promotional biography.

In addition to naming the record after this abortion, the album cover coincides as well. Kooper is made up to look 80 years old, he has a number, is on welfare, "but I still got my guitah, motherfuckah" (sic).

Meanwhile, "Childhood's End", the second half of the title and the last song on the album makes significantly less claims than "A Possible Projection Of the Future". "Childhood's End" along with so many more of the songs on the album, such as "Please Tell My Why", "Let Your Love Shine", "Bended Knees (Please Don't Leave Me Now)" and "Love Trap" are all good pop, no more no less. On all of these, Kooper plays a myriad of instruments and has the backing of Herbie Flowers, Paul Humphries, Claudia Lennear, and other contemporary session people.

Al Kooper can always be counted on for some good R & B and on A Possible Projection Of the Future/Childhood's End he enhances a Smokey Robinson song, "Swept For You Baby" and he does (as did Laura Nyro on her latest) Curtis Mayfield's "Monkey Time".

Possibly the best song on the album is Kooper's version of a Bob Dylan song, "The Man in Me". It is a great arrangement and a beautiful song and it shows that despite much of this record album, Al Kooper still is one of the major figures in rock today.

Keeping Your Stylus And Records Clean

BY FRANK JOHNSON

Most of us handle our records pretty casually. After all, they don't cost that much to begin with (although they're getting steadily more expensive), they don't break very easily, and besides, most of the machines that play them handle them so roughly that taking extra care would be a waste of time. Or so it seems.

Nothing could be farther from the truth. True, records don't cost as much as a prerecorded tape, but as a collection of LP's mounts up, so does its value. If you buy 12 albums a year, that's $60 right there. After about 5 years, the cost is enough to finance a high-quality music system. If records don't receive any care during that time, that's tantamount to throwing $300 down the drain, for it may be that a $300 music system won't be able to play badly-handled records.

Apart from rough handling, records demand extra care even when they are not being played. One of the worst problems is warp, which may result from leaving a recored in direct sunlight or else too near a raditor. Warp may also result from stacking records horizontally on top of each other, which deforms the grooves and forces dust inside the jacket into the grooves. Finally, with the possible exception of Dynaflex records, LP's are not unbreakable. In comparison to old 78 rpm records, they are shatter-resistant, but they can still be broken if flexed overly strenuously. It is safe to say that most record damage results from simply not taking the time to prevent it.

Badly-handled records not only sound bad when played on a high fidelity system, but they sometimes cannot even be played. Most turntables do not handle warped records very well, and attemps at playing them can sometimes result in a damaged stylus. Fingerprints have oil in them, and this oil attracts dust, which damages the grooves and could the stylus. Records also become electrostatic very easily, because vinyl is an insulator and a dielectric charge forms quite readily during periods of low humidity.

All of these problems can be eliminated, if the owner is willing to take a little extra time and spend a little money (not much) on some record care devices. The first lesson to be learned is how to handle records. First of all, fingers should never touch the record grooves. Instead, records should be handled by the thumb holding the edge securely, and the remaining 4 fingers supporting the center label. With some practice, this method of record handling becomes automatic, and just by taking the time for extra care in this manner will greatly preserve LP's. If you own a record changer, don't use the stack cycle, and play records individually, if you can. This will reduce the likelihood of scratches when the records come down on one another, and it also puts less strain on the motor.

However, the greatest plague to records is dust. In its most innocuous form, it builds up on the stylus and causes distortion. But its effect is much more subtle. Though dust seems to be soft, it is actually quite abrasive. When it is met by the force of the needle tracing the record grooves, it can be ground well into the grooves, making it difficult to remove and deteriorating the quality of the discs. Dust and its effects can be reduced by always keeping the records in their jackets at all times, and also making sure that the inner paper sleeve away, thinking that it interferes with extracting the record. In doing this, they insure the entry of dust into the jacket, where it is redeposited on the surface each time the disc is removed. To avoid this, keep the inner sleeve, and don't just leave the slit facing the jacket opening Take the entire sleeve out when a record is played, and after use, put the record back into the sleeve separately before replacing the jacket. It is best to place the slit as far as possible from the jacket opening so as to prohibit dust from entering. This simple technique makes a big difference, and not many people take the time to do it.

But dust can get on to the disc easily enough when out of its protective sleeve/jacket. To remove airborne dust from the record we need some sort of record-cleaning device. There are a variety of preparations for this purpose, but I will eliminate any record cleaner that comes in the form of an aerosol spray or an impregnated cloth, because the compounds used are designed for monophonic cartridges having a high tracking force. If these fluids are used, they foul the stylus easily and do more harm than good.

The best results can be obtained by using specially-designed plush cloths, the most famous being those manufactured by Cecil Watt. The cheapest of these is the "Preener", and it sells for about $4. It consists of a plush surface (much like cut velvet or serge) on top of a hollow, spongy cylinder. It is applied to a slowly rotating disc so that the plush surface penetrates the groove, catching all the dust in the process. Inside the hollow cylinger is a wick which, when activated with distilled water, releases an ionic charge that dissopates static electrocity, and this lessens the likelihood of attaching more dust. This system, if the owner is really serious about taking care of his records.

Other Watts devices are more elaborate, but do the job as well as (or better than) the Preener. The "Dust Bug", an early Watts product, looks like a small tone arm made out of Lucite, with a plush pad and a small nylon brush at one end, and a small suction-cup mounting at the other. It is mounted on the opposite side of a turntable so that it traces the disc before the phono stylus does. The bristles loosen dust within the grooves so that the plush pad picks them up instantly, keeping the record free from dust. Some turntables don't have enough room to allow the suction cup mounting to hold, and also the weight of the Dust Bug slows some turntables down. Sometimes the bristles travel across the disc too fast to do very much good. In cases such as these, the Preener is to be preferred.

A more elaborate and thorough device, which is used by the author, is the rather expensive ($15) "Parastat". This combines the principles of both the Preener and the Dust Bug, It consists of record. The plush pads pick up dust the way the Preener does, but in addition to or else gently removing the stylus assembly (consult cartridge instruction manual for this, or ask a dealer before you attempt this). With a small, stiff brush, obtainable at a jeweler's shop, or elsewhere, gently stroke the stylus in the same direction that the record is played. this, the nylon bristles penetrate each groove simultaneously and loosen the most deeply imbedded dust and dirt. The Parastat is especially useful for reconditioning old discs that are very dirty, but it also may be used on discs which have previously had an anti-static treatment. The bristles will clear the grooves of any gum or residue up to a point, but if records are very dirty they will have to be washed.

The thought of washing records may come as a surprise, but it is actually a very useful "last resort" operation when nothing else works. To wash a disc, prepare a solution of warm water, preferably gently heated distilled water, and add a drop or two (not more) of mild dishwashing detergent. With a clean cloth, gently but firmly washing the grooves in the solution, making sure that not too much pressure is applied. After washing, rinse thoroughly in cool, distilled water, drip dry for about a minute, and gently shake or flex the record so that most of the water is removed.

Then, place the record on a set of clean, absorbent paper towels (Bounty or Viva are the best). Set aside to dry in a dust-free environment, then replace in the record jacket. It is best to purchase a new inner sleeve, and the most ideal for this purpose are poly-lined paper sleeves, costing about $0.10 each. They are available from several record supply outlets.

If dust happens to foul the stylus (as the photo shows), never try to remove it by means of the fingers. Oil will be transmitted on to the stylus surface, and there is also danger of stylus damage if this is done. Instead, remove the stylus assembly either by taking off the tone arm head) consult instruction manual) (To determine this, observe the stylus as it traverses the grooves). After this is accomplished, check to see that all particles are removed from the stylus tip. If they aren't, then moisten a Q-tip or other cotton swab with isopropryl alcohol (don't use regular rubbing alcohol, because it is diluted with water and contains lanolin), obtainable at drug stores. Very gently, swab the stylus tip with the alcohol-impregnated swab. Usually, one or two strokes is enough. After this operation, the stylus should be sparkling clean. If in doubt about taking out the cartridge or stylus assembly, always check with the dealer or consult the instructional manual. Never use Carbona or acetone solutions because the stylus is cemented to the shank, and these preparations may dissolve the cement, ruining the stylus.

To reduce the frequency of these operations, keep records in a dust-free location, away from radiators or direct sunlight, where convectional currents may carry a lot of dust. Put them vertically, in a record rack with slots for each disc. Never leave them lying about or lying on the turntable for very long, for dust can easily settle on them. Storing the records vertically lessens the chance of record warp, and it also permits easy categorization because the titles are indicated on the end side of the record jacket. If the rack is large enough, records can be sorted according to alphabetical order, with "A's" on the left and "Z's" on the right.

With a little care taken before playing, your records should last a lifetime and never give you any trouble. If the procedures outlined above are followed accordingly, they should help you preserve your valuable investment.

In the next edition we'll take a look at tape recorder maintanance.

Wilkommen Im "Cabaret"

By BOB NESTI

Cabaret

Adapted from the stage musical by Jay Allen; from the play by John Van Druten and the stories of Christopher Isherwood; music by John Kander, lyrics by Fred Ebb; choreographed and directed by Bob Fosse; starring Liza Minnelli, Michael York, Joel Grey, Helmut Griem, and Marisa Berenson.

Cabaret catches its audience off-guard; it is a subtle blend of the tawdry decadence of 1931 Berlin and the ugly reality of the Nazi's rise to power executed with such understated skill and ingenuity as to stun by default. There is nothing grosse or glaring about this film musical, which considering the subject matter and the dangers inherent to the form, could easily be the case. Instead we are impressed, refreshed, and excited by this reinterpretation of a much-abused genre that accents and heightens an already unique theater experience.

What made Cabaret a landmark stage musical was its divergent use of the elements of musical comedy. Essentially it was a typical plot musical, although serious in intent. What made it distinctive was the use of musical numbers as commentary, as these set "cabaret" pieces became a window through which we viewed the stage action. Cabaret was a brilliantly designed, scintillating performed concept musical, which effectively altered the form. The film further defines this breakthrough and the change is deceptively exhilirating. On the surface this film would appear as a splashy, loud, garish extravaganza, but it's not; it is an expression of serious, thoughtful filmmaking which brilliantly captures a concept and ingeniously executes it. Never once does a character suddenly break into song in the "naturalistic" tradition this musical undermines. The artificial quality is gone; the situations and characters are real and are gracefully portrayed. There is a shimmering beauty here, most of it due to the insight and intelligence of scriptwriter Jay Allen, songwriters John Kander and Fred Ebb, and choreographer-director Bob Fosse.

First Jay Allen has written an amazingly literal and literate interpretation of Christopher Isherwood's autobiographical short stories set in Berlin during the early Thirties. The story concerns this young man's, here named Brian Roberts, arrival to that city. He immediately needs a place to stay and finds himself living cheaply and comfortably in a rooming house with a bizarre assortment of boarders. He does, though, form an immediate affection for a flamboyant, casual young girl named Sally Bowles (Liza Minnelli). She is an American expatriate, the forgotten daughter of an American diplomat, and an immensely talented performer who has settled for headlining in a local sleazy cabaret while awaiting her discovery in films.

Sally takes Brian to the Kit Kat Klub where he sees both Sally and the Master of Ceremonies (Joel Grey) perform and gets a good taste of the seedier side of Berlin night life. They seem captivated with each other, although Sally is coy and Cliff is distinctly distant, and when Sally finally questions his sexual ambivalence, the careful, thoughtful interpretation of the original material becomes apparent. Brian's repressed sexuality flows from the material and there is a natural surprise, for not only is Cabaret an often frightening portrait of the fall of the Weimer Republic, it also is a supple blend of the source character and situations which were all but glossed over on the stage. The film succeeds because it never falls into formula; it is always one step ahead of the viewer and isn't afraid to take a divergent look upon some themes which could have easily been rendered trite.

The relationship of the principals grows more intense and they have an affair. Brian finds himself jealous of Sally's joyful amoral nature, especially when she accidentally meets a young titled playboy Maxmillian (Helmut Griem). Sally sees in him a chance for success, Brian a peer for Sally's affection. This resentment lasts until he realizes that Max's interests aren't exclusively directed toward Sally. When finally this mutually exclusive three-way affair becomes known to all, Brian and Sally argue and he storms out only to foolishly take out his anger on some Nazi stormtrooper types. The only result of their mutual tryst is 300 marks and a pregnant Sally.

Sally has no way of knowing who the baby's father is and, quite selfishly, plans to trade her fur coat for an abortion. Brian, though, tells her they will marry and move to England where he will follow his academic career and Sally will settle down. This dream is shortlived as Sally sees that, despite their mutual affection, she would end up hating Brian for a myriad of personal reasons. She has the abortion, Brian leaves Berlin, Sally stays to await her discovery, and, in the final image of the cabaret's audience in a refracted mirror, Swastika armbands are in healthy distribution amongst the patrons.

Liza Minnelli and Joel Grey

It is the final image which culminates this sardonic, chilling mosaic and it is arrived at through subtle interspersing of the social and political trends of the day within the well-defined plot narrative. The Nazi's rise to power doesn't overwhelm, it just happens and is commented upon, rather than fully interpreted by the characters.

We are shocked, not by the obvious historical facts, but by the manner in which background events blend and flavor Brian's story. The altering social attitude is first seen in one of the cabaret numbers where Hitler is mimicked by the Master of Ceremonies, and it is obvious that he seems more a joke than a vital political force. When, though, their brutality is shown, they gain an uncomfortable respect from the larger German public and fervor from their most adherent followers. When Cliff and Max are having a meal at an outside Bavarian restaurant, their meal is interrupted by a pastoral hymn sung in a pure tenor by a blonde Brownshirt. His song "Tomorrow Belongs To Me" is a haunting ode to the Fatherland, a haunting ode that soon becomes a living nightmare as the diners break away from their meal and join with the Nazi youth in singing this ultra- Nationalistic hymn. The scene breaks the complacency of the plot and chills the viewer. It is a graphic, simple, brilliantly executed moment that accentuates what Cabaret is all about. The film deals with the effect of events upon characters and how they deal with them. In the end Brian leaves, a visitor made to feel more foreign by a hostile environment. The talented, optimistic Sally stays and is doomed to failure, but not because she doesn't deserve fame. Rather the scope of the historical events have stacked the odds against her. Despite Sally's disinterest in the the film comes with the startling interpretation of Liza Minnelli as Sally Bowles. She overpowers the viewer, reinterprets a genuinely trite character and makes her vividly stand alone. For Cabaret to work, Sally Bowles must be better than the cabaret in which she performs and Liza Minnelli never ceases to amaze. Her portrayal often echoes both her previous film role of mother Judy Garland; but the distinction here is between an echo and a mimic and never once does she fall into parodying styles not hers. She is unique, as is Joel Grey's chilling, perverse Master of Ceremonies. He falls at the viewer with a face masked in self-possessed deceit and exemplifies the moral decay of his time. His is a near perfect performance, a sniveling, searing portrait of a decade gone awry.

The other performances also reflect the thoughtful care and insight which is apparent in this film. Michael York plays Brian with a deep, sublime understanding of a man who has obviously cloistered a misunderstood portion of his life. He seems at times detached enough from the action as to seem like the camera through which we view the impending madness Griem Maximillian the charming playboy, has a sense of overpowering Sally and Brian through his affability. Visually the most impressive character is the young, wealthy Jewess, played briefly but breathtakingly by Marisa Berenson. The sub-plot involving the romance between her and a most insincere gigolo, played with humor by Fritz Wepper, underscores the dark nature of the theme.

Cabaret works continually, consciously, and quite brilliantly toward its shocking end. It begins in a refracted image and ends in one, and between the two we gain an understanding of how important the difference between the two had on the fabric of German life. More importantly it succeeds in being consistently entertaining and inventive. Jay Allen and director Bob Fosse both have had extensive theatrical training which explains for the cohesiveness of their mutual effort. Fosse works with each element defined to its finest point; the cabaret numbers are staged with tawdry professionalism. They elude the viewer in appearing trite, but actually are choreographed with a form and grace that's theatrically impressive as Joel Grey's performance. He then works around this with a kaleidoscopic, divergent blend of static images. Just as the musical numbers work into the fabric through juxtoposition, the images blend through contant interactions of many points of view. They frame the creepiness of the vision. There's a surreal quality to the cutting. Fosse is brash enough to jump from Nazi stormtroopers beating upon the cabaret's manager as the stage show is performed gayly and undaunted on the stage. There is this constant emphasis on the light and dark, the emerging chasm which was about to split the world into two camps which finally separates Sally and Brian. The sense of despair felt at the end creeps up the spine. The Swastikas in the refracted image are vividly real, not pretentiously tacked on to lead an argument, and this is where Cabaret succeeds so well. A revolutionary musical film which merges historical fact and social comment to a stark and vivid end.

Weekend

By MARY LOU GORDON AND BOB NESTI

Since the population of Amherst will diminish by at least one-half for this coming week, Weekend will list major events happening in the Boston, Worcester, Springfield areas. The films listed are in release throughout the state; check local papers for theater and times.

Music

The Beach Boys

The Beach Boys, now matured, will be in concert tomorrow evening, March 24 at the Roberts Center, Boston College. ($).

Cleveland Orchestra

Considered by some the world's finest, the Cleveland ensemble will perform in concert tomorrow evening at 8:30 in Symphony Hall. Pierre Boulez will conduct works of Bartok, Debussy, and Stravinsky. ($).

Joe Cocker and special guests

Joe Cocker and some surprise performers, this Monday night at the Boston Garden. ($).

Fleetwood Mac, Savoy Browne, and Long John Baldry

Two popular groups and an unappreciated blues singer will give two concerts tonight at the Paramount Theater, Springfield at 7 and 10. ($).

Theater

The Boston Ballet

The Boston Ballet will perform in repetory three nights, March 23, 24, 25 at the Aquarius Theatre. Coming off their triumphant national tour, the troupe will perform "Romeo and Juliet" pas de deux, "Les Sylphides"-- "Leopardi Fragments," and Mendellsohn's "Scotch Symphony." ($).

Godspell

The Gospel According to St. Matthew is currently being given a supposedly delightful rock interpretation nightly at the Wilbur Theater in Boston. It, rather than wonderful, is contrived and pretty damned silly. The musical attempts to interpret the story of Jesus as a group of mimes would in a playground, and although the concept is ingenious, the execution in this production infringes itself upon the audience's right to enjoy the musical on its own merits. The music is innocuous and occasionally sparks of the talent composer-lyricist Stephen Schwartz has in store. The adaptation wears out soon enough when the fine madness of the concept wears down to banal repetition and the cast performs it with correct insipid exuberance. ($).

A Clockwork Orange

Stanley Kubrick's masterpiece of science fiction terror that deals with a society where criminals are subjected to a behavior conditioning that strips them of their free will and human rights. Kubrick's sense of photography is more acute than ever before in this film, and his settings and characterizations are perfect renditions of Burgess's futuristic world. Malcolm McDowell's brilliant portrayal of Alex, the sadistic young hoodlum adds the final touches of strength and glamor needed to perfect this astonishing film. The music and the screenplay blend harmoniously with the visual aspects of the film, and together with the films shocking theme, they affect a truly worthwhile cinematic experience.

The Boy Friend

Ken Russell's scintillatingly reinterprets Sandy Wilson's 1954 stage parody of the musicals of the Twenties. It is a wide-eyed, colorful, affectionate valentine to the genius of Thirties filmusical director Busby Berkeley and a constant delight all the way. The story blends stage and screen techniques as it tells the tired but true story of backstage intrigue and love, this time concerning a third-rate theater troupe performing their show The Boy Friend in the British provinces during the early Thirties. The technical effects are adroitly blended, the period feel is well portrayed, and the performances are as much warm as they are wonderful as there hasn't been a bigger, more successful camp extravaganza since the Musical's heyday in the Forties. Russell is, as usual, a victim of gross indulgence, but here is such an apparent virtue that the whole film, in fact every frame, shines with his genius. A surprise too, is the performance of Twiggy in her first starring role; she sings well enough, dances even better, and has a most appealing screen personality.

Cabaret

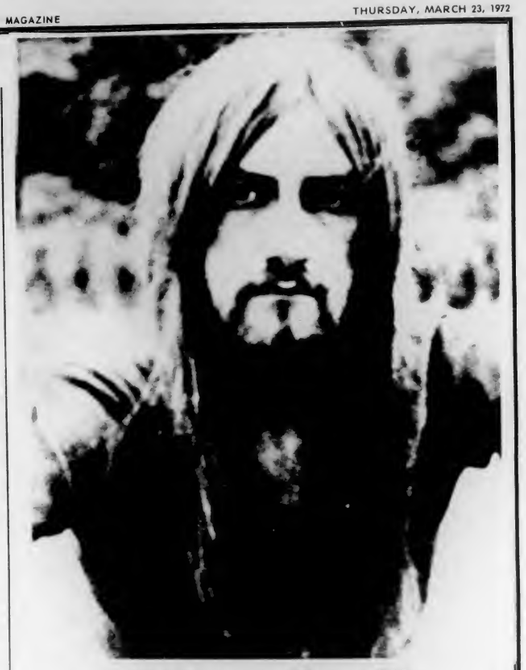
The most acclaimed film thus far this year is this film version of the 1967 stage musical which adeptly synthesized the Rise of Nazism with the decadence of Berlin in 1930. The stage musical completely altered the form as it brazenly used music as commentary to the story's action. On the stage it was a serious, sharp, ingenious spectacle and on the screen it's further accentuated. Director Bob Fosse, scriptwriter Jay Allen, and songwriters John Kander and Fred Ebb have sharpened the original material and in the process have reinterpreted the musical film. The musical is a sardonic, accurate rendering of the last days of the Weimer Republic seen through the characters and incidents of a young British's intellectual stay there. Much of the action, all of the musical numbers, take place in a local cabaret where Joel Grey's performance as the evil Master of Ceremonies exemplifies the era. . .e film benefits greatly from the startling interpretation of Liza Minnelli as the amoral Sally Bowles and Grey's haunting holdover from the stage. Thematically and cinematically one of the most interesting films of the season and the first jolt the musical film has been given in decades.

The Garden of the Finzi-Continis

Victoria DeSica's first major film in decades is this haunting, stunning essay on the tragedy of Jews in Fascist Italy. The story, based upon the semi-autobiographical novel by Giorgio Bassani, concerns how a middle class man finds himself involved with the decaying world of the Finzi-Continis, a rich aristocratic Italian family of landowners.

He witnesses the languid, spoiled behavior of the family's two youngest prodigy and makes an honest corrolation between their lifestyle and Mussolini's half-hearted attempts to rid Italy of Jews, which were sufficient enough to wipe out the Finzi-Continis and all they stood for. To be reviewed.

The Godfather



Mario Puzo's sprawling, engrossing bestseller reaches the screen as one of the most impressive and satisfying American films in quite some time. It is literally a cornucopia of everything a social drama should be filled with. A strong plot, nostalgic settings, warmth, violence; everything a good, strong piece of popular entertainment should have. Under the skillful direction of Francis Ford Copolla, the film revives the seemingly lost genre of the gangster films and does so with what may be best labeled the biggest of them all. Nearly every last piece of Puzo's mammoth chronicle of the rise of an Italian Crime syndicate is present in this spectacularly refreshing three-hour entertainment. The film also marks the return of Marlon Brando as one of our leading film actors in the titled role, and the supporting performances from Al Pacino to Sterling Hayden, are all equally fine. The film, like The Last Picture Show, shocks us into realizing just how good old-fashioned, straightforward narrative can be. To be reviewed.

The Hospital

Directed by Arthur Heller, this film is a hilarious parody of the medical profession as rendered through the escapades of the Manhattan Medical Center. Instead of the stalwart and correct practices that we are accustomed to think of, Heller brings us into focus with a hospital where patients leave in worse condition than when they go in, and doctors and nurses mysteriously show up dead on operating tables, in the emergency room and in empty beds. The film is highly entertaining without being visually strident and offensive such as the operation scene we were subjected to in Candy. George C. Scott is brilliant in the role of the sexually impotent, despairingly suicidal and disillusioned doctor, although the little aside into his private life that the film affords us, never raises above a sappy melodrama that rests heavily on the comic aspects of the film. Co-starring Diana Rigg.

The Last Picture Show

The Best American Film of last year is this depressing, bleak vision of life about the coming of age of three youngsters in a small Texas town in 1951. Directed by Peter Bogdanovich, the film is a straighforward well-crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in the finest tradition of the great Hollywood directors. The film is nostalgia in the negative sense and despite some near melodramatic plotting is the most poignant film in quite some time. The acting is superb by a cast of mostly unknown character actors led by Cloris Leachmen, Timothy Bottoms, Jeff Bridges, Eileen Brennan, and Ben Johnson. The film won four NY Film Critics awards and finished second in voting for Best Picture behind a Clockwork Orange; an often searing film.

Mick Fleetwood of Fleetwood Mac

King Lear

The film version of Peter Brook's staging of Shakespeare's tragedy retains the bleakness of that startling interpretation. A cold, calculated metaphor for contemporary man which is blessed by a superlative cast, especially Paul Schofield's Lear and Allen Webb's Gloucester and an intelligent and cinematic ally valid adaptation.

Macbeth

Roman Polanski has re-created Shakespeare's classic story of murder, guilt and revenge with a flamboyant style that includes his own imaginative touches as well as a traditional rendition of plot. The film is visually stunning, but often astonishingly gory. Polanski revels in the grotesque with his usage of nude, misshapen witches, and in the sensual with his Lady Macbeth who sleepwalks in the nude. The acting, for the most part is extremely well done, but without the dynamic force or strength of conviction necessary to do justice to Shakespeare's masterpiece.

Made For Each Other

Renee Taylor and Joseph Bologna wrote and starred in this consistently skillful and endearing comedy about the foibles of modern romance. The story concerns a bleached-out failure actress who meets a grubby misfit at an encounter group and their attempt at an affair. The characterizations are richly rewarding, and especially Miss Taylor's who infuses the film with a good deal of depth that the superficial material almost denies.

Mary, Queen of Scots

Vanessa Redgrave and Glenda Jackson are the main reasons for seeing this historical pageant based upon the legendary rivalry between the two claimants to the British throne. The performances are joyful, sometimes seriously, sometimes in campy good humor, to watch; Redgrave is stunning as the doomed Mary and Glenda Jackson appears like a latter day Bette Davis as the cruel, calculating Elizabeth. The rest of this Hal Wallis production is leadened with an inaccurate and inept script, poor production design (much of the film appears out of some Hollywood historical parody), and even the flat, boring direction of Charles Jarrott who has sacrificed the recipe for "petit fours" for pre-packaged pastry.

Nicholas and Alexandria

A rich, long, respectful, expensive spectacle which may impress you with regal elegance if it doesn't bore you to death first. Franklin Schaffner, who won an Oscar last year for his sweeping direction of Patton comes back in a restrained manner that's as dull as it is controlled. The last of the Czars, Nicholas and Alexandria, live in comfortable ennui far from the storm brewing outside and this is where the film fails. Instead of compelling history, we have, at best, paltry soap opera masquerading for the real thing. Spectacular enough to hold interest yet hardly compelling enough for all the effort involved.

What's Up Doc?

Peter Bogdanovich's second successful attempt at recreating the great style of the classic Hollywood directors, this time the witty, sophisticated comedies of Thirties. Here the director is Howard Hawkes and the film What's Up Doc?' exemplifies most is his Bringing Up Baby. The plots are nearly the same; in the earlier version Cary Grant played a scatterbrained young man who becomes romantically intrigued with the sophisticated Katherine Hepburn. In this recreation, Ryan O'Neal and Barbra Streisand attempt to replace these two masters at sophisticated comedy and fail quite simply in the process. Their failure at imitation though is refreshing and allows for their innate charms to shine, as does the comedy which is a supple blend of the sophisticated and slapstick and from the opening title sequence featuring Streisand singing Cole Porter's "You're the Top" and ends with Porky Pig saying, "That's all folks. The film is a reverent vibrant evocation of the great Hollywood comedies.

Without Apparent Motive

An European imitation of The Big Sleep this time set twenty years later in Nice. Jean-Louis Trintignant plays the Humphrey Bogart role and Dominique Sanda plays his pussycattish sidekick. A lightly defined thriller, far too sophisticated for its own good, but immensely enjoying on its own terms. The direction by Phillippe Lambro has a stylish finesse, as do most of the performances; especially that of Erich Segal in a small, shining role which redeems his often grating public personality. To be reviewed.

Letters To The Editor

A Novel Look At Free Love

To the Editor:

It is clear and apparent that the current effort directed towards the exercise of the students' franchise is underlaid by a more immediate organizational problem to which we should focus our attention. Towards that end the following is directed.

We would like to make it clear at the outset that this problem is the result of the typical failure of the university administration to view things in a systems approach. Given even the most cursory overview, one concludes that the UMass environment is sadly remiss in performing one of its most essential life-support functions; namely, a proper outlet for libidinal energy. The absence of this outlet has lead to the disfunctioning of the other elements of our community, the logical prediction of which is practically intuited from the systems point of view. Namely: a general state of student apathy, absenteeism from classes, repressed student interaction, excessive use of narcotics, a permeating atmosphere of uncreative thinking, and poor athletic performance to name a few. As such, UMass may as well stop running a claim to excellence on any level until finding a solution to its sexual inactivity, a solution which is desperately and urgently needed to prevent a further deterioration of the grim situation prevailing. Seeing this need we propose the following immediate action to tide us over until such time as a more definitive answer will arise.

This intermediate solution is by its nature open ended and as such may itself be modified to a great variety of alternatives. However, bringing these alternatives to light requires a certain amount of imaginative thinking which as we have previously indicated will not come about until at least one alternative is actualized. Therefore, we propose that the Student Senate take steps to increase the students' activity fee by some conservative amount. This money should be allocated to a special committee whose business would be to provide two structures of proper size and convenience which might be listed in the student directory as Basic Foods 1 and 2. Secondly, the committee would contract the services of a large number of fulltime and professional purveyors of the erotic both male and female but otherwise not discriminated against as to race color or creed. With the implimentation of this new service, all students upon presentation of their I. D. card would be freely allowed to enter and raise their state of physical consciousness. Finally credit hours might be allocated to students who complete an established number of visits per semester such as 1 credit hour on completing three visits per week per semester, three for six, six for nine, etc.

Sexual tension due to deprivation is so prevalent that it permeates every aspect of our lives, and is gradually destroying all that we hold sacred. The students must be allowed to create the kind of environment in which they can live freely and fully, for after all- what else is education but exactly that?

Blue Wall Boycott

To the editor:

I would like to perhaps further express myself concerning my position in regard to the discriminatory policies of the Bluewall. I am urging all students to boycott the Bluewall for the fundamental reason of in so doing they will express their belief and support of the principle that "all students are equal". Although I am presently in the process of taking legal steps against the Bluewall (in the Student Court system) I believe that a boycott would be even more effective than even a positive ruling by the court. Many will argue that the Bluewall is prohibited by state law from serving those students under 21 and, although this is true, it does not take into account the moral side of the issue. The moral question is this "Are students under 21 entitled to the same rights as those over 21". If your answer is yes to this question then you are faced with three alternatives: (1) Ignore your moral conviction and support the Bluewall, (2) Demand that the Bluewall serve all students (which it can not do under penalty of law) or (3) Refuse to support the Bluewall by boycotting its premises and by asking those in authority to remove it from campus. I realize that this is not an easy decision to make, however it is the kind of question that we cannot afford to ignore. If you do not remove your support from the Bluewall you are guilty of discrimination in the exact same manner that we are all guilty for Vietnam because we paid our taxes to fuel it and did not speak out soon enough or loud enough to end it. Yes it is a moral issue and I think that it is time that we took a moral stand.

BOYCOTT THE BLUEWALL.

Alive, Well, In Dallas

To the Editor,

The Christian Community at UMass feels that the only solution to the complex world problems facing our world today is Jesus Christ. We are involved in a revolution that begins with changing men's hearts by the power and love of Christ. Changed lives will help change the world, and Explo 72, an international student congress on evangelism, will be a source of that change. We are asking God to bring together 100,000 students and laymen to Dallas to this during the week of June 12-17th. They will be learning how to share their faith in Jesus Christ with others. Many student delegates will be sent from the New England area.

Not everyone will be able to attend the conference, but everyone can have a part in getting together what many believe to be the most significant student gathering in history. You can help by saving green stamps. Sperry Hutchinson Company will give students two dollars for every book, and this moeny will provide scholarships for students in the Western Massachusetts area. So if you haven't used your stamps to decorate your room on St. Patrick's Day, you can use them to help change the world.

Thank you all,
Debbie Apkarian

Concert Needs Bodies

To the Student Body:

If the Concert Committee doesn't get about 20-30 more people who are willing to work, there will be NO SPRING CONCERT; or, at the very best, a small one.

We have a committee of ten that have work to do right now in booking the groups, arranging for sound, setting up security, getting stage set-ups, and establishing clean-up crews. That's half the problem. We still have to raise $3,000 (to be split with Students Offering Support) and we don't have enough people to take on running the necessary fund-raising activities.

If we don't get the people, we don't run the activities. If we don't run the activities, we don't get the money. If we don't get the money - Well, it won't be much of a concert!

You say you want a concert. Then work for it instead of asking others to do all the shit for you. Otherwise, a lot of us will lose our motivation - and quit!

Tri-Chairperson,
Concert Committee

Rhetoric

To the Editor:

A recent "Collegian" reported that some University students feel that Rhetoric should be abolished as a requirement in the school's curriculum. I read the report with interest.

Last week the front page of the University daily showed a fine picture - a winter shot of fields, fence and high-rise dormitories. I read the caption with dismay.

The caption read, "It was a place wherein one time horses roamed free and trees grew in fields and fence was an unknown word. But the wire and concrete, stronger sooner yet weaker longer, came and conquered; and we wait for a new sun."

I could make several comments about the diction and structure of that caption, but I shall not. I have only one comment to make: if editors on the school paper write like that, I wonder how the rest of the students write.

By definition, rhetoric is "the art or science of using words effectively in speaking or writing. . ." I think that required study of this "art or science" should be an essential part of the curriculum. I hope that when faculty and students further consider the possibility of dropping Rhetoric, they will give it very serious thought.

P. S. What are "one time horses"?

Marcus Welby He's Not

To the editor:

In the 3-21-72 edition of the Collegian you printed an article, "The Doctor Delivers". One thing in particular about that article made me write this letter while another thing in general is rapidly making me skip the back page of the Collegian altogether. The particular thing was the incident recalled by John Betancourt. He remembers a kid saying to Erving that he thought Julius played a great game the day before. I don't know exaclty who John Betancourt thinks he is but I don't see what right he has to give the "kid" a funny look, and brush him off, advising Erving to do the same. He went on to say that this incident said something about Julius Erving. If Erving gave Betancourt "the look" and brushed him off then I'd agree that the incident said something about Julius Erving; that he was different from the stereotyped "jocks" running around. The other thing I want to mention is that I, and probably many more on this campus, are beginning to get a little fed up with the daily glorifying of Julius Erving. Granted he probably is the greatest basketball player to ever come out of this school but lets face it, enough is enough. After all that is what Julius Erving is: a great basketball player, not a doctor.

To the editor:

Why does the Senate feel they need new cars? What is wrong with a used car?

Used Cars make America great. Was it not Henry Ford himself, inventor of the Assembly Line, who introduced Used Cars to America? Some great men have bought and sold used cars and been none the worse off for it. Men like Nixon, Boch, and Blyda. Hey Senate, don't get a horse, get an OK Used Car.

'The Game' A Hot Ticket

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

The Massachusetts State Lottery got off to a roaring start yesterday with many ticket selling outlets reporting they had been sold out a few hours after opening.

In Northampton, Wally's Soda Shop reported selling 800 tickets by 9:30 a.m.

Augie's Tobacco Shop in Amherst reported at 3:00 p.m. that tickets were selling well and that it appeared that many students were buying tickets.

Presently students wishing to enter "The Game" as it is called, must purchase tickets in town. But the Campus Center has requested of the Game Commission the right to sell tickets there. As of yesterday, no decision had been received from the commission.

Massachusetts entered the lottery craze in 1971 when the state legislature formed a Lottery Commission which controls the running of the game and the distribution of money. A minimum of 40% of gross sales will be distributed to the cities and towns of the state to be used as they wish. A minimum of 45% goes to the winners, and a maximum of 15% will be used for operating costs.

The Commission warns that the increased revenues to the cities and towns may not affect a decreased tax rate but the "Local Aid Fund" may help them to hold down tax increases and offset rising municipal costs.

The Commission prides itself on the design and methods of the game which were developed with the help of the Arthur D. Little Co., a "think tank" in Cambridge. They claim the intricate method of selecting the winning numbers reduces the possibility of tampering to almost nil.

To enter the Game, one need only produce 50 cents the price of one ticket. The six-digit number in the center of the ticket is used in the weekly drawings which awards prized form $25 to $50,000. Winners in the weekly drawings then become eligible for the monthly drawing which awards prizes from $10,000 to $1,000,000.

Newman Club Sponsors Appalachian Drive

A massive clothing drive will take place during the week of April 8-15 for the people of Appalachia.

A box will be placed (tentatively) in every UMass dormitory, as well as in the Newman Center and locations on the Amherst College campus, for the collection of any usable clothing which people wish to donate. At the end of the week, the clothes will be taken to the Newman Center where they will be boxed and shipped, ultimately to reach Kentucky.

This drive is being sponsored by the Newman Club. Anyone wishing to help out will be accepted. People are especially needed to set up boxes (which will be supplied) in their dorms and to collect clothes from them daily. Clothes will be picked up from dorm representatives after the week of the drive.

For anyone wishing to help, there will be a meeting in the front lounge of the Newman Center this Thursday at 8:00 p.m. Those who can't make the meeting, but want to be a dorm representative, can call the Newman Center and leave their name and dormitory, or stop by some time in the Newman Center Student Office.

Watch Where You Leave Those Germs

ORONO, Maine (AP) — A microbiologist who always wanted to be a detective claims he is on the path of developing a system to track down criminals from the germs they spread on the environment around their crime.

Prof. Melvin Gershman, who teaches at the University of Maine, says years of research leave him convinced common laboratory techniques of analyzing germs can be used to prove whether or not a suspect was at the scene of a crime.

"It will never replace the fingerprint," Gershman says of the germ, "but in some situations it can be just as significant.

"A smart criminal will, of course, wear gloves to avoid leaving fingerprints, but there's no way for him to stop shedding germs into the environment."

Red Hot Lovers Smolder

By TONY GRANITE

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK was discovered in The Vidette of Illinois State U. over the review of the Neil Simon play. It read, " 'Red Hot Lovers' smolder before ISU audience."

THE HURRICANE, the University of Miami's student newspaper, has begun a boycott of that campus' sports coverage because of "poor treatment given the newspaper by the University's sports publicity dept."

We read about it in The Daily Reveille of Louisiana State.

OVERDUE BOOKS is the bane of the college librarian's existence at Middle Tennessee State, according the the Sidelines newspaper.

Up to 80 first notices are mailed daily to tell delinquents of their sinning. And this is only after a week has passed the due date.

A second post card notice is followed by a letter. Final action is flagging the student's record. This means - no book, no transcript.

The story doesn't mention any sinning among faculty and staff.

DROP OUTS ARE RARER at the University of Wisconsin, according to recent intelligence reported in The Daily Cardinal.

The lowest rate of withdrawal in three years has been noted by Dean of Students Paul Ginsberg, who says the new trend may be accounted for by economics.

"The high unemployment rate has made students more serious," he says.

And the fact that peace came to the campus, this Fall, is another factor, he adds.

GETTING TOUGH ABOUT PARKING violations at Florida State is resulting in no registration for Spring quarter.

The Flambeau newspaper there notes that unpaid parking citations will hold up registrations of students unless an appeal is taken in Municipal Court. That court requires posting of bond in the amount of fines due.

Which is one way of correcting the pollution of population on the campuses.

FORGIVENESS POLICY in the matter of grades is an innovation at the University of South Florida, meanwhile.

According to a page one story in a recent Oracle, the Council of Deans there has recommended a policy that would enable students to raise grades in courses they've done poorly in. The plan would allow students to repeat a course and have only the second grade count.

There is indeed an academic Santa Claus - even in Florida in the Springtime.

There will be two showings today and Friday, March 23 and 24 at 4:30 p.m. and at 7 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

This is Ms. Aldrich's second experience with directing improvisational theatre for children. Previously, she has directed such successful productions as "Rumpelstiltskin" and "Aladdin's Lamp". This year at the University she directed an improvisational "Christmas Medley" and is now doing "Story Theatre".

Tickets are now on sale in advance at the Bartlett Hall Box Office, from 11-2 p.m. Phone: 545-2579.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Libra is the great mediator, bringing together those of opposing views, serving as a balance, weighing one factor against the other. Natives of this zodiacal sign are especially skillful at avoiding or preventing unpleasant situations. There is a way out where Libra is concerned. Libra forms alliances and works with material at hand. Beauty, serenity keynote the classical Libran. Some famous persons born under Libra include Ed Sullivan, Donald Pleasence and Angela Lansbury. *****

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Details, need for secure base of operations--these are emphasized. Be observant. You could make important discovery. What others have overlooked could prove personal treasure vein. Know it and act accordingly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be ready for change of scenery. Flexibility now is essential. Accent on making ideas work. Steady pace aids in success. Leave the sensational to others. Gemini and Virgo play prominent roles. Associate acts in unorthodox manner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Don't overspend. Gift purchase is fine, especially where family member is involved. But you need not go to extremes. One close to you may have childish tantrum. Not wise to be intimidated. You will comprehend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You can deal with basic changes. Home, personal environment is affected. Money connected with joint effort is involved. Property rights are subject to question. Separate fact from fiction.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stick to principles. You will have backing. Whatever you do, do it wholeheartedly. Capricorn is involved. Creative juices flow. Plenty of excitement is featured. Short journey may be necessary. Special agreement occurs.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Friend may be careless with your assets. Protect holdings. Finish project. Avoid premature actions. Aries is in picture. Steady effort results in achievement. Don't play games where security is involved.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stress independence, originality. Welcome chance for greater self-expression. Let special person know how you feel. Accent is on ambition, fulfillment. You gain through unorthodox procedure. Act accordingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Trust hunch. Follow through on inner feelings. What was supposition is verified. You can act in knowledge that you are on correct path. Aquerian plays prominent role. Open lines of communication.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Social activity accelerates. You go places and meet people. Some contacts can develop into meaningful relationships. Your personality is emphasized. Sense of humor surfaces. You grasp happiness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You gain objective by breaking from pattern. Means experiment; find different avenues. Accent is on marriage, special legal agreement. Usual procedures will not suffice. Beck conviction by investing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Changes occur which may reveal where you are headed--and why. Obtain hint from Capricorn message. Unusual communication deserves attention. Check appointments, especially those having to do with personal welfare.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Domestic situation requires attention. Make gesture of reconciliation. There will be favorable response. One who stimulates you responds in like manner. You can be fulfilled. Give yourself a chance.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you are perceptive, independent, at times giving the impression of being arrogant. You seldom respond in lukewarm manner. It usually is all or nothing where you are concerned. Social life will be more active this year. You gain added recognition--and contract could be consummated which changes your life style.

Beta Chi Tops IM Wrist Wrestling

One form of wrist wrestling is done on a 35 x 26" table about 44" high in Boyden Gymnasium. Another form is done over a bar in a local pub. It is difficult to assess the popularity of the latter, but interest in the former is easily attested to by the 205 individuals (200 men and 5 women) who participated in the first UMass IntramuralWrist Wrestling Tournament completed Tuesday night.

The Intramural variety of wrist wrestling prescribes that standing opponents grasp the base of each other's thumbs with wrists exactly perpendicular; grasp opposite hands immediately below the upright forearms in a finger curl contact; make sure that the active elbow remains in the elbow cup; and go to it, pitting strength against strength. A winner is determined when one contestant forces his opponent's wrist down on his own opposite forearm.

Weight divisions are set to somewhat equalize the competition. In men's competition, those under 155 lbs. are considered lightweights; those under 175 lbs., middleweights; those under 195 lbs., heavyweights; and those over 195 lbs., "Godzillaweights" (whatever that means!). In women's competition the weight divisions are somewhat reduced, limiting lightweights to 120 lbs., middleweights to 140 lbs., heavyweights to 160 lbs. and Godzillaweights to the reaches beyond 160 lbs.

Unfortunately, the existing version of wrist wrestling discriminates against the left-handed minority as it is all done right-handed. However, the Intramural organizers have assured this writer that such discrimination will be rectified next year with the institution of a special "Left Handed Tournament".

The interest and enthusiasm generated by this activity surpassed expectations and earmarked its definite return in next year's intramural program. The results of this week's action are as follows:

In the men's team championship category, Beta Chi, also the Independent Division Champion, captured the All Campus Championship by amassing a 245 point total. Campus Runners-up, 40 points behind, were the Chadbourne Maroons, also winners of the Residence Hall Division. Theta Chi, the Fraternity Champions, were third with 150 pts.

The women's campus team championship was garnered by Lambda Delta Phi and the Grad-Fac title was conceded to Civil Engineering, the only team entered in that division.

The Men's individual campus titles were won by a Beta Chi contingent of Bob Foote (lightweight), Frank Boksanski (middleweight), Mike Manquso (Heavyweight) and John Homan (Godzillaweight).

For the women, Chris Flynn from JQA captured the lightweight crown, Janice Brack of Lambda Delta Phi earned the middleweight title and Debbie Kirchmer from Field was uncontested for the heavyweight title.

In the Grad-Fac Division, and intrasquad tournament within the Civil Engineering Department revealed that Ed Hannon (lightweight), Leo Mulcahey (Middleweight), Pete Lynch (Heavyweight) and Al Scaramelli (Godzillaweight) were the most persistent, if not the strongest representatives of their group.

Although the formal Intramural Wrist Wrestling Tournament will be held in Boyden Gymnasium again next year, there is some question as to the site of future practice sessions. Who knows, perhaps a boom in the pub variety of wrist wrestling is in the offing!

Jabbar-Kareem Of The Crop Again

MILWAUKEE (AP)-Kareem Abdul-Jabbar's face remained typically impassive, but the Milwaukee Bucks supercenter said he is gratified to be named the National Basketball Association's most valuable player a second successive year.

The league announcement Wednesday said the former Lew Alcinder received 81 first place votes, 52 for second and 20 for third in balloting by NBA players.

"He's very deserving," Bucks' Coach Larry Costello said. "No one in the league was more valuable than he was to our team. He had to be the selection.

"He's a fantastic team guy and a fantastic person," Costello said. "Offensively, I don't know what he can't do. Defensively, he could possibly improve his rebounding and shot blocking but that's all.

"If he's improved over last year, I don't know where it would be. He was so tremendous last year."

Abdul-Jabbar led the league in scoring last year with a 31.7 average as the Bucks captured the NBA title in their third season of existence.

The Bucks have clinched the Midwest Division crown again this year, and latest statistics show the former UCLA All-American leading the league in scoring with a 34.9 average, second in field goal percentage at .573 and third in rebounds with a 16.7 average.

Abdul-Jabbar received .581 points in the voting, with Jerry West of Los Angeles second for the third consecutive year with 393. The Lakers' Wilt Chamberlain was third with 294, with John Havlicek of Boston fourth and Spencer Haywood of Seattle fifth.

It has been a trying season in some respects for the Bucks despite their success. As defending champions, they are subjected to superb efforts from opponents night after night. Heavy roster turnover and injuries, notably to Oscar Robertson, have cut into their cohesiveness.

"I really think it's been harder on the team than on me," Abdul-Jabbar said. "My job remains the same."

Only Chamberlain and former Boston star Bill Russell have received the award more than twice-Russell five times and Chamberlain four. Abdul-Jabbar has won it twice in his three professional season.

Owners Say "Let 'em Strike"

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP)-Baseball owners refused to budge Wednesday on players' demands for increased pension and medical benefits, intensifying the threat of a player strike March 31.

"We voted to take a stand," Gussie Busch, owner of the St. Louis Cardinals, said after a near four-hour meeting of the 24 major league club owners.

"We voted unanimously. We're not going to give them another damned cent.

"If they want to strike, let 'em."

Busch's strong statement came after an announcement that the club owners, without a dissent, had agreed not to yield on demands for increas[illegible] benefits.

The owners have offered a plan which they say will cost them around $400,000. The plan has been rejected by the players.

The owners' negotiator, John Gaherin, said efforts would be continued to reach an agreement and ward off the threat of a strike.

"The clubs offered to pay the increased annual cost of the current, excellent life, hospital, medical and dental care coverage and to continue the present contributions to the pension plan," Gaherin said.

He acknowledged that he was ready to hear counter proposals from the players but gave no indication that there would be any softening of the owners' stand.

Commentary-Red Sox

Also Rans Again

By DAN KAMAL

Welcome, Bob Burda...you're just what the Sox need.

The Boston Red Sox are the most mediocre bunch of "pennant contenders" to ever engage in flag talk. If pennants were awarded on the basis of optimism, the Sox would be perennial American Champs. If pennants were awarded on the basis of most games won, (which, incidentally, they are), the Red Sox would nearly always be also rans, (which, incidentally, they are).

But it wasn't always this way. After all, the Bosox have managed to win three whole pennants in the last few years (54 to be exact, but who's counting? Surely not Dick O'Connell).

Remember that glorious "Impossible Dream" year? Remember when Jim Lonborg could blow the ball past virtually any hitter in baseball? Remember when Jose Santiago was virtually untouchable with that good fastball and great curve? Remember when the Sox were talking dynasty because they had such young up and coming players as Joe Foy, Dalton Jones, Mike Andrews, and George Scott?

Well, apparently success was too much for Red Sox personnel and management alike. First it was Lonborg playing Jean Claude Killy (rather badly). Then Santiago decided that even though he had the best won-lost percentage in the American League in 1967, he just had to pitch all winter in the Puerto Rican winter league.

Then O'Connell stepped into the picture, or actually pulled the Red Sox out of the picture. To be sure, the "Baseball Executive of The Year in 1967" had some help. Uncle Tom Yawkey apparently decided that Manager Dick Williams was not treating his nephews well enough, so exit Williams, despite the fact that in 1968 and 1969 he had brought the team further than most people thought it would go considering the many injuries, etc.

Enter Eddie "I'm a nice guy, and I really know my baseball, and I should be winning more games, but..." Kasko. That's when the demise really began. Through a rare combination of trades and team dissension, the Boston club now boasts a tentative starting line-up of:

CATCHER: Probably Duane Josephson, the best pie eater in the league. Trouble is he's out every three games.

FIRST BASEMAN: It looks like Cecil Cooper, but now with Big Bob Burda in the picture, who knows?

SECOND BASEMAN: Doug Griffin. Too bad the Sox didn't have 10 Griffins.

SHORTSTOP: Luis Aparicio--just another figure in the continuing youth movement. Luis should be good for 140 games he says. (Even if he hits safely in only eight of them)

THIRD BASEMAN: Rico "Wish I could move sideways" Petrocelli. Not a bad hitter, though, he'll hit at least .250.

LEFT FIELD: The exciting YAZ. As they say, "As Yaz goes, so the Sox. Well, bye bye, unless he improves his 1971 average by about 80 percentage points.

CENTERFILED: Reggie Smith. Probably the best all-around player on the team. He doesn't have enough help.

RIGHTFIELD: Tommy Harper. A good, business-like ballplayer. (Somehow he doesn't seem to belong on the Sox. After all, he just wants to play winning baseball. He doesn't even want to start trouble.)

As far as pitching is concerned, the Sox have a decent staff. But the hitting, or lack of hitting, will not complement a "decent" staff. Besides, the staff lacks a bona fide "stopper".

It all shapes up into an outside shot at a third place finish in the AL East at best.

Bring back Mike Fiore.

UMass 2nd In NEAAU

By JOHN BOCK

Even though the college wrestling season ended two weeks ago with the crowning of the NCAA champs, wrestling as an activity continues with unbashed fervor. Evidence of this is present on the UMass campus as a contingent of the UMass wrestling team and some wrestling enthusiasts traveled to the Boston YMCA on Sunday to participate in the New England AAU Wrestling Championship Tournament and walked away with a strong second place finish.

Representing UMass were Dave Amato, Wayne Turnberg, Dick Muri, Steve Rome, Shelly Goldberg, Steve Benson, Bruce Buckbee, and Ed Carlson. Goldberg and Benson won at 158 and 167 respectively while Amato finished second at 126 to accompany Buckbee at 191 and Carlson at heavyweight finishing second, with Rome taking a third at 158.

This tournament was one of many that dot the country on the weekends all year around, more than ever this year, however, due to the fact that it is an Olympic year. Two organizations that are engaged in the promotion of amateur wrestling and that sponsor these open tournaments are the Amateur Athletic Union and the recently founded United States Wrestling Federation. The AAU is, of course, active in promoting many other sports but has enjoyed particular success in wrestling. The years that the NCAA's were not held, the AAU held it championships and helped spread the sport. Today the National AAU Freestyle and Greco Roman Championships are among the best and most prestigious wrestling events in the nation.

The USWF was recently founded with the purpose of promoting wrestling in the U.S. at all levels full time. The Federation has been eminently successful in its goal to the extent of exchanging visits with the best teams in the U.S.S.R. and participating in the annual U.S.S.R. International Freestyle Wrestling Tournament.

The type of wrestling done at these marches is similar to collegiate, but involves a more complicated point system. Freestyle wrestling sharpens a wrestlers takedown skill as that is where most points are picked up.

Dave Amato lost in the finals to Ducan Innes, a former UMass wrestler now wrestling for the Boston Y. His performance in the bout was hampered by an injury to his ankle, but he still gave Innes a tough match. Steve Rome lost to Goldberg and Oulette of the Y. Shelly beat Oulette, a former Michigan State Big 10 champ and team co-captain, in the finals 8-3.

The Daily Collegian

SPORTS

In the upper weight classes Steve Benson continued his dominance in New England tournaments with a decisive victory over a member of the Y team. Bruce Buckbee told this reporter that he did not really feel like wrestling and consequently his performance suffered and he lost to Lovejoy of the Lawrence YMCA, 3-0. At heavyweight Ed Carlson evidenced good form throughout but also bowed in the finals.

Most of the wrestlers will continue to work out with the upcoming New England District Olympics Trials as the target. These will be held at the Springfield College Fieldhouse April 22-23, 1972.

B's Appeal Cashman Suspension

BOSTON (AP)-The Boston Bruins appealed a suspension handed to Wayne Cashman Wednesday, then announced a few hours later they were withdrawing the appeal because the forward would be lost to the National Hockey League team for the first three playoff games if the team's petition was not upheld.

League President Clarence Campbell suspended Cashman and Dennis Hextall of the Minnesota North Stars for three games each earlier Wednesday as a result of a stick swinging incident in Boston last Sunday during a game that was televised nationally to the United States and Canada.

Campbell also levied a $200 fine on Cashman and two $50 fines on the Minnesota player for their actions in the game, which the Bruins won 7-3.

Campbell had set a tentative date for the appeal hearing of April 4. The Bruins President Weston Adams Jr. later announced the appeal was being withdrawn because of the danger that Cashman's suspension could be applied to the playoff games rather than upcoming end-of-season contests.

"Despite what we might think about the merits of our case," Adams said, "we could not afford to run the risk."

Campbell said at a news conference in Montreal that, "Any order of suspension or expulsion or any fine in excess of $200 may be appealed. He said the league's Board of Governor's would rule on his decision at the meeting scheduled for April 4.

The withdrawal of the appeal means Cashman will sit out the first game of his suspension when the Bruins face the New York Rangers at Boston Thursday night. Hextall began serving his suspension when Minnesota beat the California Golden Seals 4-2 Tuesday night.

Campbell said at his news conference that the Bruins would not be allowed to withdraw the appeal if Cashman played Thursday night.

SPRING IS UPON us. The spring season promises a lot of athletic competition. Track is one of the oldest sports (left), while soccer has not been around a very long time (lower left). Teams are starting to practice and will begin activity and competition after the vacation. (Photo by MDC Staff)

Wood Tells FacSen Bartley Working To Restore Positions

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

UMass President Robert Wood said David M. Bartley, Speaker of the House, has made a commitment toward restoring parts of Gov. Sargent's recommended budget cuts for the University.

Wood said Bartley, D-Holyoke, will work within the House to insure that requested faculty positions cut by the Governor's Office of Finance and Administration be restored to the University.

The restorations would involve the creation of 100 faculty positions including 58 positions on the Amherst campus.

Wood told the Faculty Senate yesterday in their weekly meeting that his first priority is retaining the present 15-1 faculty to student ratio at the University.

Acknowledging Bartley's commitment as a first step in restoring the positions, Wood said: "I am not in a position to say that the future of higher education is secure in Massachusetts."

Wood said the University is faced with a moral dilemma. "Reduce the quality of education or restrict the enrollment," said Wood.

Although the enrollment of 1,684 additional students had been accepted, no new faculty positions have been provided for under the governor's recommended budget.

The UMass Board of Trustees last August in their budget presentation to Sargent requested $89 million, but this figure has been cut to $72.5 million-a 20 per cent cut.

Acting Chancellor Bromery in an earlier interview said "restoration is minute" compared to the Governor's recommended $2 billion budget.

He added that it would be unfortunate if the cuts were allowed to "erode away quality education for such a small amount of money."

Wood said he will be taking his case to the House Ways and Means Committee within the next two weeks.

An informed observer said in an interview last night that Bartley's action practically guarantees the restoring of the positions in the House.

The observer said it is doubtful if the restoration of the cut positions will meet with much opposition in the House and Senate.

If the cuts are restored in the legislature, it will be up to Gov. Sargent to either sign the measure or use his power of veto.

Wood also commented on Gov. Sargent's recent speech at UMass. At the time Sargent said the University was currently operating under a 13-1 ratio.

According to Wood, the governor's ratio was not a true reflection of the teaching situation at UMass. Wood said the Governor used non-teaching faculty members in formulating his ratio.

Under Wood's figures the faculty to student ratio at Amherst would move from 15-1 to 15.6-1 while the Boston campus ratio would move from 15-1 to 17.6-1.

Step Right Up; Only 13 Million To 1

Wayne Patterson, left, a clerk in Veronica's Spa in Waltham, sells two tickets to the Massachusetts lottery (The Game) to Mrs. Madeline Dyer of Framingham early Wednesday morning as store manager Pat Gergantino watches. Shortly after Mrs. Dyer bought her tickets, the small store sold the last of the 500-ticket lot–a sellout in less than two hours. (AP)

So you bought a couple of lottery tickets yesterday and you're convinced you're going to be the first big winner of The Game?

Well, don't mentally start spending that $1 million yet. The odds are something like 13 million or 14 million to 1 against winning it.

Even if you do hit the jackpot, Uncle Sam will extract such a mind-boggling income tax from the 20 annual $50,000 payments that it will make a strong man weep. And the tax bite is one thing you can count on, say the Internal Revenue Service and tax experts.

The astronomical odds are calculated on the number of tickets that must be sold to warrant the first million dollar drawing.

"We figure we'll have to sell 13 million or 14 million tickets, at an average rate of 3.2 million a week, before the first drawing is held," explained lottery spokesman David Ellis.

"So that puts the odds of anyone winning the big prize at least at around 13 million to 1," he said.

Lottery planners thoughtfully arranged to parcel out the $1 million in 20 annual payments of $50,000 to minimize the pain of Federal income tax deductions.

"If you were given the $1 million in one chunk, you'd have to pay close to 70 percent to Uncle Sam," said IRS regional director William E. Williams.

Nevertheless, whoever wins the big prize will flinch at the amount the IRS chomps out of the $50,000 annual installments.

For instance, a married man with two children and an income of $10,000 would pay $18,745 on 50 grand, plus $905 on his usual income, for a grand total of $19,650. A single taxpayer with the same income would get hit harder — he'd pay a total of $24,685.

A married man with two children and a salary of $20,000 would pay a total of $24,970. A single taxpayer with that salary would have to cough up $31,030.

A $1 million winner also would have to pay about 9 percent for state income taxes, but there are some loopholes for dodging that.

"The best idea would be to invest the money in municipal notes, which would be exempt from state taxes," suggested Robert P. McKenzie, a National Shawmut Bank investment officer.

What about taking your first $50,000 payment, flying to Fiji and telling the lottery people to mail you the rest?

Forget it, advised Williams of the IRS.

"Each $50,000 check will come with a reminder from us that the money is taxable," he said.

"The lottery will report winners to the IRS and we'll check the tax returns to make sure the tax is paid," Williams added. "Winners of the $1 million prize must pay their taxes quarterly.

"And if anyone did leave the country, we'd make the necessary arrangements to collect. This thing is pretty well covered by the law."

Jackson State Students Lose

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — An all-white federal court jury has ruled against a group of blacks who sought $13.8 million in damages for the Jackson State College shootings in which two young Negroes were killed.

The jury deliberated a day and a half before reporting its verdict Wednesday in favor of the 47 defendants. They included Mississippi highway patrolmen and Jackson City policemen who went to the predominantly black college on May 15, 1970, during a disturbance.

The defense said the shooting started because of sniper fire from Alexander Hall, a women's dormitory. The plaintiffs conceded that the officers were subjected to insults and a thrown bottle but maintained there was no sniper.

James Earl Green and Phillip Gibbs were shot to death and seven students were wounded. Suits, which were consolidated for the case, were filed by Myrtle Green Burton, mother of Green; Dale Gibbs, wife of Gibbs; and three of the wounded, Tuwaine Davis, Leroy Kenter, Jr., and Vernon Weakley.

It was the first court test of the shootings which had been investigated by the President's Commission on Campus Unrest and by federal and state grand juries. Neither grand jury brought criminal charges.

Jackson Police Chief Lavell Tullos said, "I'm very pleased with the verdict."

Charles Evers, the black mayor of Fayette, said in Hattiesburg the verdict is "a terrible thing, but it's no more than we expected."

"When I found out it was an all-white jury, I knew then very little would come of it," he said. "If it had been Evers and his policemen going onto a white school in this state, there would have been all-out chaos."

Senators Ladd And Stevens Debate For Presidency

By MDC STAFF

In a debate at Wednesday night's Student Senate meeting, Larry Ladd and John Stevens, the two candidates for the Senate presidency, both stressed the need for reform on campus.

The two agreed on most issues, academic reform making the campus a more livable place, making the administration more responsive to student needs.

Stevens, who spoke first presented his qualifications to the Senate. He said his experience being on the Senate Long-Range Planning Committee, his time spent as a consultant for the Food Services Department, among others, would qualify him for the position. He also said he was instrumental in getting the voter registrars on campus.

Stevens presented a few proposals he hopes to see instrumented if elected Senate president. Two of the most important were that he would fight for a four-course semester and try to initiate a non-profit student corporation. It would be originally set up by a fund-raising drive, but thereafter would be supported by profits. Stevens said the goods sold in the store would be marked up as little as possible. Stevens is chairman of the Budgets Committee.

Present Senate Vice-President Larry Ladd spoke next. Like Stevens, he stressed the need for a reform. "The need for change on this campus is obvious to any who try to live or learn here. Students have been reduced to a struggle for survival."

Ladd said more students could be involved in the University decision-making process by defining the issues and actively seeking student support.

If elected, Ladd said he would work to get presidential college proposals by the Faculty Senate, calling them the foundation for academic change.

He said Bromery would almost certainly be the next chancellor. Also while discussing Whitmore, Ladd said a search committee should be set up to find a Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs.

After the two speeches, the floor was opened to questions from the Senators. Only three were asked, mostly in a humorous vein.

The election is April 5th.

Government Investigating Gas

WASHINGTON (AP)-The federal government is trying to figure out who's got gas and who hasn't and the problem is causing a serious case of bureaucratic heartburn.

The gas involved is natural. In recent years it's been emerging from the ground waiting for producers to come for it, but the producers aren't looking much. They claim that erratic Federal Power Commission regulation of rates they can charge for gas doesn't provide enough profit margin to finance exploration.

The FPC is considering changing its regulatory system, but first the commission says it must find out what companies have how much gas and where.

Therein lies the rub.

The FPC has never gone into the gas fields itself to inventory supplies. It has, instead, always relied on figures supplied by the American Gas Association, an industry organization which collects data on gas supplies from the producers.

But because AGA is an industry group, the charge has been made that it helped the gas industry overrate its problems and create an artificial gas shortage to force FPC to raise gas rates. AGA says this couldn't be further from the truth.

Anyhow, the FPC decided last year to do its own survey. So it set up a series of task forces and study groups to look into the gas supply situation-and promptly staffed each panel with a majority of gas industry representatives.

This brought a howl of protest in Congress. Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D-Wash., chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, introduced a bill which would require the FPC to use its own staff people to do a gas survey.

In hearings on that and other bills this week, FPC Chairman John N. Nassikas told the committee that would be all but impossible.

"It would take 475 man years to make the survey," Nassiksa testified. If 100 additional staff people were hired, "assuming we could even find 100 experts," the job would take nearly five years and cost 30 times what the current survey is targeted for, he said.

But the committee also heard from Alan S. Ward of the Federal Trade Commission who is all for the Magnuson bill.

"For the industry to be ever so honorable as it is presently constituted, its total revenues are directly dependent upon its own count of reserves," Ward said. He urged enactment of the bill to "assure an alternative source of information."

No matter how it all comes out, the consumer probably will have to pay a higher price, Nassikas says.

Networks Reducing TV Violence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Major television networks told a senate investigating committee Thursday night that they are making efforts to eliminate needless violence from TV programs.

The presidents of the three networks agreed with portions of the U.S. surgeon general's recent report that there is a causal relationship between TV violence and aggressive behavior of some children.

"I know in my heart we have done a good job in reducing the amount of violence on NBC," said Julian Goodman, the network's president.

Goodman said it would be good to consider pre-screening and a TV rating system similar to the movie ratings but he said it has some weakness when applied to home television.

Alaskan Pipeline Debated

WASHINGTON (AP)-Interior Undersecretary William T. Pecora says an Alaska oil pipeline would be a greater spill risk than one through Canada, but the trans-Canada route would cause more damage because three times the distance, in Canada, is in permafrost.

The department's environmental-impact statements say the permafrost distance of a Canadian route is 1.5 to 2 times that of the proposed Alaska route. And it rates the land disruption about equal in severity either way.

Pecora also said, in a prepared statement issued by the department, that a Canadian pipeline route would require extensions east and west to the U.S. Midwest and West Coast, and "inevitably, much actual disruption of the environment would result."

But he conceded in an interview that the extensions actually would have a small impact since they could share rights-of-way already carrying oil pipelines from Canada.

Pecora compared the proposed trans-Alaska oil pipeline with alternate routes through Canada in a 90-second recorded announcement offering "further insight into environmental effects of moving oil from the North Slope of Alaska to the lower 48 states."

His statement made no mention of the unavoidable impacts on Alaska's Prince William Sound or other segments of the tanker route that would be needed to haul oil from the proposed pipeline's southern end at Valdez to ports on the U.S. West Coast.

Interior's nine-volume environment-impact statement, issued Monday, says oil transfers and tanker ballast-cleaning at Port Valdez would cause chronic spillage resulting in "a gradual build-up and accumulation of pollutants" in the water.

The spilled oil "could...possibly affect areas far distant from the original discharge site," it says.

The impact statement says oil pollution could cost area salmon fishermen up to $400,000 a year-though probably less-and it would fishery

Woodcock Quits; Pay Board Reshaped

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon, faced with four labor members resigning from the Pay Board, reshaped it Thursday as a seven-member panel with one representative each of business and labor and five public members.

United Auto Workers president Leonard Woodcock announced in Detroit his resignation from the board. He joined AFL—CIO President George Meany and two AFL—CIO colleagues who resigned Wednesday.

Teamsters president Frank Fitzsimmons remained on the board. President Nixon said he will be balanced by one of the present business members, yet to be selected. Four business members will be let go. The five present public members will remain.

Nixon announced his decision first to the Cost of Living Council at a special White House session, then personally broke the news to newsmen.

He said he reported Meany as a

He said he respected Meany as a labor leader, but added: "As President I cannot permit any leader representing a special interest, no matter how powerful, to torpedo and sink a program that is needed to protect the public interest.

"Consequently, I have directed the Pay Board to continue as a single public unit, with those labor leaders who wisely wish to remain on it, balanced by a reduced number of businessmen."

Woodcock called for a congressional investigation of what he termed scandalous and unfair administration of national wage-price policies.

At the capitol, Rep. Wright Patman, D-Tex., chairman of the House Banking Committee, said the resignations may require Congress to re-examine and amend the wage-price control law. Patman added that diminishing public support for the program is more serious than resignations from the board.

Woodcock said the Pay Board had not achieved either of its objectives of controlling inflation or stimulating jobs but has been misused "to rigidly control wages while prices and corporate profits soar."

The Pay Board met during the day but made no formal decisions. It planned to meet again Friday morning. The White House said it didn't know when the lone business representative would be chosen.

Meany, United Steelworkers President I.W. Abel, and Machinists President Floyd Smith resigned Monday.

First news of the President's decision came shortly before noon, when Deputy Press Secretary Gerald R. Warren said Nixon had made up his mind about the Pay Board Wednesday night, a few hours after the resignations.

Warren said Nixon met Wednesday night and Thursday morning with Treasury Secretary John B. Connally, Director George P. Shultz of the Office of Management and Budget, Chairman Herbert Stein of the Council of Economic Advisers and Donald Rumsford, executive director of the Cost of Living Council.

Warren gave no hint of what the President had decided.

The labor members said in resigning that the President's economic policies were loaded in favor of big business and against labor and workers.

In a related development, two longshore union leaders met Thursday in New York to discuss possibilities of a nationwide strike over the Pay Board's rejection of a 20.9 per cent first-year raise for West Coast dockers.

Harry Bridges, president of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, had threatened a nationwide walkout unless the board approved the raise for the western dock workers. But Thomas W. Gleason, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, which operates in the East, has said he intends to go ahead and submit his sizable new wage package for Pay Board approval.

In Brief...

Indochina Action Increases

SAIGON (AP)-Enemy troops increased their attacks sharply in Indochina Thursday. They included an assault on a South Vietnamese armored cavalary command post in southern Cambodia.

The enemy struck before dawn at the command post near Kompong Trach, seven miles inside Cambodia and 160 miles southwest of Saigon.

Field reports said 13 government troops were killed and 20 wounded. Government troops claimed they killed eight North Vietnamese and Viet Cong soldiers.

Nixon Asks for $100 Million

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon combined a request to Congress Thursday for an extra $100 million for nutritional programs for the elderly with a prod for passage of his family assistance program.

He also proposed improvements in the military retirement system and called on Congress to broaden the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 to include state and local governments.

Middlesex Jail Outbreak

BILLERICA (AP)-Four guards were held hostage for at least an hour early yesterday in the Middlesex County Jail before police and corrections officers moved in to herd 91 prisoners back into their cells police said.

During the struggle between police and guards the hostages were freed and three corrections officers and six prisoners suffered minor injuries.

Grocery Prices Soar 1.9%

WASHINGTON (AP)-The sharpest rise in living costs since President Nixon placed wage-price controls in the nation's economy stirred up the growing political fight over White House policies Thursday.

Nixon aides said they weren't happy about February's five-tenths of one per cent rise in prices, but added most of it was in "volatile" food prices and insisted Nixon's controls are working to curb inflation.

Grocery prices soared 1.9 per cent for the biggest single monthly rise in 14 years, said the report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"The price control program is a sham," snapped 77-year-old AFL—CIO President George Meany, who stalked off Nixon's Pay Board on Tuesday along with two other AFL—CIO members.

"While prices are going up wages are being held down," Meany said.

The bureau also reported that the purchasing power of some 45 million rank-and-file workers slipped slightly in February but was still 2.5 per cent above a year ago for the best showing in seven years. Average weekly pay rose 35 cents to $130.27, but hourly wages remained at $3.54.

"The soaring cost of living...is a national tragedy that reaches into every household in America," said Democratic National Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien.

Meany's 13.6-million-member labor federation is expected to be a major power behind Democratic efforts to defeat Nixon in next November's presidential election.

A 4.6 per cent hike in meats accounted for most of last month's big food price rise.

Chairman Herbert Stein of Nixon's Council of Economic Advisors and Chairman C. Jackson Grayson of Nixon's Price Commission described the food price hikes as a "bulge" which is expected to taper off soon.

Grayson announced a public hearing will be held April 12 on food costs, but cautioned against any speculation it might lead to stiffer price controls.

In addition to the food price increases, the bureau reported February hikes of four-tenths of one per cent each for clothing and medical care, one-tenth for recreation and a decline of six-tenths of one per cent in transportation because of lower automobile and gasoline prices.

Stein said prices of non-food goods declined one-tenth of one per cent on a seasonally adjusted basis.

The Price report said living costs have risen at an annual rate of 3.3 per cent in the six months since Nixon imposed the 90-day wage-price freeze and then the Phase 2 controls. This compared with a 4.1 per cent annual rate of increase in the six months prior to the August freeze, it said.

But it also pointed out that in the four months of Phase 2, living costs had risen at an annual rate of 4.9 per cent.

Peace Talks Cancelled

PARIS (AP)-The United States and South Vietnam on Thursday canceled the next weekly session of the Vietnam peace conference and imposed conditions that made an early resumption of the conference unlikely.

U.S. Ambassador William J. Porter, speaking at the 147th session of the deadlocked conference, told the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong that as far as further meetings are concerned "We believe it would be preferable to await some sign from you that you are disposed to engage in meaningful exchanges." He added that he was attempting to put the conference on a "more business-like basis."

The North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong, in one of their sharpest rejoinders in the three-year-old conference, called Porter's conditions an ultimatum and rejected them.

The North Vietnamese spokesman, Nguyen Thanh Le, said Porter's stand-seconded by South Vietnam-constituted "an unprecedented hysterical and dangerous act" to sabotage the conference.

The Viet Cong's spokesman, Le Van Sau declared: "We can never accept Porter's conditions."

The conference, which several times has been interrupted briefly, appeared to be tottering on the brink of a breakdown. But it was considered possible that a new effort would be made to get negotiations going through secret meetings between U.S. and North Vietnamese officials.

The North Vietnamese and Viet Cong said they want to continue regular Thursday sessions, as has been generally customary. But the U.S. spokesman, Stephen Ledogar, told newsmen: "The old formula is not the right one... It does not work."

Porter used lack of progress on the prisoner of war issue as the reason for not meeting next Thursday.

Then Porter went into more basic questions concerning the peace talks. He called on the Communists to begin a serious discussion but added: "We may need to explore your intentions rather fully prior to agreeing to meet."

Faulkner In London, May Resign

BELFAST(AP)-The governments of Northern Ireland and Britain split Thursday night over how to bring peace to Ulster, and Prime Minister Brian Faulkner was reported ready to resign Friday.

The deadlock threatened a constitutional crisis and brought closer the danger of full-scale civil war between the Roman Catholics and Protestants.

Diplomatic sources said they expected Faulkner to present his resignation and that of his entire Cabinet. That could bring on direct rule of Northern Ireland from London.

A second round of emergency talks between Faulkner and Britain's Prime Minister Edward Heath in London ended after 2-1/2 hours with no agreement in sight.

Faulkner then flew back to Belfast, determined not to preside over any dilution of Protestant rule in the North and to fight British plans to give minority Roman Catholics a greater share of government, sources said.

They said they expected Faulkner to present his government's resignation to the governor of Northern Ireland and then hold a final meeting with his Cabinet, minutes before Heath is due to address the British House of Commons.

It was feared that if Faulkner did quit, there might be a severe Protestant backlash in Nothern Ireland, triggering all-out civil war with Catholic extremists led by the Irish Republican Army-IRA.

In the streets of Northern Ireland, a huge bomb exploded in the town in Carrickfergus northeast of Belfast, injuring 12 persons. In Londonderry British troops claimed to have hit three gunmen in two shooting incidents.

Heath said in London he will make a special statement on the crisis to the House of Commons Friday.

Resignation by Faulkner would leave Heath's government with virtually no realistic alternative but to suspend Northern Ireland's parliament and to rule the province directly from London.

The two leaders arranged no further meetings, British officials said.

The two points Faulkner was determined to resist, the sources said, were Heath's demand that Britain should take control of all Northern Ireland security, and that representatives of the Roman Catholic opposition should be guaranteed places in the provincial Cabinet.

The first point, in Faulkner's view, would reduce his government to the level of a county council. The second, he indicated, would be a travesty of parliamentary democracy.

Informants said the British plan also proposed a phasing out of internment without trial. This would involve a process of releasing the 700 Irish Republican Army suspects at intervals of three or four weeks. Those considered the least dangerous would be freed first. If their release was not followed by a new upsurge of violence, others would be freed.

The British plan also suggested the appointment of a resident British minister of state in Belfast as a means of improving lines of communication and consultation with London.

On the critical issue of Irish unity demanded by the IRA, there would be a British reaffirmation of the principle that Northern Ireland will not be detached from the United Kingdom without general consent. To test popular opinion, there would be periodic referenda.

Aides reported Heath had never conceded and will not concede any right of veto that would enable Faulkner to thwart Britain's peace package.

In London and Belfast, each Cabinet met twice during the day in emergency session on the issue.

Hussein Will Meet Nixon To Discuss Mid East Plan

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS-King Hussein of Jordan said Thursday he will leave soon for the United States to discuss with President Nixon his proposal for a realignment in the Middle East.

The king has called for the creation of a semiautonomous state of Palestine under his rule on the Israeli-occupied west bank of the Jordan River.

Hussein's announcement of his trip came as a Beirut newspaper reported that the Soviet Union has agreed to set up a factory in Egypt for the manufacture of MIG21 fighter planes. But Ware Minister Mohammed Sadek is pressing for a MIG23 plant to help Egypt achieve a balance of air power with Israel, the paper said.

Hussein told a news conference in Amman that his U.S. trip would be part of a six-week stay abroad. Informants said he would leave on Monday.

Hussein said his plan for a Palestinian state can be achieved only when Isreal agrees to withdraw from west bank territory it occupied in 1967 war. Israel has spurned the proposal.

The Israeli army cracked down on opponents of the municipal elections set for next Tuesday in the occupied Jordanian town of Nablus. It arrested Hikmet El-Masri, a leading Arab politician, on charges of inciting opposition and curtailed movements of Nablus citizens traveling to Jordan.

Arab guerrillas claim the elections will allow Israel to install its own leadership on the west bank. Israel threatens to send in an Israeli officer to run the town unless a complete slate of candidates runs for the 10-seat Municipal Council. The number of candidates declined to eight when some dropped out after receiving threats from Arab guerrillas.

In Beirut, the independent newspaper An Anwar said the agreement to build the MIG21 factory in Egypt was reached during president Anwar Sadat's visit to Moscow last month. The MIG21 forms the backbone of Egypt's air force by the MIG 23 is the most advanced plane in the Soviet arsenal.

The MIG21 interceptor is thought to be no match for the United States supplies to Israel. An Egyptian delegation headed by Mohmoud Riad, Sadat's foreign affairs adviser, met with Chinese Premier Chou En-lai in Peking and held "a friendly conversation," the official New China News Agency reported.

It was the second day of talks between leaders of the two nations. The Egyptians arrived Wednesday at the invitation of the Chinese government.

Hew Won't Cut Busing Funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Health, Education and Welfare will not cut off federal funds to force further school desegregation involving busing while Congress ponders President Nixon's proposed busing moratorium, it was learned Thursday.

The decision applies immediately to three school districts in Georgia and Maryland, including the nation's 10th largest system, which has been taken to formal compliance hearings by the U.S. Office for Civil Rights.

The threat of fund cutoffs under Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act has been the major weapon against segregated schools.

"We're coing what we think the President wants us to do," said a source who denied White House orders to that effect.

HEW officials said the decision may breed a false sense of security among school officials, however, because the cutoff threat could be restored if Congress rejects or fails to act this year on Nixon's proposal to block federal courts from ordering busing of grade school children until July 1, 1973.

Districts already cited for noncompliance are Prince Georges County and Wicomico County, Md., and Tift County, Ga.

Prince Georges is the nation's 10th larges. school system, with about 162,000 pupils.

The county schools had been faced with the loss of $14 million a year in federal funds if found in violation of civil rights laws.

"During the period while we're waiting for Congress to act on the moratorium, we will not actually implement any fund cutoff in the Prince Georges case," the source said.

If Congress rejects the moratorium or adjourns this year without acting on it, the decision will have to be reassessed, officials said.

Although the loss of federal funds has been authorized since 1964, no school or university actually has lost any federal aid since Nixon took office.

Liber's Say Democrats Using Sexist Policy

MIAMI BEACH, Fla.(AP)-The Democratic party is using the sexist approach in hiring hostesses for its national convention here this summer, claims a women's lib group.

A spokesman for the Dade County chapter of NOW said Thursday the Democrats were more interested in busty beauty queen types than in knowledgable, qualified women.

"We are deeply disturbed that age, physical measurements and features of women are the primary criteria to be used for promoting the image of the Democrat party," said Elaine Gorden of the National Organization of Women.

She said she was acting on the basis of a recruiting brochure put out by the Democratic party which asked for applicants between 18 and 28, for body measurements and whether the applicant would be willing to compete in a "hostess queen" contest.

Denying the sexist charge, Ted Cohen, cochairman of the convention's hostess committee, said the age limit was set because the hostess job is so demanding. He also said the measurements were necessary for providing properly fitting uniforms.

As for the queen contest, Cohen said that idea has since been dismissed.

The Coverage of A Poll

By RANDY SHULDINER

I'm getting severely bummed-out reading this reassuring article in the DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE. It is entitled PROFILE OF THE UMASS STUDENT: WANTS TO WORK WITHIN THE SYSTEM. Now this reassuring article reassures Mr. Callahan, Mr. Administration, the alleged State Police, the so-called UMASS Security, and any other person or organization concerned with insurgency.

I guess the idea of the article is one hundred forty UMASS students, being an effective sample of twenty-one thousand, have definite ideas concerning droogs, the environment, the family, violent protest and other fads.

The reason for my faintly concealed skepticism is the tricky nature of deriving information for public consumption from polls. For example: "Only 61% of the students polled felt that blacks were being treated unfairly, as opposed to about 80% who were of this opinion last year." Please note the placement of the worlds "only" and "about". What do whites know about treating blacks fairly? There are approximately six hundred blacks enrolled at UMASS. Well...that's cool; although I doubt if they counted the percentage of blacks in the one hundred-forty students sample. "Moreover, the report notes, '65% do not perceive inequality as a problem in the United States'."

Here's a killer: "To bring about change, 55 per cent favored working through traditional channels, while 28 per cent viewed non-violent protest as the optimum way to affect change." Notice here, the placing of the words "favored" and "viewed". This is the paragraph from which the layout man derived a 30 point headline.

"The report expresses surprise at the sampling's response to environment: 'If there has been one issue considered an issue par excellence, it is the broad question of environment, and yet we find that only eight per cent consider it the most important issue facing the country' " It isn't the statistics that count, but the interpretation of them. For instance, what would have happened if the question to the answer above had been asked of an ecology class? Or, to be more objective, of a microbiology class?

To get to the point, I consider that article in the DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE to be an example of irresponsible journalism. Everything, from the layout of the article with respect to the page and the headline; to the author's taking out of context material from an essentially doubtful source, reeks of politics to me. The people who read the DAILY HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE also pay the taxes and have a good deal to say about the budget at UMASS. Therefore, many must be relieved to read how moderate 55% of one hundred-forty students are.

The Paper Shredders

WASHINGTON--Among the many startling revelations that have come out of the International Telephone and Telegraph hearings is that ITT sent a team of security men down from New York to shred all of the memorandums in the company's Washington office.

ITT said this was absolutely necessary because Jack Anderson printed a confidential memo of lobbyist Dita Beard's (she has since denied writing it). The ITT people assured the Senate Judiciary Committee that they only destroyed "old memos" and "useless papers" and did not cut up anything that had to do with the hearings. They also said Dita Beard not only participated in the paper shredding but got so involved in it that she wanted to throw everything away.

I can just imagine the scene as the security people bring in the paper shredder, which looks exactly like a wastepaper basket with blades on it.

"Well, Dita, we've come down from New York to destroy all your old memos and papers, but, of course, we have to be careful we do not destroy anything that could help the Senate investigation regarding our contribution to the Republican convention."

"Of course. Where shall we begin?"

"How about this program from the Kentucky Derby?"

"Oh boy, was that a Kentucky Derby! Did I ever tell you guys what I said to Atty. Gen. John Mitchell at Gov. Louis Nunn's house before I passed out on the floor?"

"We'd rather not hear about that, Dita."

"Well, I told him if his Justice Department didn't..."

"Dita, please. Can we get on with the shredding? Now, what about these folders on the San Diego Sheraton hotels?"

"I thought you wanted me to give them to the Republican National Committee to show them what they were getting for our noble $400,000 commitment."

"Dita, there is no $400,000 commitment."

"Oh? Why didn't someone tell me, so I wouldn't have put it in my memo which Jack Anderson printed?"

"You didn't write a memo about the $400,000."

"Well, if I didn't write it, why are you shredding it?"

"We're just trying to clean out our files, Dita. It's company policy to do this every two years. Now what about this autographed photo of Peter Flanigan from the White House?"

"You're not going to shred that, are you?"

"We have a saying at ITT headquarters, Dita--'Better shred than dead.'"

"Why are you shredding my Hartford Fire Insurance policy?"

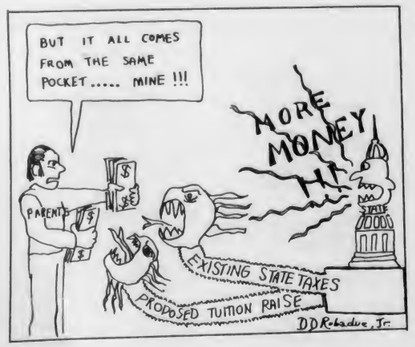
"It's been canceled. We don't want anyone to think that one of our lobbyists had any connection with Hartford Fire Insurance. But since we own the Grinnell Fire Sprinkler Co., too, we'll install new sprinklers in your house."

"Bless you. I knew ITT had a heart. What are you doing with that book?"

"We don't believe you need 'Six Crises' by Richard Nixon any more, Dita. Someone might think the President was involved in our antitrust settlement."

"Well, can I keep 'The Richard Kleindienst Cookbook'?"

"Dita, you know better than that. I think we better shred this, too."



"But that's my ITT certificate of merit. I earned that."

"Of course you earned it, Dita. We'll never forget what you did for the company. I guess that does it. Oh, there's one more thing. Where did you park your Avis car?"

"You're not going to shred my Avis car, are you?"

"Headquarters thinks it's best that we do. There is no telling what Jack Anderson could find in the glove compartment."

Artificial Flowers Do Not Last For Hours

Remember that autumn: the drive to New Hampshire, the grass, the trees, the ceremonial green sky.
The ride took so long, and then you were piqued
because I had forgotten to shave.
The rains came down; you threatened to get out and walk.

Insolent youths at Dartmouth played chess under the laurel boughs; pregnant women sang, and just as we approached our limits
you told me that you loved me.
I was spoiled by this change in disposition.

But wasn't I dismayed by the careless arrangement of your hair?
If I had forgotten to shave, you had forgotten your snuff.
Such stuff could hardly have been expected to last the night. I took out a decanter of wine and gurgled dangerously.

What were you doing five years ago, I asked,
when rain was slower in coming and the youths were not quite as insolent? You refused to answer.
You got out of the car, walked through a meadow, and arranged your hair in the lemon twilight.

Then I started the car, went off without you,
and drove into doggerel Vermont.
The mountains were warm. I flexed my muscles for the ensuing task, quite knowledgeable about women, chess, and wine.

Amherst Polka

So, the villages were cold that year, and we danced; we danced from Norfolk to Salem, ardently discouraging the matrons to serve us cafe au lait.
The rouse worked: now we are pure, cleansed of whatever expurgation threatened us.
There is more to our story, but that can wait:
meanwhile; MEANWHILE,
a Chinese butler waits near the steel podium for last remembrances from Moscow, ardently taking into consideration the Maltese fact that odd pirouetters are more inclined to scald astronauts, than susceptible hot water is.
Let's hear it for our coffee;
let's zigzag, in the rain.

Trustees To Live Here

By JAMES E. LAVARKAS
Special To The MDC

The Board of Trustees at a special meeting held yesterday afternoon in Boston declared that they have become too "disassociated with the campuses and will spend the next month living in dormitories and eating in dining commons" according to President Robert Wood.

Also decided at the meeting was that the two student trustees, because they know all about student life already, will live in penthouse apartments in Boston and Amherst, respectively. Commented Lee Sandwen, "This may help to close the generation gap which now exists between the students and the trustees."

One trustee, who wishes to remain anonymous, stated that the whole idea is quite ridiculous. "We visited Orchard Hill once last year, or was it the year before? Anyway, I'm sure things have not changed much. If you've seen one student ghetto, you've seen them all."

After contacting District Attorney John Callahan, it was learned that a raid is scheduled on one of the dorms where the trustees will stay. Presently, the names of those dorms are being held secret.

"The plot," said the D.A., "is to let all the trustees see all aspects of student life, including the experience of a drug bust." He went on to say that one marijuana joint will be planted in each room, "then each trustee will be charged with 'being in the presence' We want them to have the full affect."

Also included in the trustee visit will be attendance at typical classrooms. Food Science 101, Sociology 101 and German 380 are among those being considered, according to an informed source, who added the final decision will come next week. The date of the visit is also a secret at present. The informed source said that June 1 through July one will probably be it though. This will enable the trustee to move around without student interference.

Since April Fools Day is during vacation, the MDC offers these delights. Any connection with reality is totally denied. We hope those named in these articles take it all in good humor. (The advertising on these pages is true, the news stories are not.)

Libe Crane Stolen

By JOE PALOOKA

Officials from the UMass Security Office today expressed their shock and disbelief at the disappearance of the crane on the top of the new library. The theft apparently occurred sometime between the hours of 2 A.M. and 5 A.M. this morning.

It was at 5 A.M. that security guard I.M. Lazy was found unconscious by his fellow worker, Dick Tracy. Mr. Lazy, his memory still unclear, remembers being awoken by a severe jolt to the building, and then being knocked unconscious by hitting his head against the wall. Security officials are at a loss to explain the 10 foot wide footprints in the mud around the library.

State and local officials have been called into the investigation but they too have been unable to come up with any new leads in the case. They are likewise at an apparent loss for any apparent motive in this baffling case.

Officials at the Infirmary reported that three UMass students requested tranquilizers early this morning. All three reported seeing a "large creature" in the vicinity of the library late last night. One of the three was quoted as saying: "That's the last time I drink Maximus Super."

Housing Office Collapses

By WHIT MOORE

The University Housing Office collapsed last night at 2:18 A.M. Informed sources at the scene said that it was built in the "made to last" style of the Sylvan Area and the Graduate, Campus and new Fine Arts Centers.

It seems that around 2 A.M. a group of drunken students walked by the office, and one of them stumbled into the building. People in the towers of Southwest reported severe tremors from about 2:00-2:15, followed by the resounding thud of plywood and sand.

Contractor Jim "Dum-Dum" Dunfey, whose company built the edifice, said when reached for comment that he is a firm believer in replacing buildings just as often as cars. "Anyway, what do you want for $34 million?"

Paul Pope Overrules Supreme Court

By JACK KOCH
A.P. Birth Control Writer

The Attorney General's Office announced that the recent ruling of the Supreme Court will have no affect on the status of birth control devices in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The U.S. Supreme Court established the right of equal access to contraceptives for both married and unmarried persons. Asst. Atty. Paul Pope pointed out "the court made no ruling on the distribution of information relating to birth control devices and under state law, this is still illegal."

According to Pope, the state internal revenue service and police have been mobilized to confiscate all contraceptives from drug stores and randomly redistribute them to variety, novelty, and package stores. When a store then becomes known to the public as a vendor of such devices, the contraceptives will again be confiscated and redistributed. In this manner, said Pope, all citizens would have an equal lack of information as to where to purchase such devices.

The law banning the distribution of information would continue to be rigidly enforced, drawing penalties as high as life in prison. "There is only one form of birth control legal in the Commonwealth," said Pope, "and that is 'the pill'." He further noted that "the pill" was an aspirin placed on the inside of the left knee and held firmly in place with the right knee.

Alcohol Abuse Growing

By JOHN MULHOLLAND

"Alcohol is the most widely used and abused drug on the UMass campus."

So stated "Room To Move" coordinator, Ron LaFrance in an interview Tuesay on student alcoholism.

"With so much attention today on the 'dramatic' effects of psychedelic and hard drug misuse, drinking is looked at as an acceptable thing to do. While not officially condoned by the authorities, getting drunk is often regarded with a 'boys will be boys' attitude. Not too many students are arrested for underage drinking. So you don't have the paranoia of getting caught that you have with other illegal drugs."

LaFrance also pointed out the absence of immediate bodily damage as another reason for the wide use of alcohol.

"It's only after a long-term pattern of heavy drinking has developed that an alcoholic begins to suffer physically. By then alcohol can kill in a number of ways: by damaging the liver, or the heart, or through an overall deterioration of the body."

LaFrance feels that UMass is a breeding place for drinking patterns that may lead to chronic alcoholism for some. He cited "weekend drinking" as the main cause.

"What does a student do on a weekend if there's nothing going on? Usually he ends up in a dormitory room drinking with friends. He can be wiped out for two or three days if he wants. It doesn't take long before this becomes a regular habit.

"The question then is how much does this student's life revolve around alcohol? Does he have any other interests? Is he missing classes? Does he have good relationships with others or has he stopped communicating?

"Heavy drinking usually involves a lack of self-confidence, or relations, or of something to do. If any of these reasons are used for drinking often then the student may have a problem that could lead to alcoholism."

LaFrance added that Room To Move is getting more involved in the problem. Members, in cooperation with the infirmary staff, are now going to sessions on alcoholism. People who have been alcoholics are on call to talk with students who want help. The Alcoholics' Anonymous chapter in Amherst also has a special program for young problem drinkers. All efforts are to get students to recognize their problem early.

But LaFrance stressed that help can best be given by friends.

"Try to get the person interested in other things. Invite him to take part in group activities other than getting drunk. Often all that's needed is an external kick to get out of the drinking rut."

In conclusion, LaFrance asked for volunteers with experiences with alcoholism. Room To Move needs people who are willing to work with people who want help.

Due to the increased number of applications being processed for the fall semester, staff limitations, and the extra burden imposed by a quota system, Graduate School has found it necessary to close the Graduate Admissions Office one day a week.

Effective February 25 the Graduate Admissions Office will be closed for business on all Fridays through April 11. Telephone inquiries and requests for admissions materials will be handled on those days by the receptionist in the second floor lobby of the Graduate Research Center.

Boston Teachers Ask $9,500 Starting Pay

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Teachers Union has called for a new contract for the teaching year beginning in September which seeks a a $2 million pay boost for 5,000 teachers that would raise starting pay to $9,500 on a scale climbing to $16,000 after seven years experience.

The pay hike request for the city's public school teachers was part of a package approved by the union which also calls for 1,000 additional teachers, healthy increases in insurance programs and time off and a reduction in the maximum number of daily classes taught to four.

The present contract, which expires Aug. 31, provides for starting salary of $8,018 with teachers with seven year's experience climbing to $13,610.

Other major proposals would cut teacher-pupil ratios to 15-to-1 in "troubled schools" and expand bi-lingual programs into all schools from kindergarten through high school.

Also included are expanded intramural sports programs, more pay for junior high coaches, a 500 per cent increase in life insurance coverage and the providing of "special subject teachers" in all elementary schools to teach art, music, science and physical education.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

A reader named Mark writes from Chicago to ask, "I have heard and read much about the late Evangeline Adams: what was her zodiacal sign?" Answer: what was her zodiacal sign?" Answer: Evangeline Adams (1868-1932) was the most famous of modern American astrologers. Her clients made up a "who's who" in art, entertainment, politics and business. She told her own story brilliantly in "The Bowl of Heaven." Miss Adams, a direct descendant of President John Adams, was born under Aquarius.

Lindsay And Jackson To Speak In Springfield

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Democratic presidential contenders John V. Lindsay, mayor of New York, and Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, will appear in Springfield April 7 and 8.

Lindsay will deliver the keynote address April 7 at the 32nd annual Model Congress at American International College, where 350 high school students from more than 50 schools in the northeast will gather to debate the top issues of the day in a mock legislature.

Lindsay is then slated to address the annual meeting of the Mental Health Association of Greater Springfield, discussing national health priorities.

On April 8, Jackson will speak at the kickoff dinner for the 1972 United Jewish Appeal at Temple Beth El in Springfield.

Both will combine their appearances with campaigning for the April 25 presidential primary in Massachusetts.

Welfare Mother Refused Sterilization By Judge

BOSTON (AP) — Judge Charles E. Wyzanski in U.S. District Court has vacated his own decision refusing to order a sterilization operation for a Worcester woman and ordered a new hearing.

The judge acted Wednesday in the case of Robbie Mae Hathaway, a welfare mother who sought a free sterilization operation from Worcester City Hospital. Mrs. Hathaway contended she had eight children, high blood pressure, a hernia and an obesity problem, and asserted that as a welfare recipient she was entitled to the sterilization operation.

She contended that the U.S. Constitution's equal protection section entitled her to the same care and service as a financially well-off woman.

The judge dismissed the complaint Tuesday, but Mrs. Hathaway's attorney contended the decision went against the ruling of the U.S. Court of Appeals.

2nd Circuit, in the case of McCabe vs. Nassau County Medical Center.

Judge Wyzanski said in light of the higher court ruling, he was vacating his decision, and ordering a further hearing Monday morning.

Spring Means an End For Some; A Beginning For Others

Crew Breaks The Ice

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Spring is finally here and the Crew team is flocking to the water. After having spent much time and effort (most crew members have been running, lifting weights and generally getting into condition since last September), the ducks are finally able to get their feet wet.

Last Sunday, after the ice had cleared, the rowers were able to take a leisurely cruise upon the Connecticut River, a scene straight from Ben Hur, as it seemed from the distance. In reality, the rowers were sweating and straining to make up lost time on he water. Next week's foe, Princeton, has already been in the swim of things for five weeks. Individual practice prepares a man physically, but in a regatta, all that matters is timing acquired through teamwork, and this can be accomplished only upon the water.

Coach Mike Faherty is very optimistic in looking ahead at the schedule, the toughest ever. He, along with freshman Coach Charles Leonard worked very hard to increase the popularity of this sport. A brand new course has been constructed by the Lake Wickabog Boat Club in West Brookfield for the regattas to be held. Among the notables that will be faced this year are MIT, Columbia and St. Joseph's, which was second last year at the College Nationals. Forty-two students (20 Upperclassmen, 18 Freshmen and 4 Coxswains) have volunteered and have worked very hard to represent UMass. There are only three seniors on the club, supplying the experience and guidance necessary to compete satisfactorily.

Richard Jones, the stroke of last year's JV unit, which finished second in the Nationals, captains the Crew Club. The other two seniors are: Christopher Hodson, the fifth oarsman on last year's JVs and Robert Jayes, the cox-swain.

Tonight the oarsmen travel to Princeton, N.J., in order to prepare for a preliminary regatta with Princeton a week from Saturday, and the opening battle against Wesleyan and five other schools, the week after. A rigid schedule has been prepared by Coach Faherty for vacation week. The oarsmen will be on the river twice a day and will attempt to row more than twenty miles per day in order to make up for the lack of water time they have had so far. While at Princeton, four eight-man shells and one four-man shell will prepare for competition. While school is out, there will be forty-two men grunting and groaning, and otherwise enjoying themselves, in anticipation of a very good season.

Stander Thinking Big

By LARRY GENUCHI

OMAHA, Neb. AP-Ron Stander will win the world heavyweight championship by knocking out Joe Frazier here May 25, predicted Ron Stander Thursday.

"The fight won't go 15 rounds," said the 27-year-old Council Bluffs, Iowa, fighter.

"I'm going to knock him out."

The fight, first world title match in Nebraska history, was formally announced at a news conference which was not attended by Frazier who, according to a spokesman, had already signed a contract.

Stander's manager, Dick Noland, said he expected the fight at City Auditorium would gross approximately $240,000. Tickets will be scaled from $10 to $40.

Cornhusker Boxing Club officials, promoters of the fight, said the title match will be broadcast live by the TVS Television Network of New York City on home television throughout the United States and carried to other parts of the world via satellite.

Irwin Rosee, representative of TVS, said Frazier will receive a guarantee of $150,000 from TVS and Noland said Frazier would receive 40 per cent of the live gate in addition to the television guarantee.

Baseball Team Heads South

By EARLE BARROLL

Each academic year coaches Jack Leaman and Dick Bergquist have a friendly wager (full course meal type-coat tails and all) on whose team can win the most games during the course of their respective seasons.

In the previous two years Leaman has had the opportunity to take his belt out a notch or two as 18 and 23 wins by his hoopsters were enough to offset 14 and 21 by the baseball team.

Interestingly enough Bergquist had a super chance at topping 23 wins, but a late season tailspin including a doubleheader loss to Harvard in the New England regional finals, cut into his petty cash supply.

This year, Leaman has not presented Bergquist with much of a challenge. The hoopsters managed only 14 victories and with 10 lettermen returning from last years New England power the baseball team is not only assured of topping this figure, but of also being a dominant figure in the region again.

Today the baseball team leaves for Florida where they'll be playing three college teams and five exhibition games in Sarasota at the Kansas City Royals Baseball Academy.

To date the Redmen have been confined to Curry Hicks Cage (about a month and a half) and like all spring trips will run into the early season first time out in the fresh air problems. But this is what pre-season southern trips are all about.

Bergquist will again be fielding a young, yet very experienced team. Most of the returnees were sophomores or freshman last season, but have that year and summer ball in the Cape Cod League under their belts.

Co-Captains for this season are seniors Brian Martin and Jim Saracino. They will lead an offense that includes a trio of .300 hitters in all-New England selections Dan Esposito, and Mark Palau and Ed McMahon. Catcher Tom McDermott who finished a shade under .300 will be behind the plate once again.

The pitching staff has four major league arms in Tom White, Chip Baye, John Olsen and Mike Flanagan. These four are regarded as one of the finest mound corps in the country.

After the spring trip the Redmen will open their regular season on April 8 at Yale. Their home opener is April 14 with Holy Cross.

UMass' John Betancourt has been named the recipient of the New England coaches "Bob Cousy Award" presented annually to the area's top senior under six feet. He will receive the award at the annual New England Basketball Awards Banquet on March 29 at Valle's Steak House in Hartford, Connecticut.

Betancourt led the Redmen in scoring this past winter averaging a shade better than 14 points a game. He also set a school record for most games played in a varsity career as he appeared in 78 games during the course of three seasons.

VARSITY M CLUB NOTES-Mulcahy's Munchclub wrapped up its winter sports season on Wednesday at the Newman Center. Jim Mulcahy had quite a crew on hand in the persons of coaches Russ Kidd, Erik Kjeldsen, Homer Barr, Bill MacConnell, Gideon Ariel and Jack Leaman.

Notable quotes:

Kidd(Hockey): "The seniors on this years team have set a tempo of winning, the underclassmen have fallen into it. A tradition has been started at UMass.

Kjeldsen (gymnastics): "The team grew up this year to what it can be. Since we entered the league eight years ago we've occupied every place but first (second this season). There just happens to be perennial occupancy in first by the name of Penn State.

Barr (wrestling): "Carl Dambman's and Bruce Buckbee's performances in the national's were the best representation of any New England school in recent years."

MacConnell (skiing): "It's pretty hard to ski with those little schools in Northern New England located near the mountains. New England College gets 30 ski scholarships."

Ariel (indoor track): "The night before the Yankee Conference championships all the coaches were toasting for the team places the next day. Most everyone said UConn for first. But when they went to toast UMass for second head coach Ken O'Brien didn't want any part of it. He wanted more."

Leaman (basketball): "We lost 11 games on the road this season. So should I attack for a new facility or stay with the old beat up place we play in."

Ball Five?

By ROY LYONS

The image of major league baseball has suffered drastically in the past several seasons. The Seattle Pilots passed quietly away. The Washington Senators became the Texas Rangers amid a swarm of protests. (Will Ted Williams ever escape the arena of controversy?) A threat of a player strike looms for the second consecutive year. The impending decision on the legality of the reserve clause, challenged in court by Curt Flood, could have far-reaching repercussions.

Fortunately, baseball does have an opportunity to bolster its shattering image. This could be accomplished by an unbiased acceptance of pitcher Jim Bouton, attempting a comeback into the game at Pittsfield.

Jim rocked the baseball establishment two years ago with the publication of his book Ball Four. Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and his colleagues considered it nothing short of yellow journalism unjustly attacking many time honored traditions of baseball. Others maintained that it smacked of sensationalism, containing nothing but glorified gossip from beginning to end. Still others, the more liberal faction, hailed it as the work of a crusader against the evils of a professional sport.

The interesting question is not the book itself, but what effect it will have on Jim's career. Ideally, it will have no effect at all. A professional athlete should be judged by his efforts and ability to win, disregarding personal goals when they conflict with the club's collective effort to win. Baseball owes it to Jim Bouton to judge him solely on these standards. Discrimination because of his book, flagrant or subtle, has no place in the game.

Bouton has an equally important obligation. If baseball gives him the fair shake he is seeking, he should accept his fate. In the event that his knuckleball cannot measure up to the fastball that made him an ace in the yankee dynasty, he should be willing to admit that his arm just doesn't have it anymore.

If baseball can show itself to be an "equal employment agency," and Bouton acknowledges their policy, both parties will win. That doesn't happen often in baseball.

Trustees Hike Tuition, Set Hearings

By CHARLEY BERKOW

The UMass Board of Trustees have voted to increase tuition for out-of-state and graduate students at UMass. President Robert C. Wood said in proposing the increases that they are subject to comment by the University community, the state and community colleges and the Board of Higher Education.

The Trustees, meeting in Amherst, also set the date for a meeting with the chancellor candidates, increased the flexibility of the Student Judiciary System (See story tomorrow), established an ad-hoc committee to investigate inter-collegiate athletics at UMass, heard a report on the progress of the Frieda Salzman case and discussed their lack of a stand on the issue of armed forces recruiters on campus with Vietnam Veterans Against the War representatives.

The tuition increases will be spread evenly over the next two years.

Tuition for out-of-state undergraduates will increase by $250 a year for the next two years; tuition for in-state graduate students will increase by $125 a year; tuition for out-of-state graduate students will increase by $300 a year.

Wood said that the University is trying to maintain in-state undergraduate tuition at its $200 per year level. He said that with this tuition scale the Trustees would keep tuition as low as possible.

However, he did not rule out the possibility of further Trustee action on tuition.

The tuition increases would bring in $1.5 million in new state revenues at present enrollment, according to Wood.

Wood stated that he proposed the increases "with considerable reluctance". He said that all tuition adjustments must be based on educational and not fiscal policy.

Wood said that after a year's study of tuition policy with respect to the University's responsibility to the needs of the public and the students, the Trustees reached the following conclusions:

--the need for low-cost, high quality public higher education is greater than ever before;

--no responsible increase in tuition can provide genuine tax relief or be considered a major souce of public revenue;

--any change in undergraduate tuition for Massachusetts residents must be accompanied by assurance of sufficient student financial aid to assure that qualified students are not excluded for financial reason. This is especially true at our Amherst campus where Room and Board rates are notably high."

Wood said that the Board then undertook a review of out-of-state and graduate tuition within the context of these conclusions and "the many pressing demands upon the Commonwealth's resources," and came up with the tuition increases they passed.

Trustee Lee Sandwen, who supported the tuition increase, said that it would not affect the status of international student tuition waivers or the possibility of agreements with other states regarding tuition.

The Board, which met last Tuesday, announced that it will hold an executive (closed) meeting in Boston to interview all the candidates for chancellor nominated by the Chancellor Search Committee. That meeting will take place on Wednesday, April 5 at 12:30 p.m.

The Trustees authorized their chairman, Joseph P. Healey, to appoint an Ad-Hoc Committee to investigate intercollegiate Athletic Activity on the UMass-Amherst campus.

Trustee Lee Sandwen said that the lack of specified goals for the athletic program at UMass has made it difficult to deal with the program. He offered his services to the committee.

Trustee Frederick Troy said that Frieda Salzman will meet with the UMass-Boston Faculty and Education Policy Committee in Executive session to discuss her record.

Troy said that Ms. Salzman is "basically interested in clearing up her record." He said that she has reserved the right to an open hearing.

Ms. Salzman lost her position as a Physics professor at UMass-Boston in 1968. The reason most often given for her contract termination was that she and her husband, also a Physics professor at UMass-Boston, violated the nepotism rule there.

She had appealed her release from the University and demanded reinstatement with tenure at UMass-Boston.

After several confrontations with the Trustees, she recently accepted a compromise offer.

As the Trustees were about to adjourn, a representative from VVAW, asked them to make a policy statement on whether or not Armed Forces recruiters should be allowed on the UMass-Boston campus.

The VVAW rep asked the Trustees what their position was on a difference between the president and the UMass-Boston Chancellor on the issue.

"We'll see you back in Boston next month to see what action you have taken," he said.

Various trustees replied that the Boston faculty is trying to determine the student opinion on the matter. The Trustees also said that they were unsure of the legality of their taking a stand on the issue.

One board member urged the other Trustees to think of the philosophical rather than legal consequences of their banishment of armed forces recruiters from the campus.

In other action:-The Trustees heard Robert Gordon, their delegate to the Board of Higher Education, report that the Board of Higher Education wants time to listen to UMass and other segments of the Mass. Higher Education System in seeking a unified tuition policy;

-Granted a request from WAMH (the Amherst College radio station) to locate its transmitter on the top of Mount Lincoln, on the condition that engineering reports show that it will not interfere with the transmission of WFCR, which is also located on the top of Mount Lincoln;

-Decided to look into some land in the mountains south of Amherst;

-Heard a report on the progress of the Worcester medical school;

-Approved the appointment of 2 new police officers to the UMass-Amherst security force;

-Extend its appreciation to Lee Sandwen, as it was his last public meeting as a Trustee.

UMass Med School-A Study In Politics

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

Approaching Worcester from the east one encounters the usual agglomeration of the American plastic burgers and pancake franchises, all housed in the usual plastic wrapped packages and presenting an atmosphere of "buck-grabbing for the moment and tomorrow be damned." The likelihood of their presence ten years from now is almost nil and one easily conjures up a vision of a future wasteland.

But, just beyond these products of the American dream machine, a view from the bridge crossing Lake Quinsigamond presents a much more different picture. There, on a plateau above the shore, is the framework of what will shortly house the University of Massachusetts' Medical School.

When individuals speak on idealism and purity of higher education

The architecture is what some have called "early mammoth." It is a complex of two eight-story classroom buildings connected by an equally large laboratory building, all sheltering a three-story library.

To the right, with its huge smokestack, is a large powerplant, (technological conditioning forces us to prematurely see fumes billowing from it), which will provide the energy necessary for running the complex.

The scale and design of the buildings present an aura of permanence as if destiny had ordained the setting for them. But, a closer examination of the events surrounding the site choice and construction plans of the school will render these feelings unwarranted.

The story behind the physical reality of the school is one obscured by smoke-filled rooms and, perhaps, equally clouded minds. But, just as all wars have had their true heroes interspersed with the villains, this story too has people who in the act of doing the obvious wrong, thought they were right, and were providing the state with something to be proud of.

The ten year history of the school's beginning should be remembered when individuals speak of the idealism and intellectual purity of the Massachusetts' higher educational system.

If the right decisions had been made, this series would be unnecessary; because some of them were wrong, it becomes very necessary.

The actual date of when the school was first envisioned is lost in history. The earliest records are of debates in the State Senate concerning the construction of a state medical school in Boston during the late 1950's. The bills were repeatedly defeated by small margins due to the extremely verbal opposition from the existing medical schools and hospitals in the metropolitan area.

The conflict with the existing schools, (Boston University, Harvard and Tufts), is obvious. Another school, especially a state school with its large sums of available money, would increase competition for faculty, and if it grew prestigious enough, for the more promising students.

The architecture is what some have called "early mammoth"

The opposition from Boston's hospitals was based on their working relationship with the medical schools. They provided space and patients for the future doctors and felt the city was being served to its capacity without the addition of another hospital, a public one at that. They felt the state school would cause a rationing out of the limited patient supply and, in the end, render the entire plan less beneficial to both the schools, the hospitals, and the public being served by them.

The plan for a state-run medical school might have died then had not an alternative plan been introduced by the legislature. The new approach ignored the clause stipulating the school would be built in Boston, stating there was only a need for a medical school in "Massachusetts". The plan was for the appropriation of funds for hiring a dean who would then, through professional guidance, chose the site.

Editors Note: This is the first installment in a series of four articles in which Don Saint-Pierre examines the events leading up to the construction of the UMass Medical School in Worcester. The story may seem hard to believe, but then truth is usually like that, especially political truth.

In 1961 a legislative commission advised the state there was a need for a school and with that the trustees were asked to chose a dean and a site.

Realizing the political ramifications of site selection, the trustees in turn formed another committee which was assigned the task of recommending a dean who would then recommend to the trustees his choice for a site.

The commission, composed of both public and professional men, realized their choice would determine the caliber the school might attain. The more renowned and respected the dean, the more easily he might adquire a high caliber staff.

Initially the private schools provided little assistance to the search. Then, realizing the inevitability of the project, they began working with the committee.

In possibly a last ditch effort to avoid a large state medical school, in 1962 Northeastern University said they would staff a school on their campus if the state would build it. This was promptly put down by the American Medical Association as a second rate plan. Besides, they said, this could easily be read as state aid to a private school.

In November 1963, after the usual elimination process reducing the prospects from an unwieldy number of fifty, the search committee presented three names to the Board. Then, in December of that year, Dr. Lamar Soutter was named as the dean.

Soutter's qualifications were, to say the least, adequate. He was dean of the B.U. School of Medicine, Boston Area Chief of Surgery, editor of the Boston Medical Quarterly and had published over 60 articles in medical journals.

His first assignment was the seemingly easy task of choosing a site for his school.

Smoke-filled rooms and perhaps equally clouded minds

Initially, there were five prospective areas under consideration. They were: Boston Proper; suburban Boston; Worcester; Springfield; and on campus at Amherst. Plans called for an $11 million medical-science building with an operating cost of about $1 million.

Soutter was immediately bombarded with offers from every corner of the state. Offers from the sublime to the ridiculous were presented. Boston and Worcester offered their economic white elephant city hospitals for the Chicopee offered an abandoned 74-acre rifle range, and the University's administration reminded him that there was land and existing laboratory and classroom facilities available in Amherst.

In these early stages the Amherst/Springfield area took the lead as a preferable site for the school. Paramount was its lack of a major hospital.

The argument presented by individuals from Worcester and Boston that Western Massachusetts didn't have the population to support a hospital of the size proposed was negated by a study conducted by T.O. Wilkinson, head of the UMass Sociology Department, who found that the population within a 30-mile radius of both Worcester and Amherst was nearly equal. (No one questioned the population supremacy of Boston, but most had now concluded that it was well served with the existing hospitals).

Another study conducted at the request of Soutter disclosed that the Pioneer Valley had a greater potential for growth than the Worcester area. This was borne-out by the 1960 census which found that Worcester had a decreasing population while the population of Western Massachusetts was increasing.

Looking outside the state, the Amherst Record, in an editorial, pointed out that recently the Universities of Florida and Kentucky had both located their new medical schools in the suburbs to eliminate the problems and confusions involved in a city location. The editorial also noted that Stanford's medical school hospital was moved from San Francisco to the suburban campus at Palo Alto for the convenience of the faculty and students. The school reported the new location in the less populated area caused "little, if any, problems in the filling of beds."

No Referendum Expected In Senate Salary Issue

By DOUGLAS PATCH

The once controversial issue of paying three of the Student Senate officers, recently passed the Senate, almost inconspicuously, by a 34-9 vote. Last year, in the first of two referendums, the proposal was soundly defeated by a margin of 6-1. Revealing a change in attitude, a second referendum held last year was defeated by a 2-1 margin.

One of the main contentions of the Senators who opposed the bill this year was that no referendum was held to gauge student opinion. Mike Altfillisch, Student Senator from Kennedy, voted against the bill on the grounds that last year's vote was decidedly against it, that the bill had not been printed on the budget, and that it was a special motion about which the student body had no way of finding out.

Student Senate President Lee Sandwen felt that there was no need for a referendum since the students would probably have supported the proposal anyway. With the new bill in effect, he said, the problem of discriminating against students with financial burdens, who have to earn money, will be eliminated. He pointed out that most other schools pay or reimburse those involved in student government. In addition, he emphasized the fact that the bill was not an attempt to turn the positions into professional ones, but that, considering the fact that he and his associates often put in as many as 50 hours a week, it would be a justified expenditure.

Student Senators Mari Earnest from Van Meter and Paul Hamel from John Adams opposed the bill in representation of their constituents. Senator Earnest pointed out that a lot of senators did not bother to find out the opinions of their fellow students.

Joseph Downey, the Senator from Gorman, rejected the bill on the grounds that the officers know what they are getting into when they run for the positions.

Downey and Greg Acone, the Senator from Brett, both expressed apprehension over the possibility of the student activities tax rising as influencing them to vote against the bill.

John Hogan, Student Senate Vice-President, pointed out that the positions require "a definite amount of expertise," as well as an extensive amount of time and energy. In the past, he said, the Senate has lost competent people because of the difficulty of being a full-time student and maintaining an executive position. Hogan considers the Senate to be an important part of student services, like the Collegian and WMUA, and for this reason, the officers, like important members of the newspaper and radio staffs, should be paid. Although it is a voluntary position, as he said, it has evolved into something more extensive.

Out of the approximate Student Senate budget of $600,000, the $200 a month, for nine months a year, to be paid to the Senate President, and the $150 a month, nine months a year, to be paid to both the Speaker and the Treasurer, will amount to $4500, or about 0.75% of the budget.

Parking Council Seeks Views

In the two weeks preceding the spring semester break, the Transportation and Parking Council has been reviewing, with the Parking Office, the proposed parking and traffic regulations for the UMass Amherst campus. The review process is scheduled for completion on April 7th. The rules and regulations will then be submitted for adoption by the Board of Trustees.

As a University oriented group, the Transportation and Parking Council desires to hear the comments and suggestions of all interested members of the university community. Copies of the proposal that were submitted to the Transportation and Parking Council will be available at Daily Collegian distribution points in the Student Union and Campus Center. Comments on the proposed rules should be directed to Mr. Carl Broekhuizen, Graduate School, Graduate Research Center.

Several revisions in the regulations have been recommended by the Council. The major thrust of the changes involve identification of the responsibilities of the university and the application of the rules to all members of the university community in a uniform manner.

Recommendations for changes include the addition of a section detailing the disposition of traffic and parking violations, the specification of the responsibilities of snow and ice removal agencies prior to towing parked cars, the merging of sections 3 and 4 in Article VII, and the elimination of section 4 from Article VIII.

Candidate Refuses Press Interview

By JAMES E. GOLD

Citing improper protocol, Timothy Healy, Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs at City University of New York, refused last week to make any statements to the press about himself or his recently publicized consideration for Chancellorship at the UMass-Amherst Campus. Hearings for all three have been scheduled for April 5.

"Until the Trustees or the President or whoever has the authority offers me the job, I have nothing to say to anybody," he stated in a telephone interview. "I will talk to no one," he added.

Also being considered along with Healy are Acting-Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Carlo L. Golino, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs at the University of California at Riverside.

When asked about Healy and his silence, University Secretary Robert McCartney said in a telephone interview that Healy was probably just trying "to play it cool." McCartney said Healy replied positively to an invitation to come here. "We're inviting all of them" so that the Trustees can give full consideration to each candidate. "He'd be glad to come" McCartney said Healy told him.

McCartney said that Healy's educational background includes parochial schools in New York, and A.B., M.A., and Ph. L. from Woodstock College in Maryland. Also, Healy holds an M.A. from Fordham and a Ph. D. from Oxford, he said.

Besides being Vice-Chancellor, Healy is also a professor of English and is on the graduate faculty at CUNY, according to McCartney. He has been at CUNY since 1969, he added.

Forty-eight year old Healy speaks French and Spanish and reads several other languages, also, McCartney said.

"Healy achieved the rank of Captain in the military" and has also served as Executive Vice-President of Fordham University, said McCartney.

Healy has also taught courses in Chaucer, Shakespeare, and 18th Century Literature, he said. Healy also held fellowships from Danforth, American Philosophical Society, and American Council for a Learned Society, said McCartney.

Counsel Calls Davis Best In The Courtroom

Angela Davis and her co-counsel, Howard Moore, arrive at the Santa Clara County courthouse where she is defending herself. (AP Wirephoto)

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Angela Davis, black militant, philosophy scholar and former university teacher, has turned to law-and has assumed a major role in presenting her own defense.

Miss Davis is acting as co-counsel in her trial on murder, kidnap and conspiracy charges. Chief defense attorney Howard Moore, Jr., calls her "the best lawyer in the courtroom."

Moore says she schooled herself in law while awaiting trial.

"She studied with me for 16 months," Moore said in an interview. "I didn't give her too many books to read. Mostly we just had discussions...she catches on real fast."

Since her trial opened one month ago, Miss Davis has handled portions of jury selection, announced acceptance of the jury and a dramatic highlight, delivered her own opening statement.

Moore said she may soon try cross-examining some witnesses in the current prosecution phase of the case.

The trail resumes Monday with the next prosecution witness scheduled to be the district attorney who was injured in the Marin County Civic Center shootout in which Miss Davis is charged.

Miss Davis, once a teacher at UCLA, incorporates classroom style in her courtroom delivery. Soft-spoken and solemn, she peers at jurors through spectacles, stands before a lectern and begins:

"Members of the jury..."

Then, intermingled with declarations of her innocence and denials of prosecution charges, she sets down legal points.

"We ask you to keep you eyes focused on two essential points," she told jurors, "...knowledge and intent...you must continue to seek out in the huge maze of evidence that will be presented in coming months whether I had foreknowledge of the events and any specific intent to participate in them."

Miss Davis, 28, is charged in connection with the shootout two years ago in which a judge and three blacks were killed.

The prosecutor, in his opening statement, warned jurors not to judge Miss Davis by her scholarly demeanor. She has studied at the Sorbonne, Germany's Goethe University, Brandeis University and the University of California.

Schools May Lose By Residency Law

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Public colleges and universities across the nation face the possible loss of hundreds of millions of dollars in tuition revenue as the result of students winning the right to vote where they go to school.

State-supported schools charge students from other states substantially higher tuition than resident students. The legality of out-of-state tuition now has been challenged in three court cases on the grounds that the right to register and vote in the campus community makes students residents of the state.

At stake is an estimated $200 to $400 million collected each year by state schools in out-of-state tuition.

State officials and educators contacted in an Associated Press survey said that without that money, the state schools would have to raise tuition for resident students or seek more money from the state's taxpayers and the federal government.

Although officials in most states said they would fight to preserve out-of-state tuition, many educators predicted out-of-state tuition would not exist in two or three years.

"The trend is definitely in the direction of eliminating out-of-state tuition," said Ralph K. Huitt, executive director of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, which represents publicly- supported schools in all 50 states.

"The trend in the court cases is all in the direction of allowing the student to establish residency in the state for all purposes at the age of 18," said Huitt. "Once he becomes a resident, out-of-state tuition is out by definition."

Out-of-state tuition will produce $20 million this year in Colorado, where residents pay $423 a year and non- residents $1,691 to attend the state university.

There are few states, if any, that do not derive at least $1 million a year from out-of-state tuition.

Suits challenging out-of-state tuition have been filed in Arizona, Michigan and Maryland by students originally from other states. All argued that the right to vote is sufficient to establish residency and that university officials cannot force people who register in the state to pay non-resident tuition.

In the Arizona case, seven university students won the first round when a Superior Court judge ruled that the state could not establish arbitrary standards for determining residency. The ruling was upheld in a state appellate court and the case is now pending before the State Supreme Court. No rulings have been issued in the Michigan and Maryland cases.

Officials in other states are aware of the challenge raised to out-of-state tuition. While some said their rules would stand up in court, many acknowledged the vulnerability of out-of-state tuition.

School officials and legislators around the country cited several reasons for preserving out-of-state tuition: It would be unfair to ask the taxpayers to pay for educating people from other states. Dropping out-of-state tution would bring a flood of outsiders. The lost revenue would hurt the schools, unless it was made up by higher taxes or higher tuition for students raised in the state.

Viet Troops Retreat From Enemy Assault

SAIGON (AP) — North Vietnamese trooops and armor pushing across the demilitarized zone into South Vietnam's northernmost province crushed three more bases Sunday and sent hundreds of government troops retreating in disarray.

Four American aircraft were reported shot down while supporting the defenders.

The U.S. Command said nearly a score of American fighter-bombers grounded for days by bad flying weather-struck inside North Vietnam against antiaircraft defenses. Sources said more heavy raids were being planned against the north in retaliation for the biggest enemy offensive since the 1968 Tet campaign.

Eight U.S. Crewmen were reported missing in the air losses over the embattled area south of the DMZ.

The South Vietnamese rushed 8,000 to 10,000 reinforcements north to aid the battered 3rd Division, pushed back 10 miles from the DMZ.

President Nguyen Van Thieu cancelled a speech to the National Assembly's lower house.

He was reported heading north to Da Nang and Hue to meet with military commanders.

Sources said Thieu told house leaders the situation was very serious.

The U.S. Command said half a dozen North Vietnamese sites inside and to the north of the demilitarized zone and in Laos unleashed barrages of surface-to-air missiles at American fighter-bombers supporting South Vietnamese troops. Four of the SAMS were fired across the DMZ, a spokesman said.

Busing Proposal Meets Stiff Opposition

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's school-busing proposals are meeting stiff opposition in public hearings in both the Senate and House, but it is not yet clear what their final fate will be.

Leaders in both branches have said they would like to solve the problem by shelving the Nixon measures and adopting instead antibusing provisions tied to a higher-education bill now in a Senate-House conference.

This could avoid further bitter floor fights sure to erupt if the President's bills are reported out of committees.

But it is not certain such fights can be prevented even if the measures are bottled up in the committees.

Foes of busing in both the House and Senate are saying that, if the bills are shelved, they will offer the provisions as floor amendments to other legislation.

The major Nixon bill contains strong restrictions on any further court busing orders and also would reallocate $2.5 billion of federal funds already acted on by Congress to try to improve education in poor schools, largely those with substantial numbers of black children.

This measure was referred to the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee and the House Education and Labor Committee.

Both panels have held several days of hearings and not a single witness has supported the bill except the administration spokesman, Elliot L. Richardson, secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

Opposition witnesses have included blacks and whites, members of Congress, officials of civil-rights and education organizations, spokesmen for women's groups, and labor representatives.

Some of these have heatedly denounced the proposals, declaring that the President is trying to stop the desegregation movement and turn back the clock to the doctrine of separate-but-equal schools.

Sen. Peter H. Dominick, R-Colo., sponsor of the measure in his branch, just as strongly denies this allegation. He says the bill will not even stop all busing and is not designed to do so.

Sen. Claiborne Pell, D-R.I., chairman of the subcommittee conducting the hearings on the Senate side, has told the witnesses he doubts they represent the sentiment of the country.

"All of these organizations support busing," he said, "but I am afraid the majority of the people who have expressed themselves on this issue are against it."

Based on past performance, the members of the House and Senate panels will not approve the bill. Most of the members have taken the position busing is a proper remedy where essential to carry out a desegregation program and where it is not so lengthy as to harm the children involved.

Both Pell and Rep. Carl D. Perkins, D-Ky., chairman of the House Committee, assert that the real answer is more money to improve poor schools and end the serious inequalities that now exist.

They emphasize that Nixon did not ask for any new funds. Both have introduced resolutions to make available $2.5 billion of additional money which would be concentrated on the most needy schools.

But Dominick insists there is little chance the Appropriations Committees will vote any such sum.

House Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla., Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana and Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania all have said they believe Nixon's proposals can be handled as a part of the higher-education legislation.

Antibusing riders were added to his measure in both branches but they do not go as far as the president wants.

His second bill, referred to the Judiciary Committees, would impose a year's moratorium on further busing orders. One of the amendments to the higher-education bill could be construed as a form of moratorium.

Air Force Rescues "Lucky Lindy"

TASADAY FOREST, Philippines (AP) — Charles A. Lindbergh and the Philippine expedition that found the Stone Age Tasaday band living in caves, clambered aboard a hovering U.S. Air Force helicopter Sunday and were lifted safely out of this southern Philippines rain forest.

The 70-year-old Lindbergh, smiling broadly and wearing a floppy white hat and climbing boots, said, "We were in no danger but we were stranded and running low on food. The Air Force did an excellent job."

The Air Force came in after the expedition's own helicopter broke down. The 47-member expedition was delivered to a base camp, and then Lindbergh flew with the rescue aircraft to Clark Air Base, some 600 miles north, near Manila. A retired general, the white-haired flier wanted to personally express his appreciation and that of the expedition.

It was conducted by Panamin, a foundation for assisting Philippine minorities, and was led by Panamin's president, Manuel Elizalde, Jr., 36.

The unexpected method of departure marked the end of an 11-day expedition which anthropologists here claim is of major scientific importance.

The Tasadays, who number only 24 persons, were found March 23 at their 4,000-foot-high homesite in this jungled mountain-the first discovery of living cavemen in modern times.

After gathering anthropoligcal data and pinpointing the living-working area of the Tasadays-so the region can be protected from exploiters of the forest-the expedition was preparing to break camp. But a radio message disclosed that Panamin's helicopter had developed a serious malfunction. Food was running low and the hike to the base camp- some 50 miles away through steep mountains-was estimated to take from eight to 10 days.

Elizalde radioed for assistance and U.S. Ambassador Henry Byroade and the Air Force responded promptly.

Elizalde and Lindbergh, who had been scheduled to leave the forest Saturday, visited the Tasadays shortly after dawn and said goodbye. Elizalde urged the people, who say their ancestors have always lived in these caves, to continue their way of life in the forest and assured them he would return soon. The Tasadays consider Elizalde a god and had pleaded with him to stay with them forever.

The expedition's camp was struck and the members trekked an hour to where trees had been cleared for the Air Force helicopter to land.

Too Sick For Congress Well Enough For T.V.

NEW YORK (AP) — Lobbyist Dita Beard, diagnosed as too ill to testify before a Senate subcommittee, checked herself out of a Denver hospital Saturday for a television interview in which she said Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., thought of the International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. as "a sort of personal taxicab company."

Mrs. Beard, 53, hospitalized with a heart ailment since March 3, taped the interview with Mike Wallace at an undisclosed location in Denver. CBS broadcast it on the "60 Minutes" show Sunday evening.

Don Hewitt, executive producer of "60 Minutes," said Mrs. Beard plans to check out of the hospital for good on Tuesday and would recuperate at the place where Sunday's interview was filmed. Hewitt said Mrs. Beard asked that the locale, about 20 minutes by car from the hospital, not be disclosed.

After 90 minutes she returned to the hospital.

Last Sunday, Mrs. Beard collapsed while testifying from her hospital bed to a Senate subcommittee. Her doctors said she might never be able to testify again.

The senators, considering President Nixon's nomination of Richard Kleindienst as attorney general, are investigating reports that Mrs. Beard linked an ITT contribution to the GOP National Convention with an out-of-court settlement of anti-trust suits against ITT.

Hussein Sees Jerusalem Capitals

WASHINGTON (AP) — King Hussein of Jordan suggested Sunday that the Arab part of Jerusalem should be the capital of Palestinians, while Israel should keep its capital in the other part of the city.

Two capitals in one city "is a possibility that we think of seriously," the king said.

He gave his views on the NBC TV-radio program "Meet the Press." The interview was taped before Hussein was admitted to Walter Reed Army Hospital on Thursday for a medical check-up.

Jerusalem should be an open city, Hussein said. Recognition that there is a Palestinian part of the city "is a must," he said, and added "following that, we are open-minded to anything and everything that would make Jerusalem the meeting place of all...I believe that Jerusalem belongs to Abraham, Jesus and Mohammed."

Recalling that prior to the 1967 war, the seat of the Israeli government was in Jerusalem, Hussein said, "I do not see why the Arab part of the city should not also house the government seat of the Palestinian province ...As for administration, there are many ways, and we are open-minded. Jointly, separately, there could be ways and means."

Hussein said again that the Arabs are not ready to go to war against Israel.

"I do not believe that the Arab strength is a match to the Israelis at this time," he said.

He said also:

—On his plan to transform his kingdom into a federal state, it "puts the problem of the people of Palestine in the proper context. They are yearning to have their identity, to come together on the land of Palestine, and the plan offers opportunity to the world, the Israelis included, to redress the wrongs committed against them and to begin an era of lasting peace."

—Not the Arabs, but Israel is raising pre-conditions to peace talks.

—On relations with Egypt, "Unfortunately, we are not coordinating as we used to with our friends in Egypt."

—That he is convinced Palestinians were forced by the Israelis to go the polls in the West Bank.

Wholesale Meat Prices Decline Attributed To Nixon's Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz predicted Sunday that the Nixon administration will not impose stiffer controls on food prices.

Butz said he was making the prediction because "I think something was done" by the administration to curb the rise in meat prices. He cited Treasury Secretary John Connally's meeting with supermarket executives.

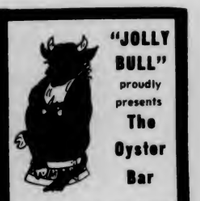
Butz and Labor Secretary James Hodgson appeared together on ABC's TV -radio program "Issues and Answers."

President Nixon indicated at a recent news conference that the administration would have to ct unless food prices, particularly meat prices, did not decline.

Since then, wholesale meat prices have declined and two major food chains announced a cut in meat prices last week.

Hodgson was somewhat more cautious than Butz when asked whether new controls would be imposed.

"The retailers are committed now to bringing prices down and it is up to them to produce on their commitment," he said.



Hodgson said, however, that he believes the crisis on food prices is over "for the present."

Hodgson also said the Price Commission is working on few regulations to prevent companies from collecting windfall profits from pay increases cut back by the Pay Board.

AFL-CIO President George Meany, who resigned from the Pay Board last month, has suggested that companies be required to pass such savings along to consumers in the form of price cuts.

Protest English In Ireland

On Friday, March 17th over 100,000 people marched up New York's Fifth Avenue from 44th Street to 86th., in the annual St. Patrick's Day Parade. The Parade was made up of a large number of marching bands--most of them from Catholic high schools in the area--and contingents of Irish, or at least Catholic, firemen, policemen and just plain people.

Only the National Association for Irish Freedom and their supporters bordered on the militant. They chanted and raised fists, even as they passed by Cardinal Cooke, who was reviewing the parade from the steps of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

The NAIF and the Irish Republican Clubs were well received by the spectators, who lined the Avenue, sometimes 5 and 6 deep, to watch the parade.

The Weather

By LARRY HURWITZ

It will be partly cloudy today with the high near forty. Winds will be from the north at fifteen to twenty miles per hour. Skies will be clear tonight with the low in the twenties. Tuesday will be fair with the temperature near forty. There's a good chance of rain on Tuesday. That's the weather and you can't do a damn thing about it. Sort of like the MDC.

Suddenly Last Week...

While UMass students had last week off, much of the rest of the world kept on coming to an end. Bombs kept blowing up downtown Belfast buildings, Students for a Democratic Society held workshops at Harvard, North Vietnamese troops moved the northern border of South Vietnam ten miles south, and candidates kept campaigning for votes in the coming Wisconsin primary. Here, in a little more detail, are some of last week's other highlights.

FIREWORKS PLANT EXPLODES

A fireworks plant in Bridgewater blew up killing at least three persons and injuring upwards of eleven others. The explosion left thousands of unexploded aerial bombs scattered in nearby wooded areas. Many of these in the immediate area of the plant were bulldozed underground this weekend.

State Fire Marshall Joseph G. Sneider criticized the methods used in handling gunpowder at the plant, the last fireworks plant in the state.

SOME TUITION CHARGES RISE

The Board of Trustees accepted a tuition increase plan offered by UMass President Robert C. Wood. The plan calls for a two-year period of increases for all graduate students and all out-of-state undergraduate students. The new schedule is as follows: --Undergraduates from out of state will pay $250 more for the '72-'73 academic year for a total of $850; another $250 increase will hit them for the '73-'74 academic year when they will pay a total of $1100.
--In-state graduate students will pay an additional $125 for the academic year '72-'73, or a total of $325. They will pay another $125 increase for the academic year '73-'74, or a total of $450.
--Graduate students from out of state will face a $300 increase for '72-'73, or a total of $600. Another $300 rise for '73-'74 wil have them pay $900.

Neil Giroux, Springfield Daily News State House writer said that the legislature in Boston will probably not raise undergraduate tuition at any of the state colleges or universities.

BERLIN WALL OPENED

East Germany opened the Berlin Wall so that West Germans could visit friends and relatives in the East during the Easter holiday. The move was seen as backed by the Soviet Union by some sources in the administration.

BU INCIDENTS SPARK SPATS

After 33 anti-war demonstrators were arrested during a military recruitment protest at Boston University last week, students there voted to strike April 5 in further protest. Meanwhile, the Boston press has played up University president John R. Silber's handling of the situation. Silver told the first group of demonstrators that they would face arrest if the demonstration was not broken up. It wasn't, until police came. Silber said in a Record American interview that he will do whatever is necessary to keep BU open on Friday. While claiming that he will avoid calling police, "we will definitely not permit illegal activity on campus."

SOLEDAD BROTHERS CLEARED

An all-white jury found Soledad Brothers Fleeta Drumgo and John Clutchette, both blacks, innocent in charges of murder of prison guard John Mills.

John Callahan, one of the jurors, claimed that "Everybody who testified against them was bought" by the prosecution.

MEAT FOOD PRICES MAY DROP

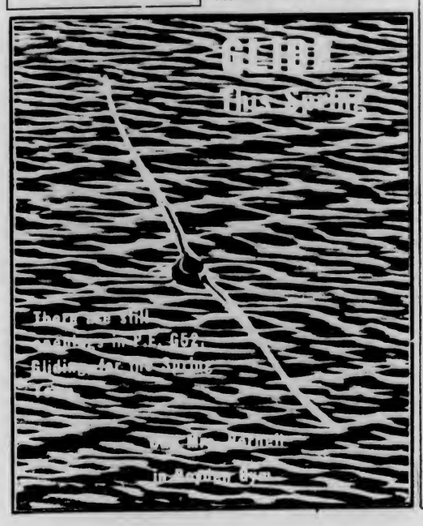
After meeting with Treasury Secretary John Connally, executives from large national food chains claimed that meat prices will be dropping during the next few weeks.

William Mitchell, President of Safeway Stores, said that prices will drop because of dropping beef prices, not because of governmental meetings.

NOTCH LAND AVAILABLE

The former communications center for the Eighth Air Froce, located mostly underground on mountain top land in the Notch to the south of Amherst, became available to the state last week. UMass, the town of Amherst and the State Civil Defense have all expressed some interest in the land. The original facilty cost the government $3.46 million.

Keithley To Read Poetry



Tonight at 8:00 P.M. in Thompson 102 author George Keithley will read from his new and critically acclaimed work: The Donner Party. The work is in the form of a narrative poem. Mr. Keithley's reading is being sponsored by the MFA Program in English.

In the early spring of 1846, a group of families from the farm country outside of Springfield, Illinois, set out by wagon train for California. The Donner Party, as it came to be known, is now remembered chiefly for the suffering and cannibalism which resulted when the group was trapped in the snow in the Sierras, without provisions for the winter.

Six years ago, California poet Keithley began writing what he thought would be a short poem about the ill-fated expedition. But as he wrote, they story grew on him, the men and women involved in the tragedy took shape in his imagination, and before he was through he had completed an acclaimed work of 5000 lines.

Crabtree Houses Vacation Residents

The use of Crabtree House, a Northeast area dormitory, during the spring vacation was the uneventful fulfillment of an arrangement between the former residents of Hamlin House and the Housing Office.

Last spring the residents of Hamlin House had voted to go co-ed when they were informed of its upcoming renovation. This prompted the transfer of residents to Crabtree House, a neighbor in the Quad.

Chris Graham, a resident of Crabtree explained that the dorm had voted last semester to maintain the present arrangement since they preferred Crabtree's location and porch. In concession, they agreed to house students, mostly foreign students and student teachers, during the spring vacation. Area Coordinator Steve Dimock said that Hamlin House had been used during the previous vacations this year.

"Previously the board paid by students to the Housing Office was assumed not to include these vacations," Dimock continued. "This gave the Heads of Residence some time to take off, while the dorms could be used for conferences. Because of the new Campus Center this is no longer necessary."

Dimock stressed the unpopularity of the practice of using students' rooms during vacations, and foresaw the maintainance of permanent vacancies in certain dorms as the only promising alternative. As for Hamlin House, he projected its use as an international house.

The vacation residents, Dimock explained, are responsible for working out their own security measures. Several of last week's residents of Crabtree stated that they had felt safe with just a night receptionist.

Proposed Bill Would Help Small Parties

By BARRY STAVRO

A bill designed to aid small political parties on campus will be introduced to the Student Senate in May.

In an MDC interview, co-author of "The Partisan Political Parties Act," Student Senator Bill Spinn said that he hopes the bill will eliminate some of the confusion of introducing legislation and running candidates from small organizations on campus. He also hopes it will make the Senate more responsive to the needs of the student body.

Spinn said the bill is for "people who don't have any output."

Consequently, Spinn said, "No active off-campus political parties" will be aided by this bill. For example, the Democratic and Republican parties, S.D.S., and the American Independent Party, as active national parties will not be allowed to make use of the bill's services.

This bill groups all small political organizations on campus together so that as a whole they can caucus, lobby and introduce legislation with some union of strength.

Spinn said this group of parties and organizations will be an R.S.O. organization but must register themselves yearly with the Chairman of Governmental Affairs Committee.

Unnatural Acts

Wednesday night's Student Senate meeting will be the last chance for UMass students to be guaranteed an Index for next academic year. This is when their one dollar budget comes to the senators for approval, rejection, or amendments.

Index, the UMass yearbook, sums up a year's events in words and pictures. Their plans for next year call for a three volume book which would cost each student only two dollars on the Student Activities Tax. Is this so unreasonable?

What do we have for memories when we graduate or leave? Newspaper clippings from the Collegian? Tape recordings of WMUA or WFCR? A yearbook lasts a lifetime. It is something which for two dollars we can always look back upon and remember our days at UMass-both good and bad days.

We urge the Senate to amend the recommended one dollar budget of the yearbook so as to enable the publication of something which each student will be able to keep for the rest of his or her life. It will be something permanent, a part of UMass which will follow the students always after graduation.

The Student Senate will probably make its decision Wednesday night. Because each senator is responsible to his or her constituency, student opinion could sway the vote. We ask students to tell their senators how they feel about a yearbook. A school year without a yearbook is very unnatural.

A Case Of Either-Or

Gov. Sargent's reappointment of Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt raises serious doubts concerning the Governor's responsibility toward the mentally retarded in Massachusetts. The inhumane conditions at the Belchertown State School and the Monson State Hospital stand as clear reflections of Greenblatt's incompetent administration.

People, who may be wondering why 28 parents of Belchertown residents took their case for reform out of the state system and into the federal court system, now have their answer. Gov. Sargent's action Friday clearly illustrates the fact that Massachusetts has not only refused to work for reform in the past, but would follow the same policy in the future, if not for an outside pressure, the federal government.

The class-action suit charges that the State Department of Mental Health has been negligent in the care of residents at the school. UMass Professor Ben Ricci, president of the Belchertown Friends Association and the leading organizer of the suit had some welcome words for the supporters of the suit. Ricci said yesterday that Sargent's action will "make us all the more determined to remain in the courts to bring about change" for all the institutions for the retarded in the state.

Complaints against the Greenblatt administration have not been restricted to a minority of concerned citizens. The joint legislative commission studying the Belchertown State School stated in their March, 1971, report: "We are totally dissatisfied with the manner in which Belchertown is being administered. We are deeply impressed by the Department's (Mental Health) indifference to change." In fact, the chairmen of the commission, Sen. Phillip Quinn and Rep. Alexander Lolas in early February of this year, wrote to Gov. Sargent asking for Greenblatt's immediate removal.

It is unfortunate that in the game of politics in Massachusetts, the men who deserve to be fired are instead promoted or retained in their present positions. It is interesting that Dr. M. Phillip Wakstein, former regional administrator for the Department of Mental Health was fired from his position by Greenblatt for assisting in the exposing of the conditions at Belchertown. It is obvious why change at other institutions for the retarded has been limited. The commission stated in their report: "The Department's justification for outright dismissal of the Regional Administrator is of such a poor nature and scope that it could be applicable to most other Departmental officials responsible for conditions at Belchertown.

Fortunately for the retarded in Massachusetts, Wakstein has continued to level his attacks against the policies of the Greenblatt administration. On the wake of the Greenblatt reappointment, Wakstein, in the Springfield Union, said that the appointment "will only serve to further injure the cause of mental retardation. It is an expression of continuing insensitivity to the plight of the retarded, particularly in Western Massachusetts. The system is more recalcitrant to the needs of the people it serves than ever. This is reinforcement."

When the Governor spoke at UMass on March 8, he promised the audience that he would visit the Belchertown State School within 30 days. April 8 is right around the corner, and the odds are that Sargent will not meet the deadline. If the Governor had made his trip to Belchertown, he would have been capable of making a personal judgement on Greenblatt's four-year term as Mental Health commissioner. The conditons at Belchertown and Monson are for the most part, not fit for human beings. Someone should be held responsible for these conditions, and that man should be the commissioner. Quinn and Lolas in their letter to the Governor said, "We now conclude that the Department of Mental Health and the commissioner are directly responsible for the negligent and totally unsatisfactory care presently provided the residents of these institutions."

Last Friday was indeed a sad day for the concerned citizens of Massachusetts, who must now do the job that Greenblatt is getting paid $40,906 a year to do. That is, unless the retarded are going to continue to be forced to live in inhumane and unjust conditions which presently mark our state institutions.

Notes On Lobbyist Memos

WASHINGTON–The one thing that hasn't been emphasized in the ITT Senate Judiciary Committee hearings is the fact that lobbyists in Washington tend to take credit for a lot of things they are not responsible for. They do this through memos to their bosses. Anyone who has been in Washington for any length of time knows lobbyists are notorious for exaggerating the roles they have played in legislation and government decisions.

Here are three examples of memorandums that even Jack Anderson has never seen:

TO: Harley Brace, Vice President, Croakly Products, Inc.
FROM: Stanley Fixer
SUBJECT: Zipper Price-Fixing Suit
Dear Harley:

Just came back from lunch with all the Supreme Court justices. It looks as if we're going to get an affirmative decision on our zipper case. I told Warren Burger it was an outrage that Croakly had been selected as the scapegoat in zipper price fixing, and it was obvious that someone in Justice was trying to drive us out of the zipper business.

Byron White, Bill Douglas and Bill Brennan were very sympathetic to our cause and I got the feeling Potter Stewart and Bill Rehnquist felt there was more to the case than what they had heard in the arguments. Thurgood Marshall and Harry Blackman use our zippers so we shouldn't have any trouble with them.

Tell the chief we're home free and he doesn't have to go to the White House with this one. The lunch cost $165 which I'll put down as taxi fare so there won't be a stink. By the way, Harley, destroy this memo, huh?

The second one was marked "personal and confidential"

TO: Cal Winkleman, IOU Industries
FROM: Bear Goldfinger, Washington office
SUBJECT: Busing
Cal, baby:

Just came from a bowling game at Camp David with Dick and Pat and Tricia and Bebe. I spoke to Dick about his busing moratorium message. I pointed out as diplomatically as possible that if he did away with school busing, IOU Industries might have to shut down its school bus manufacturing division in San Diego, which happens to be his lucky city. I said if he does away with busing he will do away with 1,500 jobs in Southern California.

Dick said he had been so caught up in the emotional issues of busing that he hadn't given much thought to the companies which make school buses. He indicated he might work out a compromise. He still would do away with forced busing but would order the Defense Department to use school buses to take our troops to the front.

I believe it's okay to send the check to the San Diego convention committee, as we got what we wanted. By the way, Cal, please destroy this memo, huh?

The final one read as follows:

TO: Roscoe Mulligan, Vice President, Worldwide Telephone Answering Service, Inc.
FROM: Daphne Sears
SUBJECT: Phase 2
Dear Roscoe:

I can't understand why New York keeps calling people at the White House about getting permission to raise our answering service rates by 25%. I told you that I was working on it. I'm meeting with the entire Cabinet tomorrow and will state our case.

I had exploratory talks with John Connally at a barbecue and he indicated he had no objection to the raise. Also, I met Martha Mitchell at a PTA meeting the other night and she said she was going to speak to her husband about our problem.

Richard Kleindienst was over for breakfast the other morning and said as far as he's concerned there won't be any legal difficulties.

But this thing has to be kept under wraps or the Democrats will try to make political hay with it. Tell Hal (President of Worldwide) to stop biting his nails and get out his checkbook.

By the time you receive this I'll be on my way to Hialeah Race Track to talk to Agnew. Wish me luck. And Roscoe, please destroy this memo, huh?

White Shadows

White shadows, falling from a slowly blackening wall.
Awaiting the disappearance of the burrowed nightfall,
the far off light, cast softly,
upon the shadow of your ignorance.
The shadow soon becomes a shiver, upon the mirror, the reflector,

Just as daylight bursts upon you,

Why have you kissed the stars goodnight?

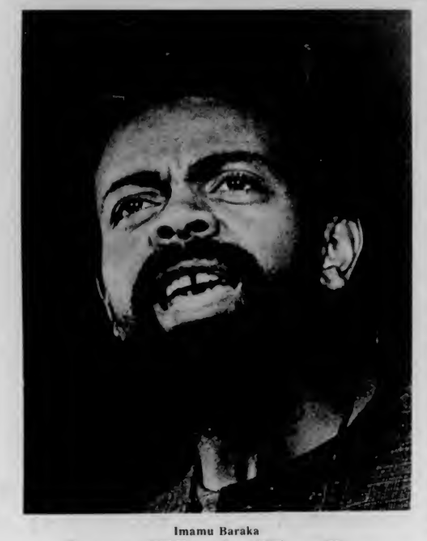
I Heard A Cherub Sing

I heard a cherub sing of the forgotten dawn.
Forgotten, forgotten it was; the saints
And sinners passed by, the tainted lawn
Held dew, and, like a woman who faints
At the sight of a mouse, the fallen angels swooned.
Personification held its place.
The insane dervishes, freed from the unmooned
Sky, lent color to the evening that stars could not erase.
The cloaked dew, struck with paint,
Painted a canvas on which reveled
Each omnipresent, cherubic saint.
Stars passed, and the sequestered time throughout held.



I heard a cherub sing of the forgotten dew.
Lions and bears roamed throughout,
The lonely stars twinkled. A splendid caribou
Walked through the painted lawn, and with a shout
Raised its splendid head.
A naked Amazon with bobbing breasts
Rose up from her enamoured bed
And found a tree where my true love rests,
Covered her toes with a speckled cloth,
And played the wanton Lesbian.
I could not see; the froth
From the rain was lively, and not at all pedestrian.

I heard a cherub sing of the forgotten time.
All men at times are liars; they sing
Of time forgotten, and try to climb
The rotten boughs their anonymities bring.
I am a man like that; I truly try
To remember that white December
When you let my soul die,
Burnt to a stolid ember.
I heard a cherub sing, and this sad fact
Did awaken the vesperal urge in me.
I heard a cherub sing of love intact,
Of try love within true, good proximity.

Last Week To Get Housing Exemptions

Students are required by University regulations to live in University housing unless exempted by being in at least one of the following categories:

1. Married
2. Seniors as of the beginning of the 1972 fall term.
3. Commuters from the home of parents (not more than 40 miles).

In addition, students who will become 21 during the 1972-73 school year may apply for exemption.

Under Extreme Circumstances, other students not included above, may request permission to live off campus. All requests are to be initiated with the appropriate Director of the Area in which the student currently resides.

As room drawing will take place the week of April 17, 1972, for the Fall term assignments, students wishing to be considered for special exemption must pick up applications this week, April 3-7, at their Area Director's Office, obtain the required support materials, and return them to the Area Director's Office by 12 noon, April 10, 1972. Each request will be evaluated by the Area Staff and the student will be notified of the decision on his request prior to the start of room drawing, April 17, 1972.

This will be the only opportunity for currently enrolled students to request exemption for the Fall semester 1972. Requests received after April 10, 1972, will not be considered for Fall term exemptions.

Baraka To Speak On King

In Revolution, "what you're dealing with is not fantasy, but disciplined struggle". These are the words of Imamu Baraka, brilliant Black nationalist who will be speaking as part of the Martin Luther King, Jr., Memorial Lecture Series (see schedule, p. 14). His talk will be in the Campus Center Auditorium on Tuesday, April 4th at 8 p.m.

Imamu Baraka has called on serious revolutionaries to develop cadres which would move to unify all segments of the Black community behind a program of politically controlling the space the African community occupies.

This is what Baraka and his cadre, Committee for A Unified New Ark, have been doing in New Jersey in a serious, dedicated and organized manner. This cadre has effectively worked on the problems of the white dominated school system in a city which is predominantly Black, attacking white teachers as surgeons who, "dig hunks of Black matter out of our children's heads...." On a national level, the cadre was recently an important factor in the successful Black Political Convention.

Imamu Baraka is also a well known poet and playwright. His national fame was highlighted in 1964 when his play Dutchman won many awards. His articulate poems have enlightened Black people and shocked whites. By traditional standards, he would also be considered extremely educated having done graduate work at Columbia University and The New School. He has taught poetry, drama and literature and has put his education to use in both a political and cultural sense.

The topic of his lecture is "The Civil Rights Movement--Dr. King, and the Present Black Struggle." It is free and the public is invited.

Businessmen To Find Trade With China Frustrating

WASHINGTON (AP) — American businessmen who expected to attend the spring Canton trade fair can expect some strange and sometimes aggravating experiences in efforts to open trade with the People's Republic of China, a specialist in the field said Sunday.

A few individuals are expected to be invited to the fair opening April 15 and a larger number is likely to be going to the same fair next October.

Dr. Stanley Lubman, of the University of California at Berkeley, has been traveling for two years talking to businessmen, bankers, and diplomats of Western Europe, Japan and Hong Kong who have had experience in doing business with mainland China. He summed up his findings like this:

"People come back frazzled and frayed."

Americans going to Canton are likely to find no apparent interest in American products, he said in an interview.

The Chinese are interested in exports-not imports-at Canton. Americans probably will find themselves played off against their British, French, German and Japanese competitors, Lubman predicted.

And they probably will be surprised by the isolation they find themselves in. Chinese traders talk politely and listen carefully to a business proposal and then say to the foreign salesman, "Why don't you go back to your hotel-we will call you."

There may be a wait of 10 days or more for a call that does not come. Some French traders have speeded up a reply by making inquiries at their hotel about the next plane out of Canton.

Lubman said the Chinese like a detailed price breakdown for equipment and commodities they are ordering. Americans will be faced by a meticulous inspection of goods, with the Chinese Commodity Inspection Bureau making the final examination.

He said that incoming goods may then sit on the wharf in open or only partially closed crates. Rust develops on machinery, for example, and a claim is then filed by the end user after its arrival.

Lubman said the Chinese are good on the quality controls they impose upon themselves on exports and expect the same control on imports. However, a recent load of furs from China arrived mildewed in Paris. French buyers took photographs and made elaborate tests, but the claim was not settled.

The Chinese are interested in commodities that also export technology. For example, International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. is reported interested in modernizing the Chinese telephone system. This would also involve training of Chinese technicians.

Other items that they are interested in include chemicals, pharmaceuticals, fertilizers, telecommunications equipment and transportation equipment of all kinds.

Lubman advises that the Chinese Communists probably would like to ease their import dependence on Japan by trading more with the Americans, British, French and Germans.

Food Services

Fake Fowl Fails

By BETSY PEET
AND JON SNOW

In a previous article for this column, we described a test which the Food Service Department was going to run on a new "meat substitute" product.

On Wednesday, March 22, the product test was held in Hampshire Commons South Lobby. Marie Cappadona, Manager of Marketing & Menu Services, and student assistants from the Food Services Marketing Department conducted what is called a "double blind" test. In the comparison of two chicken salads, neither test participants nor administrators were aware which plate, labeled A or B, was real chicken and which was a chicken substitute.

The objective of the test was to determine the degree of student acceptance of the chicken substitute. The substitute, or "food analog", is manufactured from spun soy bean protein.

Students were served two identical chicken salads and asked to rate each according to appearance, texture, tenderness, flavor, and overall eating quality. In scoring the test, a scale ranging from "dislike very much" (-3 points) to "like extremely" (+3 points) was used to evaluate those characteristics.

The real chicken sample labeled A received a score of 1.5 and the substitute labeled B received a 0.8. "Passing" was a 1.5. Therefore, the chicken analog was unacceptable according to the students' judgment. Best-liked was its appearance which was strikingly similar to that of the real chicken. However, when it came to texture, tenderness, flavor, and overall eating quality, the fake didn't fare quite as well. It received an average of 1.0, which meant that students liked it only slightly.

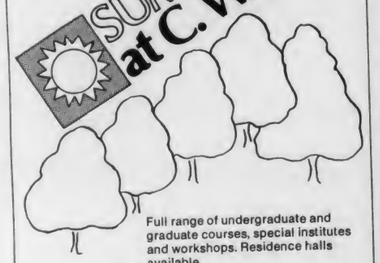
The "bird" won this contest but lost the battle. Food Services will probably hold off using the substitute until some improvements are made in flavor and texture. Since the chicken "analog" was not completely rejected and is palatable in casserole type dishes, users of Basic Foods Lines may be testing the product sometime in the near future.

Meanwhile, our fine feathered friends had better hold on to their necks...Food Services isn't ready yet to give up the real thing!

Astronomy Colloquium Today

Amherst, Mass.–

Amherst, Mass.–The physics and astronomy department has announced talks by three visiting astronomers.



A Physics and Astronomy Colloquium talk will be given today at 4:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 124 by Dr. Steven Musman of Sacramento Peak Observatory. He will talk on "Why Do Solar Granules Explode?"

A second talk in the same series will be given Wednesday, April 5, at 4:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 124 by Dr. W.B. Burton of the National Radio Astronomy Observatory. His talk will be "Galactic Structure Derived from Neutral Hydrogen Observations."

A Five College Astronomy Colloquium April 6 will bring Dr. Brian O'Leary of San Francisco State College to UMass to talk on "Occulations of Stars by Planets, Satellites and Asteroids." The talk is at 4:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 134.

All three are open to all interested persons without charge. Tea at 4 p.m. in Hasbrouck 22 will precede each talk.

UMass Receives $116,000 Grant

The UMass Institute for Government Services has been awarded a $116,000 state-federal grant to direct a statewide leadership training program for people in local government.

The Institute, directed by former State Senate President Maurice A. Donahue, operates a resource linking agency between the University and various local and state governmental agencies throughout the Commonwealth.

The Institute's new leadership training program is available to a wide range of town and city government persons such as mayors, selectmen, town managers, school committee members, board and commission members and many others.

The training will generally follow a workshop or conference format. It will be given by the University, state and community colleges and other public and private higher education institutions in the state.

Funds for the program are part of a $272,000 Intergovernmental Personnel Act grant to the Commonwealth from the U.S. Civil Service Commission. The initial period of the grant is ten months, with extensions possible for three or five year periods.

Nine major training areas will be available: contemporary social issues, recreation and open space management, public purchasing and contracts, home rule and charter revision, municipal law, in-house needs assessment for local government training, methods of evaluating local government programs, basic supervision and executive development.

O.C. Bobby Daniels has been named training coordinator for the program. Daniels, a former school principal, is a graduate of Lincoln University with an M.A. degree from the University of Chicago. He was a teacher and administrator in the Palm Beach, Fla., county school system for many years. In 1971 he became an assistant professor in educational administration at Florida Atlantic University, the first black person to hold such a post.

Dr. Arthur Eve, UMass associate professor of education and associate director of the Institute, will direct the overall administration of the project.

You Can Have "Nightmares"

Sweet Corn Theater Troupe will be presenting Assorted Shelters-or-Do You Have Nightmares When You Sleep On Your Back? on April 5,6 and 7 in the Campus Center Rm 163 at 8:15 p.m.

Sweet Corn gave theater workshops for non-performers twice a week at UMass and once a week at Amherst College all last semester. Sweet Corn has produced several short TV shows at Hampshire College and two plays for WFCR (5 college FM radio).

A few weeks ago WFCR aired a satire Sweet Corn produced as a pilot for a possible series entitled Suet. Sweet Corn is the only full time experimental theater group in western Massachusetts.

Assorted Shelters is an original satire on themes of violence, tyranny of sexual roles and dream states. It uses a minimum of props and costume; uses songs, dance and mime in a flowing blend of routines or scenes in which characters and situations are in constant change.

Admission is 1 dollar.

Small Pox Dying Out

Smallpox vaccinations are on their way out.

In the United States, Smallpox hasn't surfaced since the 1949 outbreak in the Rio Grande Valley. With the problem seemingly under control, the Public Health Service and the American Academy of Pediatrics recommended late last year that routine Smallpox vaccinations be halted throughout the nation.

This decision reflects not only the apparent control of the disease, but also the fact that chances of developing a reaction to the vaccine are greater for Americans than the chances of contracting the disease itself.

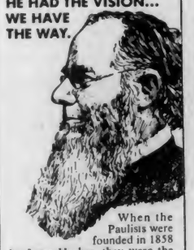
Although innoculations are being discontinued for most U.S. civilians, servicemen will still undergo the needling, because they might be going overseas. Other travelers also must be vaccinated if they are going to areas that may have cases of Smallpox. Whereas Smallpox was common in most nations a generation ago, 95% of the cases today are found in four countries - Ethiopia, the Sudan, India, and Pakistan.

Smallpox vaccinations are strongly recommended to students who will be travelling to other countries and do not have a definite destination in mind. If there is any chance that they will be travelling to areas that do have cases of Smallpox, or if they may be camping out in strange areas, a vaccination is a wise precaution.

The Health Services gives Smallpox vaccinations and other immunizations by appointment only. These may be made by calling the appointment desk, at 545-0057.

Questions may be addressed to the Health Education Division of the Health Services.

Anti-Pollution Spending May Double For Air



WASHINGTON (AP) — State and local spending to fight air pollution may just about double over the next three or four years to meet national air-quality standards, according to figures released Sunday by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Under the Clean Air Act of 1970, states had to submit by last Jan. 31 for federal approval their plans for achieving 1975 federal air-quality standards designed to protect public health, along with plans to achieve secondary standards protecting the environment in a reasonable time.

EPA reported Sunday that all states except Alaska have submitted implementation plans.

And most of them included estimates of their present clean-air spending compared with what they expect to be spending by 1975 or 1976.

HE HAD THE VISION... WE HAVE THE WAY.

When the Paulists were founded in 1858 by Isaac Hecker, they were the first religious Community of priests established in North America by an American and for Americans.

Father Hecker, who was a century ahead of his time, wanted Paulists to be free of compulsory activities so they could be flexible enough to meet the needs of the Church in every age as they arose.

Today's Paulist can be as involved as he wants to be. He is given the freedom to use his own talents to do his own thing. He may be a parish priest, an educator or a press, radio or television personality.

Father Hecker discovered the value of communications early. With his monthly publications and pamphlets, he laid the foundation for the Paulist/Newman Press, the country's largest publisher and distributor of Catholic literature.

Today, Father Hecker's vision and foresight have led to the establishment of Paulist radio, television and film centers on a scale that perhaps, not even he dreamed of.

But then, he had the vision. He showed us the way.

For more information on the Paulists, write to: Rev. Donald C. Campbell, Vocation Director, Room 500.

King Memorials This Week

Three events which should sharpen the understanding of Black people--their politics and their culture,-- will take place during the week of April 4-7.

The events will commemorate the death of Dr. Martin Luther King. The series is funded by the Distinguished Visitors Program with the help of Program Council and the Orchard Hill Area Government.

The events are:

Tuesday, April 4th--IMAMU BARAKA (LeRoi Jones) discusses the "Civil Rights Movement--Dr. King and the Present Black Struggle" - Campus Center Auditorium.

Wednesday, April 5th--BARRY GAITHER will show slides and discuss "New Dimensions in Black Social Art" - Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

Friday, April 7th--GEORGE HOWARD AND THE PRIMITIVE DANCE CO. will present "Black Roots"--African and West Indian folk dancing - Campus Center Auditorium.

All events begin at 8 p.m. and are free to the public.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Pisces can be reticent, shy on the outside, but strong on inner conviction. A classical Piscean is intuitive, sensitive, emotional and impressionable. Natives of this zodiacal sign are able to penetrate pretense. If has been said that living with a Pisces person is akin to living with a human lie detector. Some famous persons born under Pisces include Anais Nin, Elizabeth Taylor and Jackie Gleason.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Hold off on travel. Study long-range plans. There are revisions, loopholes. Relatives are cantankerous. You will have to finish what was left hanging. Don't rely on old procedures. It is time to trim the fat.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Financial picture may be somewhat muddled. You tend to forget your own worth. Key is to differentiate between what is useful, what is mere window trimming. Take care with valuables. Don't give up something for nothing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Play waiting game. Take special care with documents. Hold off on legal commitment. Observe and learn. Be analytical. Let others take initiative. You need proverbial second wind.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Loosen reigns of discipline. Give yourself chance to relax. Change routine. Break out of emotional rut. Chase gloom. Recognize any problems without brooding. Setback, if it occurs, is but temporary.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Lovers' dispute should not be built out of proportion. Settle differences in mature manner. Don't compound original mistakes by hurling accusations. Check facts. Slow pace. Control tendency to act on impulse.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What appeared a certainty may require additional review. Affects home, family and basic security. Snap decisions could be costly. Take time to be thorough. Domestic area is not exactly harmonious.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Relatives may act in disoriented manner. Be patient. Arguing now accomplishes nothing. Key is to be diplomatic, to put off journeys, to take special care with letters, calls, messages. Keep pace steady.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Money may seem to slip through your fingers. Get solid grasp of situation. Pisces could be involved. Take special care where investments are concerned. Facts require double-checking. Be realistic.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis on preserving marriage, partnership. Legal area is stormy. Build public relations program. Straighten out misunderstandings. Older individual may be well meaning but not fully informed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Finish rather than begin; complete project. Confidential matters may be made public. Stand aloof from deception. Be frank. If truthful, you emerge victorious. Trying to cover up would be error.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friendly differences should not be blown out of proportion. Be independent without being arrogant. Leo figures prominently. Respect views of others while holding fast to basic principles. Message will be clarified.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Conflict may exist between family duties and business necessities. Strive for balance. Scorpio associate could complain about financial arrangement. Avoid being petty. Make intelligent concession.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY You have sparkling sense of humor. You are versatile, but often draw to you individuals who "sing the blues." This year you make solid gains, but must handle additional responsibilities. The month of September will be your most significant of 1972.

'Master Politician' Survives

The political fortunes of Mental Health Commissioner Milton Greenblatt have bobbed up and down like a cork in a storm for the past two years, but the man described by many as a "master politician" not only survived, but won reappointment Friday.

Greenblatt has been under almost constant fire since The Union and Sunday Republican ran a series in March, 1970, revealing inhuman living conditions at Belchertown State School.

Since then the veteran superintendent at Belchertown was replaced and the assistant commissioner for mental retardation fired by Greenblatt, in addition to the firing of regional administrator M. Phillip Wakstein for his part in revealing conditions there.

Seathing reports about conditions at Belchertown and Monson State Hospital have been issued by a special legislative commission which is about to be expanded to statewide status, and Greenblatt's removal demanded by legislators and citizens groups.

But Greenblatt has weathered the storms, coming up smiling every time and brushing aside all criticisms.

The Department of Mental Health, according to its critics, remains an administrative nightmare, while Greenblatt is praised as a fine administrator by his new boss, Secretary of Human Services Peter C. Goldmark.

The inner workings of the department were more or less ignored by the public during Greenblatt's early tenure in office.

Sen. John J. Conte, D-Worcester, toured the Monson facility in 1968 with a Worcester reporter and briefly protested poor conditions there.

Shortly thereafter, Greenblatt appointed a new superintendent there, and had a publicity hiatus, more or less, until "The Tragedy of Belchertown" appeared.

Greenblatt first attempted to refute the charges in the spring of 1970, assigning one of his assistants to prepare a brief discrediting them as inaccurate and unfounded.

He defended the status quo at Belchertown and the administration of then-Supt. Lawrence A. Bowser.

But the Legislature approved the formation of the investigating commission, which rapidly put together evidence that conditions were worse then described in the newspaper series.

As pressure for reform mounted both in the press and in the Legislature, Greenblatt took action. In August, 1970, he announced the resignation of Wakstein "by mutual agreement."

Wakstein, however, had not resigned. It took Greenblatt until December to fire the outspoken regional administrator, and brought about a separate probe of the firing which briefly involved Gov. Sargent.

Greenblatt remained unperturbed by the heat, which also came from House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke, and Wakstein stayed fired. Statements from Belchertown employes criticizing poor sanitation and inhumane conditions were issued at public hearings about the same time.

The next political flareup came in March, 1971, when the commission issued its 100-plus-page report describing Belchertown as "a product of neglect, inertia and malpractice."

The report was thoroughly documented, including reports from the department's own files. Greenblatt dealt with the repercussions by quietly demanding the "early retirement" of Bowser, who complied.

He also made an unsuccessful attempt at repudiating the report by getting a document prepared by Dr. Arnold Abrams of Lexington, Region III retardation administrator, mailed to all news media.

In a cover letter, Greenblatt stated, "I am especially impressed with the eloquent way in which Dr. Abrams outlines the high degree of vulnerability and susceptibility of the conditions to exploitation by demagogues, headline hunters and sensation writers."

He then refused to name specifically any "demagogues, headline hungers and sensation writers," but Rep. Alexander D. Lolas, D-Monson, the special commission cochairman, said at the time the reference was to the commission and The Union.

On April 1, 1971, Rep. Francis C. Lapointe, D-Chicopee, made the first public call for Greenblatt's resignation or firing, referring to documented conditions in the commission report.

"There is no way the conditions at the institution could be worse," Lapointe said. "It's in dire need of leadership."

"If Greenblatt knew what was going on there-the maltreatment, the prolonged and uneven discipline of residents and the low morale of dedicated employes-he should be dismissed. I believe the commissioner was fully aware of these conditions," he said.

After Bowser left under pressure, Greenblatt sent Dr. William A Fraenkel, the assistant commissioner for retardation, to run the institution on an interim basis.

Fraenkel also was on the firing line and had become a political liability in Boston, but he was to be even more of a liability at Belchertown.

Freed from the restraints of the central office, Fraenkel became an outspoken advocate of institutional reform. His statements were frequently blunt, and an embarrassment to the Boston bureaucracy.

One of his main criticisms was that Boston didn't know what was happening in the outlying institutions and refused to extend cooperation to him.

His attempts at reform were not totally successful, and after a critical commission report issued in early fall, Fraenkel was bounced without ceremony. He was placed as a regional administrator in Boston and hasn't been heard from since.

Fraenkel's fate is still uncertain because of a six-month status on probation which doesn't expire until early May. He still could be dismissed from the department entirely, depending on Greenblatt's evaluation before granting him permanent Civil Service status.

A major political blow occurred in late July when a report by the Department of Public Health described Belchertown as "a nightmare of patient neglect and of filth and hazards in the facility's buildings."

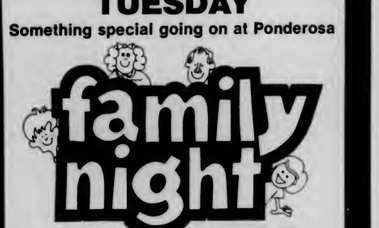
That report was one of the first things Secretary of Human Services Goldmark saw after taking office.

Department of Public Health Commissioner Alfred L. Frechette saw that Goldmark got the report from him. Reports from Boston at the time said Goldmark called Greenblatt in and threatened to fire him if conditions were not changed.

But Frechette ended up resigning a short time later and State House reporters observed a strong bond of friendship grow between Goldmark and Greenblatt which continues to today.

Their major reported bone of contention occurred over a bill to transfer medical services at Belchertown from DMH to Public Health.

"After a lot of arm twisting, Goldmark won Greenblatt over and things have been hunky dory since October," Lolas said Friday.



In September, Greenblatt distributed a memo ordering all DMH jobs to go through Gov. Sargent's patronage office.

The Union's State House reporter, Phillip D. Brunelle, said that Sargent considered the memo a political embarrassment and was considerably angered at the time.

In early February of this year, Quinn and Lolas wrote to Gov. Sargent asking for Greenblatt's removal as commissioner.

Curran - "A Wise Old Ski Racer"

Jerry Curran the only senior on the UMass Ski Team has skied on two UMass league championship teams and two "runner up" teams in the New England Inter-college Ski Conference. Jerry led a young team of freshman and sophomores to a 53 to 3 win-loss record in their drive for the Osborne Division Championship. In the interconference championships featuring the top four teams from the three NEISC divisions the Redmen team was second to Franklin Pierce College which scored 183.9 points for the two days of racing. UMass scored 179.7, BC 173.2, Middlebury 172.3, Windham 177.1, Northeastern 176.5, Babson 169.1, Dartmouth 169.1, Lowell Tech 164.2, New England College 161.7, BU 145.9 and WPI 127.2.

Having won its division championship the ski team was invited to the first annual Eastern College Alpine Championships at Madonna Mountain on March 25 and 26.

Johnson State College's crack Alpine team took places 2-4-5-6 in Saturday's two run slalom and came back to notch 2,3,4,5 in Sunday's dual slalom. Wayne Wright, University of Vermont freshman was the individual winner of both slalom events. In combined individual results Wayne Wright (UVM) was first, John Goodhue (JSC) was second, Rod Mumford third, Bill Farrell (JSC) was 4th, Walt Schofield (JSC) was 5th, Tim Hunt (St. L.) was 6th, Tuck Woodruff (UMass) was 7th and Ken Stowe (Dartmouth) was eighth. Other UMass finishers in a field of 65 racers was Dave Ferris 17th, Jerry Curran 18, Dick MacWade 19, Dave Rutter 21, Jim Ahearn 23 and Larry Peck 37.

For total team results Johnson State had a combined score of 193.6, UMass was second with 179.3, Windham had 171.1, Franklin Pierce 165.7, BC 158.4, Dartmouth 143.6. St. Lawrence 143.5. and UVM had 137.7. In this series of races the young UMass team proved that it could beat this year's NEISC champions, Franklin Pierce. Johnson State has the best college Alpine skiers in the country and they proved it again in this race.

"This year Jerry Curran has been my right arm and for three previous years he has had an incredible dependibility," said Coach Bill MacConnell. Last year and so far this year Jerry has skied consistently among the top ten or twelve league racers without a single fall." In eleven years of coaching I have been blessed with many talented ski racers and some outstanding performers, but none have compared with Jerry for hard work, team spirit, performance and dependability. In a year when UMass is going with so many freshmen and sophomores, Jerry's unfailing good spirits, technical ability and leadership has made the difference."

What makes a ski competitor of Jerry Curran's calibre? Unlike many he did not start skiing at the age of 4 and start ski racing a year later. He began to ski in high school, but Attleboro does not have a high school team so Jerry began to race U.S. Eastern Amateur Ski Association competitions with some small success then. After high school he went to UMass-Boston for a semester which was long enough to find out that they did not have a ski team; so he immediately transferred to Amherst. In a good program which featured two-one-week training camps at Killington and over 30 days of practice or racing with a team which had some outstanding racers on it, Jerry's talents quickly developed.

His drive to excel did not stop here. He arranged his class schedule to be able to practice on his own on Tuesdays and Thursdays at Haystack Mt. and he usually had some of his teammates with him on these trips. At the end of his sophomore year he took a 10-day summer racing camp in Colorado which resulted in a broken right leg and a torn right knee which should have ended the racing. Four months of indominable physical therapy exercises left him with a right leg stronger than the left, and his appetite for ski racing undimished. For two more years he skied number 5 on a six-man team riding the ruts strongly and dependably with Chuck Walker who skied number 6. These two strong dependable skiers, racing in the anchor position for UMass perhaps more than others skiing earlier and favored with better snow, accounted for the league championship in 1970 and the undefeated league championship in 1971. In 1972, both on the hill and off Jerry has been a tower of strength to the Freshmen and sophomores who make up the team and are in their first year of varisty competition.

Gil Hodges Dies

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Gil Hodges, manager of baseball's New York Mets, died Sunday in a hospital here after collapsing in his motel.

A spokesman at Good Samaritan Hospital said Hodges, 48, died of a heart attack. He had been stricken with a mild heart attack in 1968 but recovered and came back to manage the Mets to the World Series championship one year later.

An official at the Ramada Inn said Hodges collapsed while walking to his room. It was believed that he was returning from playing golf on the motel's golf course.

He was taken to the hospital about 5 p.m., EST.

His death came just one day after the start of major league baseball's first general strike and four days before the scheduled start of the 1972 season.

Hodges, a one-time All-Star first baseman with the old Brooklyn Dodgers, began his managing career with the Washington Senators in the middle of the 1963 season.

He remained with the Senators four more seasons before returning to his hometown to manage the Mets starting with the 1968 season.

Hodges was stricken with a mild heart attack on Sept. 24, 1968, when the club was in Atlanta for a game. He sat out the rest of the season and came back to lead New York to its first World Championship in 1969.

He was hailed by some as a genius for his manipulation of players. His two-platoon system was cited as one of the main reasons for the Mets' 1969 World Series victory over Baltimore.

The satisfaction for Hodges was twofold, since he was a member of the original Mets when they were a weak expansion team in 1962.

Before being selected in the expansion draft from the Dodger organization, Hodges had a distinguished career as a player.

He hit more home runs, 370, than any other righthanded batting first baseman in National League history; collected a still-standing record of 14 career grand slam homers; had seven successive seasons of 100 or more runs batted in, and was one of only six players to hit four home runs in one game. He accomplished the latter feat Aug. 31, 1950, against the old Boston Braves at Brooklyn's Ebbets Field.

Celts Win....

AP — The Boston Celtics, behind the steady shooting of John Havlicek and Jo Jo White, opened up a 21-point halftime lead Sunday afternoon and coasted to a 136-113 victory over the Atlanta Hawks, taking a 2-1 lead in their Eastern Conference series of the National Basketball Association playoffs.

The Celtics outscored Atlanta 41-26 in the second quarter, giving them a 74-53 lead at intermission. From that point on, the Hawks cut the deficit to no fewer than eight points.

White got 15 of his 29 points in the first quarter as the Atlantic Division Champion Celts opened up a 33-27 edge. Pete Maravich tallied 11 of his 37 points in the first quarter for the Hawks, keeping them in the ballgame.

The Celtics ran off nine straight points early in the second quarter, boosting their advantage to 48-33. Havlicek hit 15 of his 31 points in the second session and reserve center Hank Finkel, replacing Dave Cowens, who sat out about half the game with foul trouble, added eight points and six rebounds.

George Trapp replaced Maravich at 9:16 of the quarter and hit for 10 of Atlanta's final 20 points before the half.

The Hawks, behind Maravich, cut the margin to 86-78 with 3:50 to play in the third period. The Celtics then ran off nine straight points, giving them a comfortable 95-78 lead and the Hawks were able to get within eight only once again.

Walt Bellamy added 21 points for the Hawks.

The series resumes Tuesday night at Atlanta.

So Do Lakers

CHICAGO (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, led by the brilliant guard tandem of Jerry West and Gail Goodrich, defeated the Chicago Bulls 108-101 Sunday for their third straight triumph in their best-of-7 National Basketball Association playoff series.

The Lakers can end the best-of-7 Western Conference semi-final series by defeating the injury-riddled Bulls Tuesday night.

West pumped in 31 points, 24 of them in the second half, and Goodrich added 23 as the Lakers never trailed.

The Bulls were playing without center Tom Boerwinkle, who is out with a torn tendon in his left knee, and getting only part-time service from forwards Bob Love and Chet Walker. But they made a game of it right down to the finish.

Trailing by as many as 15 points several times in the first half, the Bulls closed fast and trailed only 56-49 at intermission. With Love scoring five quick points early in the second half, Chicago climbed into a 58-58 tie, only to have West score a basket to put Los Angeles ahead to stay.

The Bulls climbed within one point at 68-67 and withing two at 75-73, but Los Angeles took an 81-75 lead after three quarters.

Los Angeles opened an 88-80 lead in the fourth quarter. The Bulls battled back within two points at 93-91 on a basket by Jerry Sloan with four minutes left.

Five straight free throws by the Lakers lifted Los Angeles to a 98-91 lead and the Bulls never recovered.

Norm Van Lier paced Chicago with 21 points.

George Archer Wins GGO Tourney

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP)- George Archer defeated Tommy Aaron on the second hole of sudden death-set up by an Arnold Palmer collapse-for the $40,000 first prize Sunday in the Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament.

The 6-foot-6 Archer took his second title of the year when he scored a routine par three on the 16th hole-where Palmer met his downfall-as the scrambling Aaron took four strokes, including a penalty, and hadn't holed out when Archer tapped in a short putt for his par.

Archer had a three-under-par 68 in the last of Sunday's two rounds and Aaron had a 67 to tie at the end of the regulation 72 holes at 272.

Palmer had a two-stroke lead going to the 16th on the final round but hooked his tee shot into a shallow creek, elected to play out, dumped his third shot in a trap and finished with a triple bogey six that dropped him one stroke behind the leaders.

The disappointed Palmer finished with a 70 and 273.

He was tied at that figure, 11 under par on the wet Sedgefield Country Club course, with Dave Stockton, Chi Chi Rodriguez and J.C. Snead. Stockton and Rodriguez each had 67s and Snead a 68.

South African Gary Player was disqualified in the third round after failing to sign his scorecard. He was just one stroke off the pace in the chase for first prize after shooting a four-under-par 67 in the first of Sunday's two rounds. Under the rules of golf he was disqualified.

Player had posted a 54-hole total of 203, 10 under par and trailed leader Bruce Crampton by a single stroke when he was barred from teeing off for the final 18 holes.

A double round of 36 holes was forced when Friday's play was washed out.

"I checked my card very, very carefully," Player said. "I was in a hurry to have lunch, I asked a lady in the tent how long we had for lunch and she said 34 minutes. So I was in a hurry to get back to the hotel.

"When I got there, I said to my wife, 'I think I forgot to sign my card.' "

He immediately started back to the course and encountered general chairman John Forbis on the way, Forbis had Player's card and Gary signed it at that time.

He returned to the course, informed Jack Tuthill, head of the Tournament Players Division field staff, what had happened and was disqualified.

The rules specify that a player must be disqualified if he fails to sign his card before turning it in to the scoring committee.

Students Face Fines For Shoplifting

By CHARLEY BERKOW

The UMass Board of Trustees approved, in their meeting last Tuesday, a measure which will allow the Student Judiciary System greater flexibility in dealing with shoplifters on campus.

The Student Judiciary System will now be able to fine students caught shoplifting at the University Store up to three times the amount they are caught shoplifting or five dollars.

Under the old rules, the Student Judiciary System could either put the student on probation, considered a minor slap-on-the-wrist, or suspend him from school.

Offending students could also, and can still, be sent to the general court. Lee Sandwen, who introduced the measure to the Trustees, said that the general feeling is that "the Superior Court will mishandle the cases."

Sandwen said that the fines will help to make up for the losses suffered to the estimated 90% of the shoplifters who are not caught. He said that he hoped that a system could be worked out in the future in which the fines would be paid by work.

He said that the Student Senate asked him to present the "emergency act to deal with an emergency situation" to the Trustees.

Sandwen agreed with Trustee Chairman Joseph Healey's comment that "what we're doing now is not effective," but said that it is a start to solving the problem.

Sandwen said that the sign currently in front of the University Store warning students that "you could throw away an education by shoplifting" is more of an inceitement to steal that a deterrent.

Another Trustee said that he would "welcome peer pressure" against shoplifters as a means to solve the problem.

Last year, University store losses due to shoplifting were estimated at This raised each student's Campus Center fee by about four dollars this year.

The shoplifting rate this year was even higher. In an effort to halt the problem, Student Attorney General Henry Bouffard announced that he would ask that penalties for second shoplifting offenses be suspension from the University for one semester.

Bill Simpson, assistant trade book manager at the University Store, said that no shoplifters were caught for several days after Bouffard announced his new policy. Simpson said that the numbers of shoplifters caught is picking up again, although it is not nearly as great as it was before Bouffard announced his policy change.

Floorwalkers at the University Store, who are students themselves, consider the suspension penalty too harsh, according to one employe of the store. The employe said that the floorwalkers were somewhat reluctant to turn in offenders.

After the first offense, shoplifters at the University Store are given an explanation that the profits from the store go toward reducing Campus Center fees. They are told that after their next offense they will be turned over to the Student Judiciary System.

Bouffard will now ask that first offenders be fined a minimum of five dollars, or three times the amount that they are caught stealing, and be placed in jeopardy (probation) for two semesters.

Bouffard has said that he will continue to recommend suspension for second-offenders. He stressed, however, that the Student Court is in no way obligated to follow his recommendations.

The first shoplifting cases since the policy change will come up this week. None of these cases involve second-offenders, so the students do not face suspension this time around.

George Keithly, author of "The Donner Party", an epic poem which he read at Thompson last night.

G. Keithly Presented "The Donner Party"

By PAM HYJEK

Poet George Keithly last night read selected parts of his epic poem "The Donner Party" before an attentive audience in Thompson 102. This, his first book, has sold eleven thousand copies in the past year since publication, and was chosen as a Book of the Month Club alternate.

Assistant Professor of English, Donald Junkins, introduced Keithly. Reserved and solemn, the poet announced that he would not read the entire six thousand line work because "I don't want you all to leave the auditorium on Friday morning and say 'I can't believe he read the whole thing'." The audience responded, apparently amused; and then listened intently as Keithly proceeded to deliver the passages describing the ill-fated excursion of the Donner Party into the perilous Sierras in 1846.

Through the simplicity of the verse, the tragedy of how these people, trusting an invalid guide to the promised land of California, ignored warnings, eventually finding depravity and death, was explained. Keithly, separating each part with connecting information, remarked here that the Donner Party's journey parallels the present course of this country. A phrase from the poem explains the certain failure of confidently penetrating unknown territory despite lack of crucial knowledge of the land. This was due to a lack of a "sense of the land...departed in a dream, while we went on like souls still sleeping."

George Keithly, born in northern Illinois, had not heard of the Donner Party until he had left the state, and found that the people in the party were natives of central Illinois. Sparked by the intriguing discovery, he wrote his poem in six years, beginning in 1964, and taking a year off, to finish last year.

At the conclusion of the reading, after a long, appreciative applause, Keithly again displayed his shy sense of humor adding, "If I had another epic poem, I would read it."

Shoplifting Survey Revealed

By CAROLYN STEFANIK

A recent survey of 100 UMass students revealed that 67% had shoplifted at least once in their lives.

The survey, conducted by this writer, a UMass freshman, was completed by students in the Hatch, during March.

Tendencies and opinions of students on price tag switching, shoplifting, and punishment of students caught stealing were obtained in the questionnaire.

Students were asked about the fairness of one suggested method of dealing with student thieves in the UMass store, suspending any student caught shoplifting. Seventy-four percent, a definite majority of students questioned, said this penalty was unjust.

Most students surveyed felt that punishment to be too severe for the crime.

Warning first time offenders and fining subsequent offenders was a frequently suggested just punishment. But three-quarters of the students surveyed did feel shoplifters should be punished in some manner.

In a question on price tag switching, 37% of the students admitted to having changed price tags in a store, but at the same time 54 out of 100 felt this was wrong.

While over two-thirds of those surveyed had shoplifted, less than 20% had stolen within the past month. Seven percent, however, had stolen within the past week.

A greater percentage of male students and those living off campus had shoplifted, and had switched price tags.

More than 90% of the students said their parents had never shoplifted.

Twenty-one percent of all the students believed shoplifting was justifiable. More people said stealing could sometimes be justified, such as in cases where there was definite need.

Of those who had shoplifted, 28% had been caught stealing. Almost all said they were treated "justly," usually with a reprimanding or a fine.

When asked why they shoplifted, 79% of those who replied stated lack of money for their reason. The idea that the store makes enough money already was the next most frequent reason given for stealing.

Less than one-quarter of the students who answered said they stole for excitement, and only 4% stole because many people do it.

Fear of getting caught and moral beliefs were both popular reasons given by students who did not shoplift.

Food was the most frequently stolen item by the students questioned, while other popular articles were cosmetics, books, and records.

Wright Brothers Success Questioned As Epic Flight

W...LINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — Almost 70 years after Orville and Wilbur Wright made their epic flight at Kitty Hawk, N.C., people here are still claiming that the first man to fly an airplane was a New Zealander named Richard Pearse-and that he beat the Wright brothers by more than a year.

Their evidence is inconclusive, and there seems no prospect of anyone producing irrefutable proof now to support the claim.

But stories from old-timers and Pearse's indisputable brilliance as an aviator still arouse some hopes that he might have been the first man in the world to pilot a heavier than air machine.

Pearse's latest champion is the executive director of Auchland's Museum of Transport and Technology, R.J. Richardson, who intends building a memorial pavilion to house the pioneer's remaining aeronautical exhibits.

To help raise funds for the project, a medal has been struck commemorating Pearse's known achievements.

Richard Pearse was labeled "Mad Pearse" by his turn of the century neighbors at Waitoho Valley, near Timaru, because of his fascination with flying and his study of aeronautics as he did the ploughing on his parents' farm.

Sometime between 1900 and 1904 he designed and built a high-wing monoplane of steel and bamboo, with aileron and elevator controls, and powered by his own four-cylinder engine.

It had a wing surface of 700 square feet and weighed 700 pounds.

Pearse controlled pitch by moving his body in conjunction with the application of an elevator mounted on the trailing edge of the wing.

Small flaps on the wing tips enabled the plane to be banked. There was no rudder, although the front wheel of the undercarriage could be steered.

With his ailerons, which he patented in July, 1907, Pearse was undoubtedly ahead of the Wright brothers. But did he actually get airborne before their flight on Dec. 17, 1903?

No records are able to show with any certainty that he flew any distance before March 31, 1904.

He made several flights that year, and on two occasions traveled 150 yards at a height sufficient to clear a 12-foot hedge.

Some believe he flew as early as 1902. But if Pearse deserves recognition for actually accomplishing this, he has only himself to blame for not receiving it.

There would be no mystery at all if he had confided in his contemporaries, left detailed records of his progress, or been a less secretive man about his activities.

Catholics Mourn In Belfast

(AP) — Thousands of Roman Catholics attended the funeral Monday of a slain mother in a reproach to the campaign of violence waged by the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

At the same time, hard-line Protestant leader William Craig called for the restoration of a stronger Protestant-based government in Northern Ireland and "if it cannot be within the United Kingdom it will have to be outside the United Kingdom."

In Londonderry, Armagh and Carrickfergus Protestants defied security laws to hold their annual Easter parades. There were no reports of any disturbance.

More than 2,000 Catholics from Andersontown district, an IRA stronghold in Belfast, attended the funeral of Martha Crawford, a 39-year-old mother of 10 children, in a silent protest against the continuing IRAviolence. Mrs. Crawford was slain last week in cross fire during a street battle between IRA gunmen and British troops. A British army spokesman said she had been killed by a guerrilla bullet.

After the funeral, 500 women went to a school hall to discuss an approach to the IRA nationalist provisional wing to appeal for a stop to the violence. The meeting ended in uproar and tears after about 100 IRA women sympathizers jeered, cat-called and screamed out republican songs.

Successful General Poses Problem

NEW DELHI (AP) — The general who led India's army to victory over Pakistan is the center of a political controversy because Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government doesn't know what to do with him.

Authoritative sources say Mrs. Gandhi would like to keep Gen. Sam Manekshaw, the army chief of staff, in uniform in the absence of a final peace agreement with Pakistan but can't make up her mind how to do it.

Under army rules that never before were relaxed, Manekshaw should have retired on Monday, his 58th birthday, ending a 38-year military career.

Instead, he was given an indefinite-but evidently short-extension, which neither he, the army nor the government seemed happy about.

"This leads to gossip and guessing, which is not good for the army," said one senior officer. "It also hampers planning, since the general doesn't know how long he will be chief of staff."

Sources say Manekshaw would have preferred a definite two or three year extension, or, alternatively, a new assignment in the Defense Ministry in which he would be senior to the three service chiefs, possibly becoming India's first five-star general.

Government sources say Mrs. Gandhi's Cabinet has so far rejected the first proposal because it would have hampered promotion opportunities for several lieutenant generals eligible to become army chief-the only army post with four-star rank.

The second suggestion, for creation of a post similar to the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in the United States, was not approved because of concern that it would antagonize the naval and air force chiefs, the sources added.

Under the present system, the three service chiefs are of equal four-star rank and equal status. When they confer, the man who has been a chief of staff the longest acts as chairman.

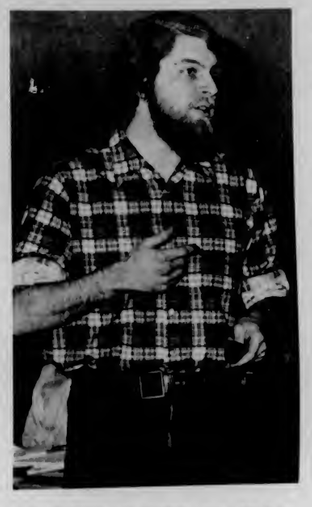
Student Senate Presidential Candidates

(Editor's Note: The following interviews were conducted to give the two candidates for the office of Student Senate President an opportunity to express themselves to the student body. The election for next year's officers will be held this Wednesday night at the regular Senate meeting.

Student Senate Budgets Committee Chairman John Stevens is running for next year's Senate Presidency. He is opposed by the man on the right.

John Stevens, candidate for Student Senate President, said his strongest qualification for that position lies in his ability to organize students behind what they believe in.

"I believe the role of president as now defined is someone who primarily deals with organizing students," said Stevens.



On the rising costs of rents and fees, Stevens said it may be necessary for the president to organize attempts to lower costs by "mass-action type of tactics."

Stevens said the president should act as an antagonist in dealing with faculty matters, and should leave the negotiating to his special assistants.

The president should not be a negotiator, unless for a crisis situation added Stevens.

The Student Government said Stevens should be dealing only with people. He said the president should only deal with the administrators at Whitmore in order to represent the views of students.

Stevens said the Senate has lost touch with the student body, and has tended to lean toward a bureaucratic body. He said the president will have to attend area government meetings and dorm councils in order to regain contact with the student body at UMass.

Student Senate Vice President Larry Ladd is the second candidate running for Senate President for next year. Senate elections will be held this Wednesday.

Larry Ladd, candidate for Student Senate President, said his strongest qualification for president lies in his experience.

"I have spent the last year and a half dealing with administration, faculty and trustees in order to protect student interests," said Ladd.

Rents and fees and academic reform are the major issues facing the Senate next semester he said.

As president, Ladd would attempt to end the secret meetings held prior to the "public rubber-stamp sessions" of the trustees, and force the trustees to face the issues "they so often publicly avoid."

On faculty relations, Ladd stated that he will fight the trend towards faculty unionization since "unionization has programmed students out of academic decisions."

Ladd feels that short-term negotiations to keep rents and fees down will only provide "immediate and slight relief." He will support a boycott of rents and fees scheduled for the spring of 1973.

Students should control the entire Student Affairs operation at Whitmore and in the dorms, said Ladd.

"The Student Senate should have the same relationship to the Student Affairs Division that the SUG Board is supposed to have with the Campus Center," he said.

Summing up his ideas on the presidency, Ladd continued: "The president is an advocate and organizer of students-a change agent on campus.

"He should initiate action on the broad front and take the leadership on issues of top priority," added Ladd.

Philosophy And Psychotherapy

Bob Zelman, a grad student in philosophy and author of the "Bleeding Rose" columns in the Collegian will be teaching three one-credit multidisciplinary courses starting this week. The three courses are Philosophy of Western Religion, Existential Philosophy and Psychotherapy and Rational-Emotive Psychotherapy.

There will be an open meeting on Wed., April 5, between 1 and 4 p.m. in the main lounge of Thatcher Dorm in the Northeast Area. If you cannot come, write to Bob Zelman, 420 Thatcher Dorm, U. of Mass.

University Housing Rules

Students are required by University regulations to live in University housing unless exempted by being in at least one of the following categories:

1. Married
2. Seniors as of the beginning of the 1972 fall term.
3. Commuters from the home of parents (not more than 40 miles).

In addition, students who will become 21 during the 1972-73 school year may apply for exemption.

Under Extreme Circumstances, other students not included above, may request permission to live off campus. All requests are to be initiated with the appropriate Director of the Area in which the student currently resides.

As room drawing will take place the week of April 17, 1972, for the Fall term assignments, students wishing to be considered for special exemption must pick up applications this week April 3-7 at their Area Director's Office by 12 N, April 10, 1972. Each request will be evaluated by the Area Staff and the student will be notified of the decision on his request prior to the start of room drawing, April 17, 1972.

This will by the only opportunity for currently enrolled students to request exemption for the fall semester 1972. Requests received after April 10, 1972, will not be considered for fall term exemptions.

Debaters Take Wayne State

By JUDY BENNETT

In recent weeks, the UMass Debate Team attended several important debate tournaments and also helped with the District runoffs held here. The latter came off smoothly because of the time and planning John Day and Jim Lane put into it and the team cooperation they received. At all of these debates UMass did well, but especially so at Wayne State.

At the Wayne State University Debate Tournament, 50 teams participated. Representing UMass were sophomore Karin Kramer, of Levittown, Pa., and freshman Celia Hooper, of Ann Arbor, Mich. In preliminary competition they met Bradley, Bowdoin, Michigan, Albion, Bowling Green, and Wisconsin State, losing only to Bradley. Because of this record, they went into quarterfinals against Oberlin College. A 3-0 decision here put them against Bradley U in semi's. They lost this round on a 2-1 decision. Nonetheless, they returned third rank team in the tournament, with Celia getting third place speaker and Karin getting top speaker award.

In Philadelphia, at the Liberty Bell Tournament were senior Paul Lamarche of Worcester, junior David McCaffrey of Leominister, junior Bruce Murphy of Abington, and junior John Day of South Hamilton. Together they achieved an 8-8 record.

This year UMass was honored in having the District Qualifying Tournament for the National Debate Tournament held here. Two UMass teams entered the competition, both achieving an 8-8 win-loss record. Junior Roger Legendre of Leominister and sophomore Terry Hofmann of Rochester, N.Y., made up one team and they had the fourth highest speaker points in the tournament. The other UMass team was made up of freshman Celia Hooper and sophomore Karin Kramer. The teams qualifying for the national tournament from this region were St. Anselm's, Boston College, Brown U and Harvard.

Nixon Leaves Viet Options Open

WASHINGTON (AP) — Administration officials left open Monday a wide range of options-including possible air attacks on North Vietnam or the use of U.S. ground forces-as President Nixon pondered ways to counter the thrust of enemy forces in South Vietnam.

At the White House and State Department, spokesmen would not discuss specific steps Nixon might order but said, "All options are open," when asked whether bombing sorties or deployment of American troops were possible.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, however, described as "a South Vietnamese operation" the effort to stem what he and other officials described as a Communist invasion across the demilitarized zone.

Ziegler cited also a briefing by State Department spokesman Robert J. McCloskey as "totally reflective of the overall administration view" on the situation.

McCloskey, who cautioned newsmen against speculating about the use of U.S. troops or renewed U.S. bombing, said the North Vietnamese had violated the 1968 "understanding" which had led to complete halt of American air attacks on North Vietnam. Hanoi never has acknowledged the existence of such an understanding.

N. Viets Push On; U.S. Set To Strike

SAIGON (AP)-North Vietnam poured more tanks, artillery and infantry across the demilitarized zone Monday and the United States marshaled powerful air and naval forces to stop the onslaught.

The main armor-backed enemy drive bogged down north of Quang Tri as South Vietnamese resistance stiffened about 10 miles below the zone. But other North Vietnamese forces were trying to outflank Quang Tri's defenders from the west and southwest, field reports indicated.

U.S. planes awaited clearer skies to carry out orders from President Nixon to strike hard at North Vietnam in retaliation for the offensive. A sullen overcast has prevented the jets from unleashing their full firepower during the five-day enemy push, the biggest since Tet of 1968.

A White House spokesman in Washington reported the President summoned a special foreign policy panel into session to weigh options to counter the offensive. But the spokesman said the thrust will not hamper U.S. troop withdrawal.

A State Department spokesman, Robert J. McCloskey, characterized the North Vietnamese attack as a "flagrant violation" of the 1954 Geneva agreements and what American officials call a 1968 "understanding" between the United States and North Vietnam. Hanoi denies there ever was an understanding.

"By any definition, what has occurred is an invasion," McCloskey said.

Hanoi radio claimed "the South Vietnam People's Liberation Armed Forces-meaning the Viet Cong- had won big victories, capturing or killing 6,500 enemy troops. The broadcast made no mention of North Vietnamese troops. Hanoi never having admitted they are in the South.

The weather cleared slightly Monday, permitting U.S. Air Force and Navy bombers to launch 128 missions along South Vietnam's frontier where the fighting raged. It was the highest number of strikes since Feb. 18.

Some American jets also crossed into North Vietnam to hit surface to air missile sites five miles above the DMZ. They met a barrage of missiles from at least a half-dozen sites, but the U.S. Command said none of the planes was hit.

On the southern side of the DMZ, however, four American aircraft were shot down by antiaircraft fire just below the buffer zone and a South Vietnamese bomber was downed by a surface to air missile in the same general area. Eight American crewmen were missing and feared dead.

Air strikes were under way around the clock near Quang Tri. Fighting raged at several points within 16 miles of the city and at a fire base 32 miles to the south, 17 miles west of Hue.

Other fighting was in progress at Fire Bases Anne and Barbara, 8 and 16 miles southwest of Quang Tri, and at Fire Base Bastogne, a post west of Hue manned by the South Vietnamese army's 1st Division.

South Vietnamese officials continued to withhold casualty figures. Even senior Americans said they did not have access to them.

The U.S. air strike force gained strength Monday with the return of the 7th Fleet carrier Kitty Hawk to the Tonkin gulf to rejoin the Coral Sea and the Hancock. A fourth carrier, the Constellation, was steaming toward the gulf from Japan.

Together with the 250 Air Force planes based in South Vietnam and Thailand, they formed an air strike force of up to 500 planes.

"When the weather clears we're going to sock it to them," said one senior pilot. But weather forecasts indicated no clear skies until Tuesday or Wednesday.

Soviets Get Bangladesh Base

DACCA (AP)-The Soviet navy, long denied a base of operations on the Bay of Bengal, has established a beachhead in Bangladesh with a floating workshop.

The repair ship arrived Sunday, the first of 20 units of the Russian fleet sent to the new nation to clear its two major ports, Chittagong and Chalna.

The rest of the flotilla, en route from Vladivostok, is to join the repair ship in Chittagong by April 19, with the two-month salvage and clearance operation to begin by the end of April.

Basically, the repair ship will act as a hardware store for the other vessels, including sea tugs, minesweepers and special diver boats, as they pull 21 sunken ships from the Karnaphuli River at Chittagong and remove mines floated in the harbors during December's India-Pakistan war.

Its crewmen also will work with Bangladesh engineers to repair war damage to the facilities at the ports.

Chittagong, Bangladesh's only deepwater facility for imports, once handled 4 1/2 million tons of cargo a year. It has been at a virtual standstill since the war.

The same is true of Chalna, established mainly for exports, which at its peak handled 2.1 million tons a year.

Sources in the Bangladesh government said the Soviets had tried for years to move into the Bay of Bengal, which washes the shores of Bangladesh, India and Burma.

But they said India's prime minister, Indira Gandhi, had denied access despite India's close relations with the Kremlin. Burma and Pakistan are more closely associated with the Soviet Union's ideological rival, China, than with Moscow.

When plans to clear the ports under U.N. contract failed to materialize the Soviets offered, and Bangladesh accepted.

Bangladesh authorities privately insist the contract with Russia is technical and not politically motivated. They claim that the United Nations could have contracted with any one of a half-dozen countries capable of doing the job if it had wished.

Probably coincidentally, the commander in chief of the Soviet navy, Fleet Adm. S.G. Gorshkov, arrived in New Delhi on Monday, beginning a 10-day visit in India.

One of the places he will visit is Vishakhapatnam, eastern headquarters of the Indian navy across the Bay of Bengal from Chittagong. It also is the berth of submarines the Soviet Union has given the Indian navy.

Hitler Aide Dies

ASCHAU, Germany (AP)-Gen. Franz Halder, Adolf Hitler's former army chief of staff, has died in this upper Bavarian town, a municipal spokesman said Monday. Halder was 87.

Halder was army chief of staff from November 1938 to the end of 1942 when Hitler ordered him replaced.

Halder is generally credited with planning the German army's lightning thrusts into Poland and France in the early stage of World War II.

His rift with Hitler came after the dictator ordered the German attack on the Soviet Union. Halder withdrew into civilian life, but was arrested and thrown into a concentration camp in connection with the unsuccessful attack on Hitler's life July 20, 1944.

After the war, he acted as adviser to the West German government and assisted the U.S. Department of Defense in compiling its World War II history.

The spokesman said he died Sunday.

Dollar Devalued

The dollar has been devalued, for practical purposes, since last December to a varying degree in terms of other currencies.

Eurasia Alerted Against Smallpox

(AP) — Europe and the Middle East are on the alert against a possible spread of smallpox brought to Yugoslavia by a Moslem pilgrim bearing contaminated holy water from Mecca.

Yugoslav officials reported that 23 persons had died of the disease since the outbreak began March 14. Two smallpox cases were reported in Europe outside Yugoslavia, and 25 in Syria.

Many governments, fearful of an epidemic, ordered mass vaccinations.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers notified U.S. diplomatic posts in Europe, the Middle East and South Asia of precautionary measures being taken by the United States because of the outbreak.

Rogers said in a telegram: "Public Health Service requiring all travelers arriving in U.S. who have been in Yugoslavia during 14 days prior to arrival in U.S. to present valid smallpox certificates.

"Travelers to Yugoslavia are advised to be vaccinated and to carry a valid vaccination certificate. Because temporary vaccination requirements may be imposed by other European countries for the duration of the outbreak, travelers to Europe who already have a valid vaccination certificate should carry it with them to avoid possible delay at international borders."

The United States dropped in September, 1971, mandatory vaccinations for children and said innoculations need only be given to persons traveling to areas where the disease has not been eradicated.

Seale Case Surprised Police Chief

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)-Former New Haven Police Chief James F. Ahern says he was astonished when a local prosecutor sought an indictment of Black Panther Bobby G. Seale in the Alex Rackley murder case three years ago.

"We the police had no solid evidence to link him to Rackley's death," Ahern writes in a book about to be published.

"The New Haven Police Department never requested an indictment against him. Seale, nor did we expect that prosecutor Arnold Markle would ask for one," Ahern says.

Markle, contacted by telephone, said Ahern's account "is not true. He did know."

"He knew I was going to indict Seale," said Markle. "He never said that he was against indicting Seale."

Markle said he was reluctant to say anymore because it would "only help him. Ahern, sell his book."

Ahern was New Haven police chief in May 1969 when the body of Rackley, a New York City Panther, was found in a swamp in Middlefield, about 20 miles northeast of here. The state contended Rackley was a suspected police informer.

Ahern is now director of the Insurance Crime Prevention Institute, an investigative agency run by the insurance industry. While police chief here between 1968 and 1971 he was a member of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest, which probed the Kent State and Jackson State killings.

In his book, "Police in Trouble: Our Frightening Crisis in Law Enforcement," Ahern writes that his men knew Rackley was being held at Panther headquarters and that they went on a search for a Panther car believed to be carrying Rackley from headquarters the night he was killed.

Ahern refers to the other arrests in the case-there were eventually 13-as "our subsequent arrests." But he says Markle-not the police-was responsible for the arrest of Seale.

Seale was indicted in August 1969 and arrested in California. He spent the next two months in prison without bail on charges of aiding and abetting murder, kidnapping resulting in death, conspiracy to murder and conspiracy to kidnap.

The case attracted wide publicity and it took four months to pick a jury, which then couldn't decide on a verdict. In May 1971 Seale was freed after a mistrial when Judge Harold .Mulvey dismissed the charges saying it would take superhuman efforts to find another impartial jury.

Wisconsin Primary Today

Here, in brief, are key facts on the Wisconsin primary election Tuesday.

VOTERS—About 1.5 million of 2.9 million eligible voters are expected to cast ballots. Voters have their choice of Democratic or Republican ballots.

REPUBLICAN BALLOT—President Nixon has only token opposition in Reps. Paul McCloskey Jr. of California and John Ashbrook of Ohio. Neither has campaigned in Wisconsin.

DEMOCRATIC BALLOT—There are 12 names: Sens. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, George S. McGovern of South Dakota, Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Vance Hartke of Indiana; former Sen. Eugene J.McCarthy of Minnesota; Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama; Mayors John V. Lindsay of New York and Sam Yorty of Los Angeles, and Reps. Patsy Mink of Hawaii, Shirley Chisholm of New York and Wilbur Mills of Arkansas.

Harrisburg Jury Still Deadlocked

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)-A deadlocked jury continued to puzzle Monday over charges against the Rev. Philip Berrigan and six other peace activists, hearing for the third time a reading of the judge's definition of conspiracy.

The jury trying the Harrisburg Seven on antiwar conspiracy charges ended a fifth day of deliberations after the federal judge, acting at the panel's request, read again his interpretation of the conspiracy charge.

After the rereading, the jurors retired to their suburban motel quarters, scheduled to resume deliberations again at 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Meanwhile, the defense continued to object to the continued deliberations after the jury had reported itself deadlocked on nine counts in the 10-count indictment. Defense lawyers argued that any subsequent decision would have to be "a coercive verdict."

The jury had proposed earlier Monday to start all over again in its assessment of the conspiracy charges. But the judge put a rein on the panel.

The nine women and three men asked for a rereading of U.S. District Court Judge R. Dixon Herman's entire two-hour charge, with which he sent them into deliberations last Thursday. They previously heard a rerun of parts of it.

The jury also asked again for a complete transcript of 20 volumes of testimony by FBI informer Boyd F. Douglas Jr., a government witness who said that the Harrisburg Seven plotted to kidnap White House adviser Henry A. Kissinger, blow up Washington's tunnel heating system and ravage draft boards in several Eastern cities.

Herman declined to reread his charge and the testimony in their entirety. But he told the jurors he would repeat specific passages they might designate.

"I understood that we could submit to you those points on which we need more information about the Douglas testimony and the charge," said foreman Harold Sheets before they jury left the courtroom.

"Yes. Can you do that?" Herman asked.

"I think so," said Sheets, a Harrisburg tax accountant.

The jury Sunday convicted Berrigan of a single count of smuggling a letter out of Lewisburg, Pa., federal penitentiary through Douglas on May 24, 1970. The partial verdict made him liable to a maximum 10-year federal prison term, in addition to a six-year sentence he has been serving for two years for destroying draft board records.

The jurors reported themselves deadlocked on nine other counts in the indictment, including the key accusation of conspiracy, covering the purported plots to abduct Kissinger and destroy federal property.

Herman directed the panel to resume deliberations, rather than abruptly end the trial which, it is estimated, has cost all concerned $1.5 million and which has consumed 10 full weeks. The 11th week began on Easter.

Douglas, 31, spent 14 days on the witness stand, half of them in direct testimony for the government, and half under defense cross-examination.

The ex-convict was completing a sentence at Lewisburg in 1970 when Berrigan arrived to begin his six-year term.

Douglas, who left the prison daily for a study-release program at nearby Bucknell University, agreed to carry mail and telephone messages between Berrigan and outside members of his militant anitwar movement.

Subsequently, Douglas became a paid FBI informer.

Davis Trial Moves Into Second Week

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A photographer who snapped pictures during a deadly convict escape attempt two years ago testified Monday at the Angela Davis trial that one convict demanded release of the Soledad Brothers.

James Kean, a photographer for the San Rafael Independent Journal, said he stopped to jot in his notebook the words "Soledad Brothers," referring to three unrelated black convicts accused of killing a prison guard.

The state claims that the Aug. 7, 1970, shootout at the Marin County Civic Center at San Rafael was engineered by Miss Davis to rescue one of the three men-prison author George Jackson. Miss Davis has pleaded innocent to murder, kidnap and conspiracy charges.

Kean told of seeing convicts herding a judge and four hostages down a courthouse hallway. He said he started clicking his shutter, taking perhaps 20 to 30 pictures within a few minutes. As the group moved past him toward an elevator, Kean said convict James McClain told him: "Tell them we want the Soledad Brothers released by 12 o'clock."

"I asked Mr. McClain to repeat it, which he did," said Kean. "I said, to make no mistake, you mean 12 o'clock today or 12 o'clock midnight? He said 12 o'clock today. I wrote the name Soledad Brothers down in a notebook."

Under cross-examination by defense attorney Leo Branton, Kean asserted: "I told you exactly what he said."

Financial Record Supports ITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — A financial statement on file at the Securities and Exchange Commission appeared Monday to support International Telephone & Telegraph Corp's contention that it paid income taxes for the years a presidential candidate alleged it paid none.

Sen. George McGovern said Sunday the giant conglomerate, with gross revenue in 1970 of more than $6 billion, paid no federal income taxes in 1968, 1969 or 1970.

The South Dakota Democrat said he based his assertion on reports on file at the SEC.

But the financial statements on file at the SEC were examined by the Associated Press and they listed figures that seemed to agree with those issued by an ITT spokesman in New York in response to McGovern.

ITT's spokesman said the company paid a total of $195,569,000 in income taxes in 1970 to U.S., foreign and state governments. He said about 28 per cent of that total went to the U.S. government.

Under "Statement of Consolidated Income of ITT" are listed sales and revenues totaling $6,364,494,000 and costs and expenses of $5,801,058,000, for a net income of $563,436,000.

In a long column below are listed such items as equity in net earnings, dividence and interest income, interest and financial charges, and taxes.

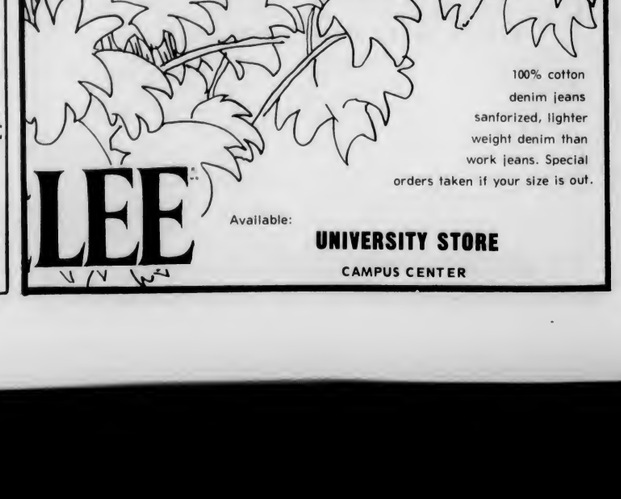
Items that should be substracted from net income, such as interest charges and taxes are listed in parentheses. All other figures are added to the total.

Many balance sheets list negative figures in parentheses. If costs and expenses are greater than sales and revenues the loss is listed in parentheses.

Justice Department handling of a series of antitrust cases against ITT has been the focal point of Senate Judiciary Committee hearings requested by Richard Kleindienst, President Nixon's nominee for attorney general.

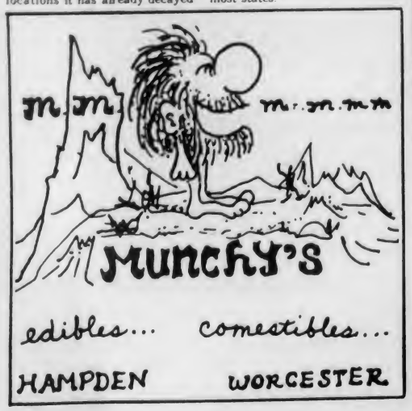
The committee had approved the Kleindienst nomination when allegations were published that the antitrust settlement was linked to corporate pledge of financial support for the Republican National Convention in San Diego.

Recent Fallout Not Hazardous



WASHINGTON (AP) — The government announced Monday that radioactive fallout from the March 18 Communist Chinese nuclear test "temporarily resulted in a slight increase in radiation above normal levels over most of the United States."

But the Atomic Energy Commission said there was not significant health hazard involved.



"The fallout apparently reached a peak concentration during the last 10 days of March, and at most locations it has already decayed to levels which cannot be detected by the sampling network," the AEC said.

A spokesman said that fallout from the blast-estimated to have packed an explosive wallop equivalent to between 20,000 and 200,000 tons of TNT-entered over the western United States, and was first detected in Washington, Oregon and California.

Then, the fallout cloud traveled eastward, and finally southeastward-so that it was detected in most states.

Blind Politics Leads The Way

(Editor's Note: This is the second installment in a series on the UMass Medical School in Worcester. Yesterday's installment looked at the events leading up to the initial legislative bill in 1962, and of Dr. Lamar Soutter's appointment as the dean. The article also mentioned the numerous offers presented to Soutter as a possible site for construction. The series hopes to expose the human elements, both good and bad, which were at work while the school was being planned and built.)

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

By 1963 the medical school was beginning to be considered less of an institution of higher learning and more as an economic commodity. People were dealing with it as a thing, a material object which would be plopped in a specific area of the state and, once the "on button" was thrown, it would begin churning-out salaries for the staff, miracle cures for the population and prestige for the community which sheltered it.

The reality of the institution's function as a school in which to train and instruct future doctors was lost in a political and economic dialogue. The building became a black monolith, whose inner workings and cares were both alien and unnecessary to the function which these individuals wished it to serve.

To say that Dr. Soutter had perseverance would not do justice to the man. He, personally, had to deal with both the politicians and regional planners, explaining to them the pros and cons of locating the school in their areas, hearing in return only arguments about the fiscal assets to the population and of more prestigious housing available for the faculty.

Like political jelly-beans being passed between Sesame Street's Ernie and Bert, Soutter and his school continued trekking across the state listening to local bankers propose new packages of land and monetary assistance and waiting for the dean's promise to locate in their community.

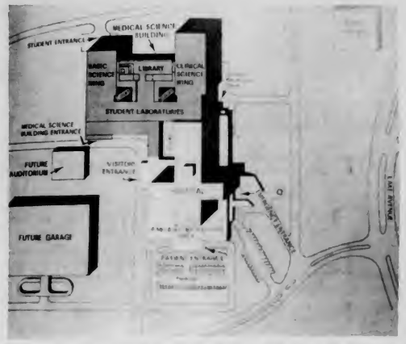
By early 1964 the Lemuel Shattuck Chronic Disease Hospital in Boston, The Worcester City Hospital and the Springfield City Hospital were offered as nuclei around which the medical school might be built. The offers seemed sincere, but most individuals involved knew these facilities had become for the cities both eyesores and financial burdens which, through the offer, would quickly transfer the problems to the state while still maintaining the services rendered within the respective city limits.



Finally, in March 1964, Soutter said that the incorporation of the medical school in an already existing hospital was a task which he considered unworkable. He said the costs incurred in remodeling the ancient buildings would be far greater and less efficient than building a new facility from scratch. This again dealt a blow to the urban location and Amherst gained another peg in preferability.

In April of 1964 Soutter hired three eminent physicians to study the proposals and present him with their recommendations for the site of the school. The doctors were the respective deans of the medical schools of the Universities of Washington, Florida and Kentucky. It should be noted that two, (Kentucky and Florida), were deans of schools which had recently located their campuses in a suburban setting, proclaiming the cities had become too congested to be used efficiently by the staff. Another argument was that the cities already had operating clinics and hospitals which, in most cases, were providing services beyond the demands of the shrinking urban population.

Another argument proposed by the advocates of an urban hospital/school was the proximity necessary to effectively treat the city's population. This again was nullified by a report from a western Massachusetts group which pointed out that the expanding highway system was providing the core city with easy access to the suburbs and that it was common knowledge that an automobile could, in half an hour, travel ten miles through city streets or thrity miles on highway. The report said the highway system now rendered the urban hospital unnecessary and, in some cases, its suburban equivalent would be more accessable to the city dweller.

Also, Dr. Robert Emery, a spokesman for the Hampden-Hampshire and Franklin County Medical Societies, noted that Worcester and Boston were already well served with hospital facilities and that the expanding population in western Massachusetts had already gone well beyond the local hospitals' ability to serve them efficiently. He noted that "as it is now, we have to send all our heart cases and many of our pediatric cases to Boston. Whereas a well-equipped and centrally located hospital in western Massachusetts would save hours of travel time and perhaps mean the difference between life and death for a seriously ill patient."

The facts presented were becoming overwhelmingly in favor of a western Massachusetts hospital/school. And most observers of the drama were convinced that Soutter too believed the school should be located there. But, in testing the feelings of the trustees who would have the final say in the matter, Soutter found that most were still not convinced of the need for one in Amherst. Some members of the Board felt that the investigations were being conducted by members of the medical profession only, and that a more balanced picture would be realized if an impartial observer were introduced.

The above diagram shows the basic layout of the med school complex. The power plant, medical science building and hospital are due for completion in 1974. The auditorium and parking garage are still in the planning stages. The school is built on land received from the State Mental Health Department.

So, Soutter hired the managerial consultant firm of Booz, Allen and Hamilton to evaluate the economic and business aspects of building at the five sites. This "think tank", hired at a cost of $30,000, established a list of about thirty categories in which each location would be graded on a scale of 1 to 10. The criteria covered such practical aspects as: what would be the cost of living and housing of the faculty at each site; what would be the maintenance costs incurred at each site; what would construction cost, and so forth.

The report they presented, after the scores were totalled, revealed Amherst as the first choice, Springfield second, suburban Boston third, and Worcester fourth.

What ever opposition any member of the board may have had prior to its release, the report surely cancelled it out. There now seemed unanimous approval, both from the medical and business professions, that locating either in Amherst or Springfield was the thing to do.

What most members of the search had overlooked was that the trustees were sitting in the middle of a battlefield; between the educational and professional forces on one side, and the political forces on the other. That the professional forces were shooting for Amherst was obvious. What wasn't seen was the political machinery working underground which was saying that Amherst had received enough of the political goodies and it was time to start giving some of the university's jelly-beans to the other cities. What the politicians in Boston were concerned with was not the caliver of higher education which could be achieved in one or the other location, but rather how much capital would be dumped into the area as a result of locating there. The prestige of acquiring THE medical school for one's district was paramount. The ability to return to one's constituents for re-election reminding them that "THE medical school is just down the street thanks to the efforts of yours-truly" was the blinding light before them.

So the twenty-two trustees gathered themselves together in a closed room to vote on June 11, 1965. The outcome of their vote seemed inevitable to most observers, including Soutter. But the superficial smiles of those men entering the conference room concealed something which would set the state in an uproar for years to come.

Financial Record Supports ITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — A financial statement on file at the Securities and Exchange Commission appeared Monday to support International Telephone & Telegraph Corp's contention that it paid income taxes for the years a presidential candidate alleged it paid none.

Sen. George McGovern said Sunday the giant conglomerate, with gross revenue in 1970 of more than $6 billion, paid no federal income taxes in 1968, 1969 or 1970.

The South Dakota Democrat said he based his assertion on reports on file at the SEC.

But the financial statements on file at the SEC were examined by the Associated Press and they listed figures that seemed to agree with those issued by an ITT spokesman in New York in response to McGovern.

ITT's spokesman said the company paid a total of $195,569,000 in income taxes in 1970 to U.S., foreign and state governments. He said about 28 per cent of that total went to the U.S. government.

Under "Statement of Consolidated Income of ITT" are listed sales and revenues totaling $6,364,494,000 and costs and expenses of $5,801,058,000, for a net income of $563,436,000.

In a long column below are listed such items as equity in net earnings, dividence and interest income, interest and financial charges, and taxes.

Items that should be substracted from net income, such as interest charges and taxes are listed in parentheses. All other figures are added to the total.

Many balance sheets list negative figures in parentheses. If costs and expenses are greater than sales and revenues the loss is listed in parentheses.

Justice Department handling of a series of antitrust cases against ITT has been the focal point of Senate Judiciary Committee hearings requested by Richard Kleindienst, President Nixon's nominee for attorney general.

The committee had approved the Kleindienst nomination when allegations were published that the antitrust settlement was linked to corporate pledge of financial support for the Republican National Convention in San Diego.

Davis Trial Moves Into Second Week

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A photographer who snapped pictures during a deadly convict escape attempt two years ago testified Monday at the Angela Davis trial that one convict demanded release of the Soledad Brothers.

James Kean, a photographer for the San Rafael Independent Journal, said he stopped to jot in his notebook the words "Soledad Brothers," referring to three unrelated black convicts accused of killing a prison guard.

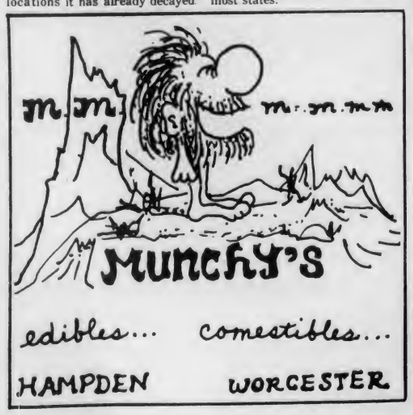
The state claims that the Aug. 7, 1970, shootout at the Marin County Civic Center at San Rafael was engineered by Miss Davis to rescue one of the three men-prison author George Jackson. Miss Davis has pleaded innocent to murder, kidnap and conspiracy charges.

Kean told of seeing convicts herding a judge and four hostages down a courthouse hallway. He said he started clicking his shutter, taking perhaps 20 to 30 pictures within a few minutes. As the group moved past him toward an elevator, Kean said convict James McClain told him: "Tell them we want the Soledad Brothers released by 12 o'clock."

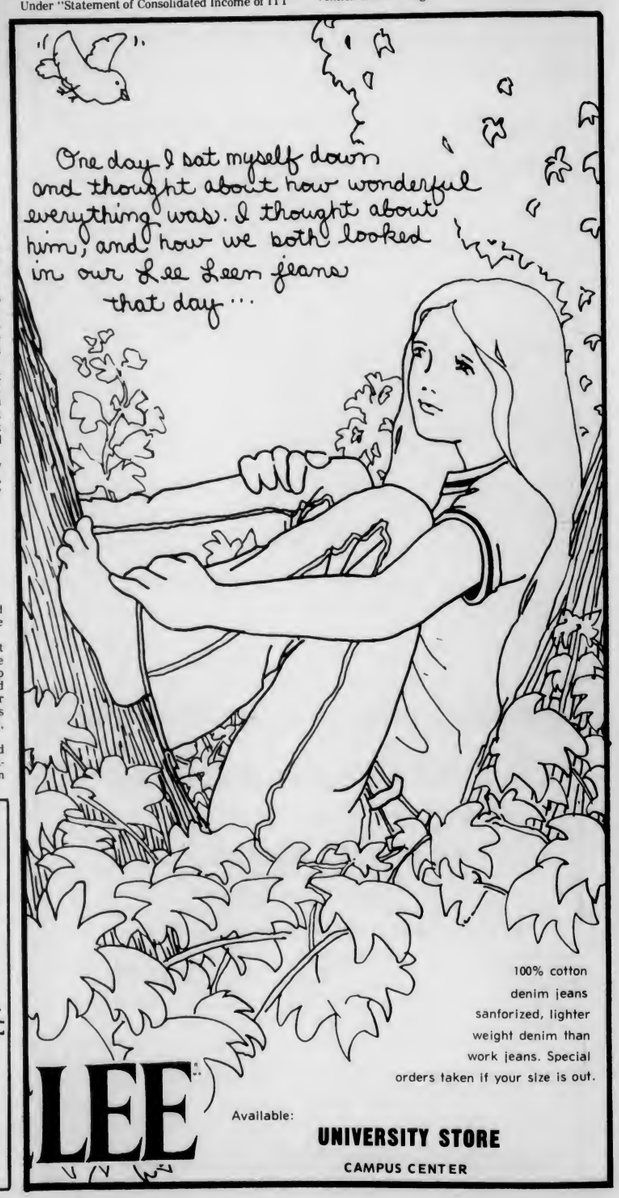
"I asked Mr. McClain to repeat it, which he did," said Kean. "I said, to make no mistake, you mean 12 o'clock today or 12 o'clock midnight?" He said 12 o'clock today...I wrote the name Soledad Brothers down in a notebook."

Under cross-examination by defense attorney Leo Branton, Kean asserted: "I told you exactly what he said."

Recent Fallout Not Hazardous



WASHINGTON (AP) — The government announced Monday that radioactive fallout from the March 18 Communist Chinese nuclear test "temporarily resulted in a slight increase in radiation above normal levels over most of the United States."



But the Atomic Energy ,c-nnission said there was not significant health hazard involved.

"The fallout apparently reached a peak concentration during the last 10 days of March, and at most locations it has already decayed to levels which cannot be detected by the sampling network," the AEC said.

A spokesman said that fallout from the blast-estimated to have packed an explosive wallop equivalent to between 20,000 and 200,000 tons of TNT-entered over the western United States, and was first detected in Washington, Oregon and California.

Then, the fallout cloud traveled eastward, and finally southeastward-so that it was detected in most states.

The UMass Medical School

Blind Politics Leads The Way

(Editor's Note: This is the second installment in a series on the UMass Medical School in Worcester. Yesterday's installment looked at the events leading up to the initial legislative bill in 1962, and of Dr. Lamar Soutter's appointment as the dean. The article also mentioned the numerous offers presented to Soutter as a possible site for construction. The series hopes to expose the human elements, both good and bad, which were at work while the school was being planned and built.)

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

By 1963 the medical school was beginning to be considered less of an institution of higher learning and more as an economic commodity. People were dealing with it as a thing, a material object which would be plopped in a specific area of the state and, once the "on button" was thrown, it would begin churning-out salaries for the staff, miracle cures for the population and prestige for the community which sheltered it.

The reality of the institution's function as a school in which to train and instruct future doctors was lost in a political and economic dialogue. The building became a black monolith, whose inner workings and cares were both alien and unnecessary to the function which these individuals wished it to serve.

To say that Dr. Soutter had perseverance would not do justice to the man. He, personally, had to deal with both the politicians and regional planners, explaining to them the pros and cons of locating the school in their areas, hearing in return only arguments about the fiscal assets to the population and of more prestigious housing available for the faculty.

On Your Mark, Get Set

Following some of the heaviest, sustained bombing by U.S. planes in the history of the war, the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong have launched a major offensive. In the last 4 days they have captured 12 military bases along the DMZ, completely routed significant sections of the ARVN (Army of South Vietnam), and control all but 3 isolated outposts in the crucial province of Quang Tri, South Vietnam. The long trained, expensively equipped army of South Vietnam is in full retreat. Fire Base Pace on the Cambodian border, a mere 85 miles from Saigon, has also been captured in what has clearly been the deepest southern penetration ever made in the Indochina war.

Cloudy weather which has hampered the usually massive U.S. air support that has propped up the ARVN for 3 years, has been a major factor in the success of the liberation forces. "Where do those North Vietnamese get their weather forecasts?" asked an American Colonel.

Vietnamization, the much publicized answer to U.S. involvement in S.E. Asia, is obviously dependent on constant, massive aerial bombardment by the U.S. Air Force and Navy. Recently, publication of the figures on total bombardment was halted by the U.S. military command in South Vietnam, and, at the same time, the U.S.began an indefinite boycott of the Paris Peace Negotiations. The entire 3 year program, designed to maintain U.S. domination through maximum destruction and minimum American casualties, has been seriously shaken by 4 days of cloudy weather, and the determination of the Vietnamese people. It is high time the American people demand an end to the lies, the promises, and the endless justifications for continued U.S. aggression in S.E. Asia.

In other words, let's finally GET THE FUCK OUT!

"Tell The Housewives We Are Continuing Our Fight Against Inflation"

R.F.E. To Be Or Not To Be?

By MATT TACKEFF

To Americans, a free and uncensored media is not something which is appreciated, but merely taken for granted. We have become accustomed to a diverse assortment of books, periodicals, newspapers, and broadcasts which present alternative points of view on almost every issue of concern. It would be difficult, if not impossible, for Americans to contemplate a situation where the media was completely monopolized by the State, and used as an instrument with which to control our every attitude and opinion. But for millions of people living behind the Iron Curtain, this situation is more than a grim fantasy; it is almost a reality, almost because there is an obstacle which prevents the Soviets and their puppet governments from having complete control over the information that their citizens receive. That obstacle is a network of renegade transmitters whose broadcasts, despite Soviet attempts to jam them, effectively puncture the Iron Curtain. This network of transmitters is known as Radio Free Europe, and its subsidiary, Radio Liberty, and their broadcasts are received enthusiastically by millions of Eastern Europeans as a welcomed alternative to the one-sided barrage of Communist propaganda.

The R.F.E. has operated on a semi-private basis since the advent of the "cold war", but it has recently been disclosed that a substantial, and vital, portion of its operation expenses has been funded by the U.S. Government, via the Central Intelligence Agency. Despite U.S. funding, the R.F.E. broadcasts have never been mouthpieces for U.S. policy, and in many instances, R.F.E. commentators have been severely critical of many aspects of U.S. policy.

Despite accusations to the contrary, R.F.E. broadcasts are acknowledged by many as among the most objective and informative in the world. Nevertheless, in the opinion of Senator J. William Fulbright, chairman of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the R.F.E. broadcasts are "cold war relics" whose demise would constitute a major step toward a more effective Detente with the U.S.S.R.

Despite the independent attitudes of the broadcasters, mostly exiles from Communist countries, the ultimate fate of R.F.E. rests with the Congress of the United States, which will have to assume a major responsibility for the future funding of these broadcasts. The cost of funding R.F.E. may seem high to many, but it is actually minimal compared to the amounts of foreign aid that our governments sends to the far corners of the world in an attempt to win friends in other lands. By maintaining R.F.E. as a viable source of information for Eastern Europeans, we are not undertaking another futile attempt to buy allies, since the citizens of the Iron Curtain countries don't have to be "bought." They already look to America with more respect and good will than do many Americans, despite attempts by their governments to depict Americans as racist and imperialist.

Unfortunately, many Senators and Congressman agree with Senator Fulbright's mistaken belief that we can build stronger bridges between East and West if only we acquiesce to the Soviet demand that R.F.E. be discontinued. The truth of the matter is that if we help dig the grave of Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, we won't be building stronger bridges. By placating the Soviet demand for the abolition of R.F.E., we will be blowing up one bridge which has been a much more genuine bond of friendship than all of the Summit Meetings, cultural exchanges, champagne and caviar banquets put together.

Senator Fulbright's opposition to R.F.E. is no doubt a serious obstacle to the funding of R.F.E., but a large enough response from concerned citizens can be a powerful force in convincing Congress that Americans believe that our attempts to negotiate with the U.S.S.R. should not come at the expense of the Eastern Europeans. It is imperative that Americans who are concerned over the fate of Radio Free Europe express this concern to their Congressmen, Senators, and even the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Shame On You, Burt Reynolds

WASHINGTON--I am constantly asked by lecture audiences, "Is there anything too sacred for you to make fun of?" Up until this month I have been able to honestly say, "No, there isn't."

But that was before Cosmopolitan magaizine ran a nude pull-out photograph of actor Burt Reynolds. I must admit that I can see no humor in this at all, and I can only express a sense of outrage against Helen Gurley Brown, the editor, and Mr. Reynolds who conspired in this dastardly act.

I have always contended the male body is the most beautiful thing that ever walked on earth. The Bible tells us that God first created woman, but since it was the first human being He ever worked on, He obviously made some mistakes. For one thing there were too many curves to it and it lacked symmetry. So He went back to his drawing board and took all the bumps out. What was left was a beautifully straight proportioned body from head to toe, which everyone who saw it called a "work of art." God was so pleased with His creation that He decided to call it "man."

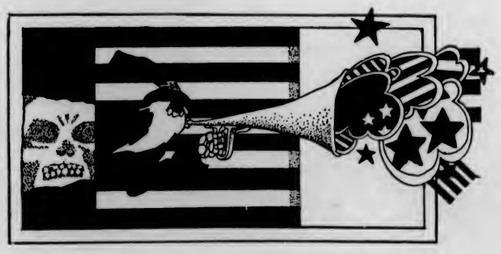
Since time immemorial, the male body has been glorified and worshiped in every society. It has been reversed in primitive cultures as well as our most civilized countries. While our mores have permitted the exploitation of the female body in paintings and photographs, the male body, up until the Cosmopolitan pull-out, was considered too sacred to show in public.

Now that Mr. Reynolds has posed in the nude, it's a whole new ball game.

The civil libertarians and the Women's Lib bleeding hearts may ask, "What is wrong with displaying a nude male body in a national magazine as long as it is done with taste and discretion?"

The answer to this question is that by cashing in on the public's appetite for sensationalism, we are making the male nothing more than a sex object to be leered at and ogled by frenzied women. We are appealing to the most prurient interests of a large segment of the female population, which has always treated men as second-class citizens. By denigrating the male body we are just adding to the age-old problem of lust, which men have been victims of for centuries.

But probably worse than all this is that now that the barriers have been broken, no one knows where it will end. The American female appetite has been whetted by Cosmopolitan. It is not inconceivable that before long women will demand nude photographs not only of their favorite actors, but also their politicians. Richard Nixon in the nude? Hubert Humphrey in the nude? George Wallace in the nude? Mayor Richard Daley in the nude? Henry Kissinger in the nude? You say it's not possible. I say everything's possible if there's money in it.



I can even conceive of the day when they will be running nude photographs of columnists to go with their columns. Joe Alsop in the nude? Bill Buckley in the nude?

You can laugh now, but when it happens, remember you heard it here first.

Spiro Agnew has said many times that this is a permissive society, and nothing dramatizes this more than seeing Burt Reynolds in the buff. The question that every woman must ask herself is, "Would you want your brother to pose for Cosmopolitan magazine?"

I apologize for being serious today, but there are times when something just doesn't lend itself to humor. The matter of male nudity cannot be treated frivolously, particulary when so many of us have so much to lose.

'THEY GOT YOU TOGETHER AGAIN, I SEE . . . '

Letters To The Editor

From The Other Side Of The Wall

To the Editor:

Important things are happening in Federal prisons which have been almost ignored by the press. There are work strikes and prisoner-based movements in a number of prisons which deserve more attention from the public and support by concerned citizens.

Let me sketch developments in one prison--the Federal Correctional Institute at Danbury, Conn. In addition to familiar grievances concerning food, medical care, access to recreational and educational resources (Danbury F.C.I. is better than most in these areas, but still lacking), inmates focused on their powerlessness in decision-making, the work programs which they must take part in, and the control or denial of their communication with the world beyond the prison walls.

1. Inmates want to have a responsible, effective part in decisions and programs which effect their lives directly. They demand a permanent form of representative participation, negotiation, and grievance-resolution in all vital areas. Further, they specified that certain guards be suspended for brutal and/or racist behavior toward inmates.

2. All inmates must work. None is afforded the minimal rights or compensation which labor is supposedly guaranteed in America. They are a slave-labor force. Not only are there a full range of housekeeping jobs without pay for all inmates. There is an industrial component at the F.C.I. which brings profits to the government (Overall, Federal Prison Industries earned more than $58 million in 1970.) but which pays its workers from 17¢ to 46¢ an hour. (One of the main products at Danbury F.C.I. is electronic cable for combat missiles.) The inmates demand higher wages and some form of collective bargaining.

3. Cruel and arbitrary rules restrict an inmate's access by letter or visit to family, friends, others in the outside world who might bring comfort, support, resources for rehabilitation, redress for mistreatment. The Federal prison system promises change on some of these rules but the effect is still one of caging men away from society in unnecessarily forced isolation.

At Danbury, 70% of the inmates went on work strike Feb. 28. Three "leaders" were put in the hole. Next day and for a week, there was a solid work stoppage by 100% of the some 750 men at the F.C.I. Under pressure and threat, men began returning to work the second week in March. More of the strikers were taken to the hole. By March 10, fifty inmates were in solitary. A majority of them are still there, still holding firm on the issues for which they refused to work. The only point on which the warden has yielded so far is to permit smoking in the visiting room. Brave and committed men, black and white, older cons and young war protesters, have stood united in this episode. They need public backing and lobbying pressure in their struggle. A PRISONER SUPPORT GROUP has been formed. Daily vigils continue outside Danbury F.C.I. Anyone who wants to get involved should call one of the following numbers: (Area Code 203) 376-9970 or 754-3542.

Keep It Up

To the Editor:

I want to tell you and your fellow students how much I welcomed the opportunity to speak to all of you earlier this month. The issues raised merit real concern, and the interest of students in such matters is invaluable to the State.

We have begun a worthwhile dialogue, and I feel it will be important to continue.

I had agreed to give further answers to a number of quesions put to me at Amherst. Please convey my replics to the proper people.

First, I will visit the State school at Belchertown. I hope to be able to make the trip in the very near future. In addition, I will make certain that those students at UMass who have been closely involved will be informed of the date beforehand.

Second, in regard to the food budget at Belchertown, I did not cut the actual budget; rather, I cut the request forfunds under next year's budget. The portion of the budget allotted to Belchertown for food was actually increased from $260,000 to $288,000.

The major reason I have trimmed their request for funds is that we are planning to move as many of the residents as we can into community-based programs as soon as possible. Medical Reviews are underway at the School and we hope that this will provide us with some preliminary information which will help us reduce the population at Belchertown.

Students at UMass have already seen the community-based concept in action. You participated in our experiment with youthful offenders--and made it a success. I want to extend the same kind of care to other children who are dependent upon the State. I do not believe that maintaining custodial institutions, even of the highest quality, is the proper or most effective way to treat any of our children.

Third, I have checked my figures on the faculty-student ratio at UMass. The official figures, according to the State's Personnel and Budget Bureaus, are: 13.3 students to every faculty member in 1970-71; and 14.6 to 1 as the proposed ratio under the new budget. Both these figures are below the maximum of 15 to 1 agreed to some years ago.

To answer more fully many of the questions students have regarding my proposed changes in tuition and scholarships at UMass, I am enclosing a fact sheet and a copy of my special message to the Legislature on tuition reform.

Again, let me thank you and, through you, all of those who participated in a most interesting evening.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,
Francis Sargent

To the Editor:

The Student Union Governing Board has been experiencing many internal changes within the last couple of months. These times have been difficult for some Board members, the administration, and various other personnel that have been integrally involved in our negotiations.

Larry Ladd is an active member of SUG Board's Reorganizational Task Force and has helped us in our recent negotiations concerning the by-laws. He has a wealth of experience in dealing with the administration which will be a prime function of the new duties of President.

John Hogan this year has had the major role in appointing SUG Board members. His appointments have been a good part of the reason that the Governing Board is just now becoming a functioning entity. John Hogan has always had some objective advice to give us whenever we asked for his assistance.

Therefore, we, as officers of the Student Union Governing Board endorse Larry Ladd for the position of President of the Student Government Association and John Hogan for the position of Speaker of the Student Senate.

Barry Cohen, Chairperson, SUG Board
Lisa Mandell, Vice Chairperson, SUG Board

All Is Not Lost

To the Editor:

The meeting for foreign students in Sylvan under the general auspices of the Health Education & the Human Relations Center, on Monday 20th March, was attended by 18 students who heard the following speak:

Dr. Daniel Clapp — Health Services, on Health Services & Student Insurance, plans and methods; N. Haridasan — on Student Advisory Board; Mari Earnest — Senator, on Student Senate & student involement, authority & power, possible avenues for voicing ideas; Leslie Richardson — Area Deputy from McNamara, on Area Government, & student participation therein; and Ron Platt — Human Relations Center, on H.R.C.'s aims and purposes, dorm & student interaction.

The aims of this meeting were threefold: to show the foreign students in Sylvan that people here (specifically Health Services, Student Senate & Sylvan Area - as three important sources) care for them, 2. that they, too, can take an active interest & participation in what happens on campus, & 3. that this is an education for them for their own good, in bringing primarily what the Health Services & Student Insurance plan cover. We think these have been fulfilled.

This meeting supplements, in a way, the Health Education column in the Daily Collegian (March 10th); and is an outcome of the Student Advisory Board & the Subcommittee on Student Insurance. Its effectiveness lies in the fact that those who attended would be directly benefitted; any others would gain only if they made an effort to know from those present the details covered in the meeting.

For too long there has been an uncomfortable mood of apathy and disinterest, the this-is-not-for-me-kind-of- attitude among students, who then, when trouble falls or something affects them, wake up, and either gripe with a why-wasn't-I-informed-of-this-earlier or weep.

Nevertheless, 'all is not lost', for "what manner of man having a hundred sheep and losing one, does not leave the ninety and nine, and search for the one who did go astray?"

If in trouble call the Infirmary (5-2671), Health Education (5-2492), Human Relations Center (5-0770), Room To Move (5-0400), OR Campus Security (5-2121). Don't forget your Head of Residence or the Foreign Student Adviser (5-2843). They are there to help. Finally, we would like to say a grateful "thank-you" to all participants who helped in this meeting.

Violence On Brain: Lobotomies On Rise

NEW YORK (LNS) — "While capital punishment is progressively being banished in civilized lands, many of these same nations are witnessing a resurgence of what can properly be described as partial murder of the mind," wrote Dr. Peter R. Breggin, a Washington psychiatrist at the beginning of March in the Washington Post. Breggin has recently done much to try to expose the increasingly frequent use of lobotomies or brain surgery to control such varied people as "overactive" children, addicts, depressed housewives, prisoners, homosexuals, alcoholics and old people.

Breggin defines a lobotomy as "a deadening operation that involves deliberate, irreversible damaging of an individual's brain for the purpose of altering behavior that others have deemed undesirable."--To make "violent' people docile. A lobotomy is a cutting of part of the front section of the brain which controls such human functions as insight, foresight, creativity, sensitivity, imagination, sense of self, emotional responsiveness, and abstract reasoning." A pro-lobotomy study said, "The patients (after lobotomy) tend intellectually to be more empty, with restricted interests and simpler satisfactions." Another researcher found "the disappearance of dreams as well as day dreams."

Since 1938 when the technique was developed, 50,000 lobotomies have been performed in the United States. In the mid-fifties the use of lobotomies seemed to taper off, mainly because their role had been replaced by increasing use of a variety of chemical tranquilizers. Walter Freeman, a doctor who Breggin calls the "dean of the lobotomists," said in 1965 that he felt that his early methods of big cuts in the brain "were too damaging to be employed in any but the most chronically and severely disturbed patients." But he listed new methods of destroying brain tissue including the injection of liquid butane or "the patients own blood," ultra sonic beams, electricity to produce tissue searing heat, implanted electrodes through which current is sent until the surgeon hears "bubbles of steam escaping," gold needles left in place "for several months while weak currents were passed at intervals", radioactive seed implantations, beams from a 185-million volt cyclotron, and traditional cutting, with finer, more precise tools.

Currently over 600 lobotomies are performed a year in the U.S. (The technique is practiced all over the world-- there was an international conference in Denmark in 1970.) In the U.S. they are mostly performed on indigent patients--those in mental hospitals or other institutions who often can't or don't resist "consenting" to the operation.

Lobotomies have been performed on children as young as 4 years old (by Freeman working with another doctor).

At a conference at the beginning of March in Houston on "Neural Bases of Violence and Aggression", attended by doctors from all over the world, a Dr. Sano from Tokyo was pleased to report that one of his best cases was a child who "became markedly calm, passive, and tractable, showing decreased spontaneity."

Another pair of doctors, Orlando J. Andy, and Marion F. Jurko of the University of Mississippi perform lobotomies mainly on institutionalized children who had "tremors, twitches and abnormal body movements, were explosive and impulsive." One nine-year-old had holes drilled through his skull and electrodes passed deep into the brain. He had another operation nine months later and he was allowed to return to a "special education school" but a year later his symptoms reappeared and he was given another operation. Then, the doctor reported the boy suffered "impaired memory for recent events" and he is "much more irritable, negativistic and combative." Two more incisions were made and the doctor proudly reported, "The patient has again adjusted to his environment and has displayed marked improvement in behavior and memory. Intellectually, however, the patient is deteriorating."

At the Kinsington Ontario Psychiatric Hospital, the hospital wouldn't allow doctors to operate on men but allowed them to operate on the brains of 17 women instead. After all, as Breggin points out, "Men couldn't support a family after a lobotomy, but a woman can do housework." In fact, Dr. Freeman reports that lobotomized women make excellent housekeepers.

The political implications of lobotomies are the scariest of all. In 1967, after the Detroit riots, three Boston doctors, Frank Ervin, Vernon Mark and William Sweet, wrote in the Journal of the American Medical Association that if social, economic and racial deprivation were responsible for the riots, then everyone in the ghetto would have been involved. They said that only a small portion committed "violent acts." They went on to suggest a preventive screening program to detect brain disease and to institute preventive treatment for potential rioters.

Mark and Ervin co-authored a book called "Violence and the Brain" in which they propose the development of an "early warning" system which would detect persons who could be expected to exceed "acceptable violence". Acceptable violence is defined as "the controlled minimum necessary action to prevent personal physical injury or wanton destruction of property. The definition, the authors assure us, "would apply equally to police or public authorities as well as to politically activist groups (students, racial, etc.) and all violent acts that did not fit into this category would be 'unacceptable.' " Those that broke the rules would be treated by some violence-inhibiting method like brain surgery.

Ervin, Mark and Sweet are all associated with a newly founded organization called the Neuro Research Foundation of Boston which receives grants from the National Institute of Mental Health and the Justice Department's Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA) (the same agency that funds local police departments and helps equip them with riot control equipment) totalling at least $600,000. Included is a $108,931 grant from the LEAA to study "The incidence of violent disorders in a state penitentiary for men; estimate their prevalence in a non-incarcerated population; and improve, develop and test the usefulness of electro-physiological and neurophysiological techniques for the detections of such disorders in routine examinations."

King Memorial Lecture Series To Begin

Amherst, Mass.--The Martin Luther King, Jr., Memorial Lecture Series at the University of Massachusetts will present three events April 4,5, and 7 dedicated to the memory of Dr. King and emphasizing the work of black artists.

April 4, Imamu Baraka (LeRoi Jones), black poet, playwright and politician, will discuss "The Civil Rights Movement--Dr. King, and the Present Black Struggle" in the Campus Center Auditorium.

On April 5, Edmund Gaither, Curator of the National Center for the Afro-American Artist in Boston, will present a slide and lecture on "New Dimensions in Black Social Art" in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

On April 7, the series will end with a dance presentation by George Howard and the Primitive Dance Company of the National Center for the Afro-American Artist, also in the Campus Center Auditorium.

All events will begin at 8 p.m. and are open to the public without charge.

Baraka became nationally known during the mid-60's for his books, plays and poetry. Some of his works include: "Blues People," "Dutchman," "The Baptism" and "The Toilet", "Black Art," and "Slave Ship." He has done graduate work at Columbia University and the New School for Social Research and has also taught poetry and drama at those schools, the University of Buffalo, and at San Francisco State. He also is the founder of the Black Arts Repertory Theatre School in Harlem. Among his awards have been the Whitney Fellowship, 1963, and the Yoruba Academy, 1965.

His Committee for a Unified Newark not only gained a foothold on Newark but was also an important factor in the planning of a nationwide attempt to consolidate black political power thru the recent political convention in Gary, Indiana. Imamu Baraka was the program chairman of the event and was very instrumental in setting the political direction for the national black community.

Gaither will bring with him part of a collection of 9,000 slides which he has been assembling at the museum to be an archive of black artists--their work and careers. Gaither's many other projects include running an art school for inner city youth in Boston and writing and researching.

Gaither was born in South Carolina, graduated with honors from Morehouse College and holds an M.A. from Brown University. He is currently writing an entry on Afro-American Art for the Negro Reference Book and has been invited to write a book for secondary schools by the New York Graphic Society.

Some of the National Center's permanent art collection will be on display during the week in the Art Gallery of the Student Union.

Directed by George Howard, the Primitive Dance Company of the National Center for the Afro-American Artist has educated and entertained audiences throughout New England for several years on stage and on television.

Howard is an international authority on folk dancing who has combined an active dancing career with performing and research while growing up in the West Indies. The company includes dancers, drummers, and musicians.

Student Mobe Sponsors Sale

The Student Mobilization Committee will sponsor a rummage sale in the concourse level of the Campus Center on Thursday and Friday of this week. The purpose of the sale is to help alleviate the substantial debt incurred by the anti-war movement during the fall of 1971. If you have clothes, albums, pipes or anything else that you would like to donate to the sale, you may do so by bringing them to the Franklin Room on the second floor of the Student Union or by calling 545-1366 so that a member of the Mobe will pick them up when and where you prefer. If you have nothing to give, come to the sale where objects will be sold essentially for what you can afford.

Mt.Holyoke To Start Experiment

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass.--President David B. Truman has announced that Mount Holyoke College will join with nine other undergraduate institutions and the School of Law of Columbia University in an experiment to reduce the time necessary to complete college and law school while adding a new dimension to the training of lawyers. Close cooperation between Mount Holyoke and the Law School will make it possible for students to complete the requirements for the bachelor's and law degrees in six years instead of seven. The potential savings, both institutional and personal--a year's tuition and professional earnings--will amount to approximately $20,000 per student. In addition to saving a year, the students, while in law school, will also take four graduate courses in a related discipline over the three-year period. The program aims to graduate lawyers able to bring to bear the insights of economics, sociology, psychology and other fields of learning.

The other particpating colleges are Barnard, Claremont Men's College, Columbia College, Columbia University School of General Studies, Grinnell, Morehouse, Princeton, Rice and Wesleyan. Each of these colleges will nominate two students who are now in their junior year. These students, once accepted, will begin their legal studies leading to a Doctor of Jurisprudence Degree at Columbia this September. After completing their normal first-year law courses, they will take, in conjunction with their law school work, twelve hours of graduate study in a discipline chosen by them and approved by their college. Each student will receive the Bachelor's Degree from his or her undergraduate college after completing an agreed-upon proportion of law school and undergraduate work. At the end of their third year in Law School they will receive the Doctor of Students nominated for this experimental program at the Columbia Law School will be those who have demonstrated, at a relatively early stage in their academic careers, a high degree of intellectual competence, an interest in both law and another discipline, and a desire to pursue this interest while developing their capacity to handle legal concepts and materials.

The students will not be the only beneficiaries. Many examples of the mutual enrichment of law and another discipline exist. It is anticipated that research into law as a social institution will be materially advanced by the training of students to high levels of competence in law and the social sciences and other fields.

The interdisciplinary cooperative aspects of this experiment are three-fold. In addition to cooperation between the colleges and the Columbia School of Law, the graduate divisions of Columbia University will participate by counseling and approving the student's program.

The names of the students who have been selected will be jointly announced by Mount Holyoke College and Columbia in April.

New Role For Women In GM's Equal Opportunity

DETROIT (AP)-Some of the women employes at General Motors' Buick plant thought the company had carried equality and male-female integration too far recently when they spotted a guard's uniform cap in the ladies' room.

The cap, it turned out, belonged to a female watchman.

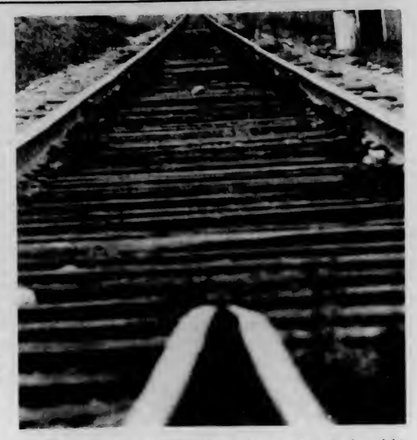
The incident underlined the new role being played by women in that traditionally have been male jobs at GM plants.

A Buick spokesman said the plant's watchwoman does virtually the same work as the male watchmen, working the same hours, including the night shift. She also is adept at the art of self-defense, he added.

Women at GM also have moved into the previously all-male fields of engineering and industrial administration in greater numbers this year than ever before.

Although established 50 years ago, General Motors Institute had graduated only one woman up to last year, when two women were in the graduation class.

This year, 27 young women are enrolled as regular students at the institute. Another is enrolled in a special preparatory program designed to upgrade a student's skills in math and science so she may enter the regular curriculum. Their numbers are expected to increase.



GM spokesman generally acknowledge the company hasn't hired many, if any, women for top jobs in the past because there weren't many with degrees in engineering and business administration.

They point out that women normally didn't enter those fields.

But the new generation has produced such students as Barbara Sims, one of only nine women enrolled in the industrial administration curriculum.

A heavy equipment operator, Miss Sims is president of the senior class at GMI. She is both the first black and the first woman ever elected to the top class officer by fellow students.

Miss Sims is sponsored by Terex, GM's earth-moving equipment manufacturer. She says it is easier to operate one of the gigantic earth-movers than to drive a car, because of the separate controls for the front and rear ends.

The long trip back to campus after this past spring vacation might have seemed endless and uneventful but heck, look at all that we still have to look forward to. (MDC photo by Stephen Schuster)

'The Game' Winnings Taxable

BOSTON...Persons who purchase tickets in the Massachusetts Lottery, scheduled to be drawn in April, were reminded today by William E. Williams, district director of the Internal Revenue Service in Massachusetts, that all winnings in the lottery are taxable.

"Proceeds from lotteries are gambling winnings, according to the Internal Revenue Code, and must be included in your income and reported on Form 1040. In addition, federal law requires that each individual must currently make a declaration of his estimated tax when his gross income includes more than $500 from sources other than wages and estimated tax is $100 or more," he said.

The Federal tax official said that winners may contact the nearest Internal Revenue Service office either by telephone or in person for advice concerning the reporting of winnings.

Earth Week Proclaimed

United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim has declared his support of Earth Week, 1972, saying that the event "can provide a resounding expression of public opinion in support of the right environmental policies," Sen. Gaylord Nelson announced Friday.

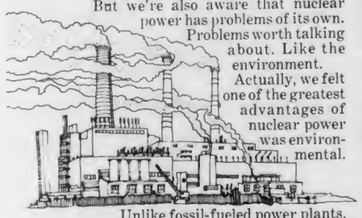
In announcing the Secretary General's formal statement in support of the April 17-23 observance, Nelson pointed out that in addition to this international endorsement, Earth Week has now been proclaimed by the President and proclamations have been issued or are planned by at least 45 Governors.

More than 100 Mayors have issued Earth Week proclamations already for the April 17-23 observance, and many schools across the country are making plans to highlight their environmental education studies during that period.

Describing Earth Week as a model, Waldheim cited the importance of worldwide, long term efforts to preserve the environment.

The next major environmental event will be the United Nations' first worldwide conference on the human environment, scheduled for early June in Stockholm, Sweden.

Nelson will attend the United Nations conference as a member of the United States delegation.



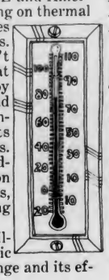
Earth Week's primary purpose is continuing education, an occasion for community level environmental inventory and review, special public and media reports on environmental progress and needs, and strengthening environmental education.

This year, Earth Week also provides citizens groups the chance to gain a commitment for environmental action in political party platforms and to assure that the issue is a top priority in the programs for candidates for public office.

Nelson is the founder and organizer of Earth Day, 1970, and the subsequent Earth Weeks.

Why doesn't General Electric talk about thermal pollution when they talk about nuclear power plants?

General Electric has been talking nuclear power plants ever since we pioneered them in the fifties. And we think they can help solve America's energy problems in the 70's and 80's. But we're also aware that nuclear power has problems of its own. Problems worth talking about. Like the environment.



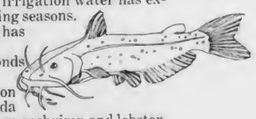
Actually, we felt one of the greatest advantages of nuclear power was environmental.

Unlike fossil-fueled power plants, there is no smoke to pollute the air.

But like fossil-fueled plants, there is warmed water released to surrounding waterways.

Cooling it.

We recognize thermal pollution as a serious problem. And GE and America's utilities are working on thermal problems at nuclear sites on a plant-by-plant basis.



Many people don't realize, for example, that utilities are required by federal law to design and operate their plants within temperature limits prescribed by the states.

So utilities are spending millions of dollars on dilution control systems, cooling ponds and cooling towers to comply.

But, in addition, utilities are sponsoring basic research on heat exchange and its effect on aquatic life. More than 97 utilities have been financially involved in over 300 such studies.

Good effects?

It's been found, in some cases, adding heat to water can actually be beneficial. Warm irrigation water has extended growing seasons. Warm water has created new wintering ponds along waterfowl migration routes. Florida is using it to grow shrimp and lobster. In Texas, it's increasing the weight of commercial catfish by as much as 500%.

Work to be done.

Listing these benefits is not to beg the issue. Thermal effects remain a tough problem to solve at many sites. Each plant must be considered individually, in its own environment, and this is being done.

General Electric, the utilities and environmentalists will continue to work hard. Because we think the advantages of nuclear power far outweigh the disadvantages.

Why are we running this ad?

It's one ad of a series on the problems of man and his environment today. And the ways technology is helping to solve them.

The problems of our environment (not just nuclear power problems) concern us because they will affect the future of this country and this planet. We have a stake in that future. As businessmen. And, simply, as people.

If you are concerned too, we'd like to hear from you. Write General Electric, Dept. 901-CN, 570 Lexington Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022.

Allende: U.S. WM Wampers Chilean Reforms

SANTIAGO, CHILE (LNS) March 4, in a speech in northern Chile, President Salvador Allende said that a "diabolical plan" against the popular government is in progress, and that the offensive launched by the opposition majority in Congress coincides "with an international campaign against Chile." The present situation, says the President, constitutes "the most difficult moments of our history."

Indeed, the situation in Chile is very tense. Talk of a civil war is common, although so far it is just talk. The reason? The Unidad Popular (UP), Chile's recently elected socialist government, is being threatened by a Congress controlled by the right wing opposition.

On February 19, the Congress passed legislation limiting the government's power to expropriate the large Chilean monopolies. This legislation represents a challenge to essential parts of the government's program. The UP was elected by the Chilean people, and takes seriously its duty to fulfill its program. The program plans the expropriation of the major Chilean monopolies, and their conversion into state enterprises run for the benefit of all the people and not just a privileged minority.

Expropriated industries are run by a Central Council composed of six workers and six government representatives. Control of the key monopolies represents control of the economy; it is essential that the economy be controlled by the people and not by a few members of the upper class. Congress, with its new law, is threatening to bring the government to a halt.

In its first year in power the UP has been rapidly expropriating the big land holdings, has nationalized the American-owned copper industry, mainly owned by Anaconda and Kennecot (Chile's biggest industry), and has bought up the stocks of most of the privately owned banks. The right wing has realized that the government is serious in its plans to reclaim the country's wealth. This year the UP began its plan to expropriate the big monopolies.

As President Allende put it to journalist Saul Landau recently, "The process (of the solution of the economic problems and a change in the societal structure) has as its essential foundation, first to recover the basic wealth of Chile and put it in the hands of the Chileans.

"We are not talking about appropriating or usurping the properties from the owners, for example, the copper mine owners. But if you have to deal that way you have to say: well, look, mister, how much did you invest in this company and how much have you taken out? And I can tell you that these companies, in the last 42 years, have taken $3,800,000,000 out of Chile. And what was their initial investment? Ten million dollars?

"We are a country which has to sell cheap and buy at high prices, because we pay manufactured article prices in countries where people have a very, very high standard of living. So what do we want? We just want to take advantage of the surplus of the Chilean economy to develop our own economy and to solve basic problems."

In January Allende publicized a list of the 91 major industries that would be the target of expropriation. Mindful of the government's past successes, the Congress quickly passed a law limiting the state's power to expropriate. The law says that each industry will require a special law which will have to go through Congress, that the government can no longer intervene and expropriate industries in which production has been halted by the owners. Furthermore, all industries expropriated, and all stocks bought up by the government since October 14, 1971, must be returned to their previous owners.

In other words, the law is retroactive. October 14 was the date the law first began to be discussed in Congress. Until now, the government has been using an almost forgotten law from the 1930s to intervene in key industries where labor disputes have halted production, or where owners have halted production because they wanted to sabotage the economy. This law, decree 520, is to be repealed by the new legislation.

The other method that the government has been using to expropriate industries has been to buy up the stock; this method is to be curtailed by the requirement that each expropriation must be separately approved by Congress. Thus, the new legislation threatens to slow down or stop the process of expropriation.

President Allende will veto the new law and then it will go back to Congress. The government says Congress needs two-thirds majority to pass the law after a presidential veto. The opposition says it needs only a simple majority. (The law is a constitutional reform and the legal procedures for constitutional reforms are contradictory.)

The opposition will reject Allende's veto by a majority but not by a two thirds majority because they don't have the votes. The government says that it will then send the dispute to the Constitutional Tribunal, (a special court which handles disputes between the President and the Congress when they concern the Constitution.) The opposition says that the Constitutional Tribunal which in its three previous rulings has favored the government, has no jurisdiction, since the Constitution is straightforward about this matter.

When this point is reached, the conflict is seemingly irresoluble. Negotions between the UP and the main opposition party, the Christian Democrats, broke down when the Minister of the Economy, Pedro Vuskovic, got into his jeep and went out and expropriated several more factories. President Allende, in a speech on March 10, gave Vuskovic full support.

This crisis comes, coincidentally, just when the United States is coming down hard on Chile.

In secretary Rogers' message to Congress on March 7, he reiterated President Nixon's pledge that "the U.S. will have with Chile whatever kind of relationship that country desires."

But then, in speaking of Chile's nationalization of the North American copper companies, he said: "We have repeatedly expressed our desire for a solution mutually acceptable to both sides, but we have been deceived and profoundly disturbed by the finding of the Chilean government which expressed that, except for some modest sums in two small holdings the government does not have to pay compensation for the expropriation."

At the same time Rogers was speaking to Congress, Chile was trying to re-negotiate her large foreign debt in Paris. The principal creditor nation is the United States, and the yankees are calling for very strict economic restrictions for the Chilean economy if the debt is to be successfully renegotiated.

The United States, which willingly lent money to previous Chilean governments in exchange for a cooperative attitude towards the copper companies, is now refusing to extend credits to the new socialist government so it can pay off its debts. The U.S. is asking that Chile agree to the guidelines suggested by the International Monetary Fund, a U.S.-controlled international bank, which has made a proposal that if accepted, would severely hinder the Chilean government's ability to carry out its ambitious program.

Chile's government cannot carry out its program of investments in projects for public welfare if it accepts the proposed restrictions, and yet the re-negotiation of the foreign debt is indespensible. Meanwhile, in New York, U.S. banks have placed embargoes on Chilean money in the United States, in accordance with a ruling issued by a New York judge in favor of the Anaconda copper company which claims that Chile owes it money. The timing of all these events coincides nicely with the Chilean Congress' campaign to halt the government.

The issue should become clearer in the next few weeks. At stake in the Congressional dispute is the control of the Chilean economy. According to the Society of Industrial Development, the organization of big private business interests, the government new controls 25% of the economy and with the control of the 91 industries to be expropriated it would control 80%.

The dispute between the ruling class and the new socialist government is coming to the crunch. Perhaps some last minute negotiations can delay the confrontation, but as of now, no solution is in sight.

The left claims that the opposition is threatening the country with a civil war and flagrantly violating the Constitution by denying jurisdiction to the Constitutional Tribunal. The right claims that the government is violating the Constitution by illegally expropriating major industries. The battle is so far being fought with legal weapons, in the Congress and the courts, but it is definitely threatening to spill over into the streets and factories.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

John Hays Hammond, Jr., a renowned inventor who held over 800 patents, once explained that he attributed much of his original thinking of factors in his horoscope "I was born with a strong Aries emphasis," Hammond declared.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look beyond surface indications. Strike at heart of matters. Be direct. Good lunar aspect coincides now with chance to make constructive future gains. Gain shown through written word. Publish and advertise.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Recent money dispute with mate, partner can be settled. Key is to overcome temptation to be petty. If this you do, the sky could be the limit. You feel lighter. A burden has been lifted.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasize ability to be versatile. Let others show their hands. Be a counterpuncher. If receptive, you gain valuable information. Contractual obligation will be clarified. Past efforts will pay dividends.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are on steadier course. Minor snags are eliminated. Co worker, associate becomes ally. Be thorough in approach. Don't play games where security is involved. Keep health resolutions. Avoid excesses.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Attention to children is emphasized. Some desires are fulfilled. Creative energy is expended. There is possibility of change of scenery. By analytical. Find reasons for recent happenings. Study and learn.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent on affairs relating to home, domestic situation property. Money changes hands. Be sure you are not shortchanged. Family member makes demands. Be attentive, fair and diplomatic. Then you gain.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid becoming involved in wild goose chase. Many are prone now to make extravagant promises. Key is to select quality. Strive to ascertain facts. Leave guesswork to others. Gossipy neighbor or associate should be ignored.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Get right and permission from authoritative source. Stick to conservative course. Applies especially where funds are concerned. Opportunity is on horizon. Don't tie up assets. Be ready to wheel and deal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent on personality, appearance, original ideas. Take initiative. Make new starts in different directions. Be independent and direct. Cycle is high and your judgment is apt to be on target. Act accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Behind scenes activity is stressed. Air complaints. Bring into open your needs, desires. Unique organization can aid if you confide. You may feel confined. Realize this is but temporary.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friend displays remarkable facility for ESP. Be receptive. One who confides hunch is apt to be correct. Take advantage of inside information. You receive meaningful compliment. Show appreciation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Business, special honors, reputation are highlighted. Expand horizons. Realize there is room for you at top. Display confidence. Socialize. You could make contact with one who will aid and comfort.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY many feel you are too forceful, direct. Others, however, revere your basic honesty. You are due for added recognition. But know difference between publicity and notoriety. Avoid the latter. August stands out as perhaps your most significant month this year.

V-Ballers Farewell Against Ohio State

On Wednesday March 23rd, the UMass volleyball team had been invited to participate in a tri-meet at Springfield College, with host team S.C. and mighty Ohio State.

It was probably the greatest honor paid to the young UMass club to play against the Buckeyes, who travelled all the way from Columbus for the occasion. Ohio State is one of the four teams that will play in the NCAA volleyball finals at Los Angeles late this Spring.

A partisan crowd of about 1,000 watched probably the best game ever played in the East Coast, when O.S. and S.C. took the field. The Buckeyes, big and powerful, completely dominated play and easily won the first two games 15-5 and 15-4. But a fired up Springfield team who had beaten UMass three times this season, came storming back to tie the best of five series 2-2, by winning the next two games 17-15 and 15-13, before bowing at the final game 15-8.

After the UMass players had watched Springfield being destroyed by Ohio State, the last thing they wanted to do was to take the field next and face the mighty Buckeyes, especially since they were missing three of their starters (Madden, Sibson and Wilson)...

Before the Redmen had been able to serve three times, the score read 11-0 Ohio State. By the end of the first game, the Redmen were proud of having scored four points: final score 15-4, O.S.

But in the second game things changed drastically. The Redmen, inspired by the cheers of their bench, consisting of one substitute player and the team manager, took an early 4-2 lead. Behind some solid spiking by Paul Slack (2nd team All New England) and Tom Fearing, and some excellent blocking on the net by captain Yorgos Courmouzis (1st team All New England Selection), who started at the setter's position for the first time this season, they kept pouring it on Ohio State.

To the surprise of everyone and especially to the UMass players, the end of the second game found UMass on top 15-5, thus tieing the series 1-1.

The third game was a hard fought battle that saw Ohio State come on top this time 15-9. But by that time it was past 11 p.m. and everybody felt like going home after four hours and a half of volleyball. It was then decided that there was no time for Springfield to play UMass, and furthermore there was no time for Ohio State and UMass to complete their best of five series. So Ohio State was awarded the victory in a best of three series. Final score: O.S. 2-UMass 1.

One of the most significant outcomes of this game, was the ability of the UMass club, which was established only last November, to play as an equal against a team that has been in existence for nine years-six years as varisty-and undefeated this year within the United States. But even more significant was the observation of this team's improvement within a four month period, especially the play of Paul Slack, Rich Lousararian and Mark Star, who started for the first time this season, considering that these three players had not played power volleyball before in their lives until they joined the club.

The UMass volleyball club will be playing in the United States Volleyball Association Region I championships in Hartford, starting April 15th.

Minor League Majors

The suggestion by Atlanta's Bill Bartholomay that the major league baseball season begin as scheduled Wednesday with minor league players replacing big leaguers did not appear to have widespread support among other executives.

Spec Richardson, general manager of the Houston Astros, said there has been no thought of filling the roster with minor leaguers.

"We've got a major league ball club," said Richardson.

"We're charging major league prices and the fans are entitled to see the best."

The Astros were scheduled to play Cincinnati in the only game Wednesday. The other teams were scheduled to begin play Thursday and Friday.

Bob Howsam, general manager of the Cincinnati Reds, refused to comment on Bartholomay's suggestion, although he had said earlier that the Reds would not field such a team.

Frank Cashen, executive vice president of the Baltimore Orioles, saw problems if any teams decided to import minor leaguers.

Barry, Erving Star In ABA Playoffs

(AP)-The New York Nets had lost one of their key players and were playing without the homecourt advantage. They really needed something big to beat the Kentucky Colonels.

They got it. Rick Barry scored 50 points.

"I've been long overdue," said Barry after pouring in 30 points in the second half to lead the underdog Nets to a 122-108 triumph over the Colonels Saturday in their American Basketball Association playoff series.

The victory, the first for New York in Louisville this season and fashioned without injured guard Billy Melchionni, gave the Nets a 1-0 lead in the best-of-seven East Division semifinals.

Virginia hammered the Floridians 125-100 and took a 2-0 lead in the other East semifinal series. Denver upset Indiana 106-105 to tie their West Division set at 1-1 and Utah took a 1-0 lead in the other West semifinal by beating Dallas 106-96.

The ABA playoffs continue Monday night with Dallas visiting Utah.

New York had only a 54-52 lead at halftime before Barry opened up from all angles of the court, to outdo his 20-point performance in the first half. The Nets rode Barry's blazing shooting to a 105-86 lead with 6:34 left.

"I got hot and it's about time," said Barry. "I did things well at the start and then just kept going."

Julius Erving and Adrian Smith combined for 51 points to lead Virginia over the Floridians. Erving scored a game high 27 points while Smith, averaging only five points a game during the regular season, added 24.

Ralph Simpson fired in two field goals in the final minute to lead Denver past Indiana.

"I'm a happy man tonight," said Alex Hannum, the Denver coach. "This is the happiest we've been all year. Indiana is one of the best teams in pro basketball, but we match up well against them."

Hannum, referring to Simpson's winning basket with 11 seconds to go, said: "You go to your power in a situation like that. Ralph is a great player...our best offensive weapon."

Simpson's 32 points led all scorers as the Rockets won a game at the Indianapolis Fairgrounds Coliseum for the first time this year. The Pacers' dressing room was off limits to reporters after the contest.

Redmen Nine Back From Southern Trip

The UMass baseball team finished its yearly southern swing with a 3-0 record against college competition and a 5-3 slate overall, including a 2-3 mark against the Kansas City Royals Academy team. The games against the Royals Academy do not count on the regular season schedule.

According to head baseball coach Dick Bergquist, it was an excellent trip, weatherwise and pitching-wise. The hitting was somewhat inconsistent, but juniors Dan Esposito and Mark Palau, sophomore Ed McMahon, and freshmen Ron Beaurivage and Mike Flanagan hit well.

In the first game, against the Royals Academy, the Redmen absorbed an 8-2 loss. Despite the loss, UMass received good pitching performances from John Olson and Chip Baye, and Esposito and McMahon had two hits apiece.

UMass came right back to beat the Royals, 5-1, in the second game between the two teams, played in Sarasota, Florida, as was the first one. In this game, Tom Austin started for the Redmen and looked good. Sophomores Steve Merrill and Eric Levine turned in good relief performances. Olson, the pitcher turned left fielder, had two hits for UMass.

In its actual collegiate opener against Florida Presbyterian at St. Petersburg, UMass rode an 11-hit attack to a 6-4 victory. McMahon and Flanagan paced the Redmen with home runs. Tom White and Olson pitched well, with White running up 10 strikeouts in five innings.

The Redmen traveled to Tampa for their next game, this one against Fairfield College. McMahon was the hitting star in this one, chipping in with two hits and scoring both UMass runs. Flanagan, Bob Langlois, and Levine combined to hold Fairfield to six hits. The final score in that one was 2-1.

In a return match with Fairfield, the Redmen again came out on top, this time 7-3. Flanagan and Palau had two hits each to pace the offense, and Baye and Austin who recorded the save in relief turned in strong mound performances.

The last three games of the trip were with the Royals. UMass dropped two of the three decisions, by the scores of 4-3 and 3-0. In the latter game, Tom Natle set the Redmen down on no hits. In the UMass win, 4-3, Olson and Flanagan pitched and Palau had two triples.

UMass opens its regular season (northern type) this Saturday at Yale in New Haven. Omaha, here they come?

Miller Offers End-Strike Proposal

NEW YORK (AP) — The Major League Baseball Players Association proposed a settlement Monday which it said wouldn't cost the owners any more money in an effort to end the first general strike by players in the sport's history.

Marvin Miller, executive director of the players association, proposed to John Gaherin, the owners' representative, that the 17 per cent hike sought in pensions come from the increased interest the pension fund is currently earning.

The players walked out Saturday. The 1972 season is scheduled to begin Wednesday.

"We have offered today a proposal we believe can settle the matter and avoid delaying the opening of the season," Miller told a news conference following his 90-minute secret meeting-the third such meeting since the strike started-with Gaherin.

"We are not asking for any more money than the owners offered in our final meeting at Phoenix March 29," Miller said.

Gaherin must now obtain the reaction of the owners to Miller's proposal.

The owners have offered $490,000 to improve health insurance benefits for players but have refused to increase their pension contributions.

This would bring the total annual contribution by the owners for pension and health care to $5.94 million.

"We have offered today a proposal we believe can settle the matter and avoid delaying the opening of the season," Miller told a news conference.

Miller explained that his association wished to apply the owners' annual $5.94 million contribution to the plan to finance both health benefits and pensions.

"We are not asking for any more money than the owners offered in our final meeting at Phoenix March 29," Miller said.

"We have said all along that money is not the issue. We are accepting the owners' money offer and in addition offering to guarantee the difference between the 4-1/2 per cent interest the plan is designed to earn and the 6 per cent it is earning."

Miller explained that one of the concerns of the owners was that the $45 million plan would not continue to earn interest at the current 6 per cent rate.

Gaherin was to take the proposal back to the owners for their reaction.

"We are not attempting to get a fair and honorable settlement."

"We're going to consider the proposal seriously and have no further comment at this time," said Gaherin who was not at the news conference.

Miller said, "If management rejects this offer, which is so fair, equitable and honorable, a way out for both sides, they must bear the responsibility for delaying the opening of the season."

The season was scheduled to open Wednesday.

The owners had gone on record as saying they "won't give one more cent," beyond the $490,000 they have pledged for maintaining the health care portion of the agreement.

Concerning the proposal, Michael Burke, president of the New York Yankees, said it "would be dumb of me to comment off the top of my head on a fairly complex subject, but it's encouraging that there is a new proposal one can put one's mind to."

"This is an absolutely new wrinkle, as far as I'm concerned," added Burke. "I'm not suggesting it's good, bad or indifferent, but it needs some thinking through."

IM Notices

All Intramural Soccer Managers are requested to pick up their computerized health clearance results from the Intramural Office, 215 Boyden. These must be secured before Wednesday, April 5, so managers know which players are eligible to compete.

All Intramural Softball, Badminton, and Horseshoe team managers or participants who have not received playing schedules in the mail should obtain these from the Intramural Office, 215 Boyden before Wed., April 5.

Runners In News

Road Runners!!

There's a lot to tell about the UMass men and women roadrunners during the two weekends of the vacation. UMass distance runners captured competitive victories and political victories.

First, in Brighton, Mass., on the first Saturday, they ran a 9-mile race over a hilly course. Ron Wayne and Tom Derderian set a blistering pace of 4:37 for the first mile and paid for it. Steve Ellis of Central Connecticut State caught them both and they finished second and third with Derderian a few seconds ahead of Wayne. Chris Chambers, Jay Nestor and Tom Wilson placed among the top runners in the field of 200.

Charlotte Lettis had the new routine encounter with the race officials. She was denied official sanction but ran regardless and would beat all but one-third of the men, had they recorded her effort.

The next day in nearby Florence, Mass., Derderian won the annual 8-mile road race with Chris Chambers finishing second, Pete Stasz fifth, and Charlotte Lettis 59th in the 100 men and 2 women field. Phyllis Olrich also finished, along with Paul Segerston and Bob Pagoda.

Both women had official numbers, but will not appear in the official results because of an edict from a Boston-based AAU official.

Bob Campbell, chairman of the New England long distance running committee sent a letter to Walter and Dick Childs of Springfield, the Western Mass. race officials, to ban the women. The Childs brothers recorded the times of the women and extended every courtesy but could not let Ms. Lettis and Ms. Olrich appear in the official result under the possible threat that AAU's sanctions would not be given to other Western Mass. long distance races.

At first, there was wishful thinking, then rumors and then the announcement that a sanction will be given for women to run in the Boston Marathon. The meaning of this sanction is that women who meet the qualifying standards will be allowed to run starting and finishing with the men but will be scored separately.

This was a victory only of sorts. The announcement came on the day entries closed and the qualifying races in New England were not open to women. However, precedence is set and, as any marathoner will say, the time to start training for next year's race is yesterday.

And the day before yesterday saw another long distance road run in Wellesley, Mass. Charlotte Lettis won the newly sanctioned women's division from a field of 15 women. Overall, Ms. Lettis finished 80th averaging about 6 minutes per mile to outstep her good friend Francie Johnson who placed 92nd in the 300 runner field. Phyllis Olrich finished fifth Derderian faded back to 8th and Chris Chambers ended the hilly run over parts of the marathon course in 10th place. Chambers had run 20 miles the day before and to top off his weekend, he travelled to Conn. to run a 20 kilometer race.

Chambers won the open division of the Conn. AAU 20 kilo championship with a time of 1:10.32, but placed 4th overall. These performances show that Chambers is certainly in good shape for the Boston Marathon to be held in two weeks.

Wayne, Derderian, Chambers, Wilson and Nestor intend to run in the Patriot's Day classic. Over 1,000 entries are expected.

Baseball Mourns Loss Of Hodges

NEW YORK (AP)-The body of Gil Hodges was returned to New York Monday as the baseball community mourned the death of the manager of the New York Mets.

General Manager Bob Scheffing, still shocked over the loss of Hodges, 47, said he probably would put one of the team's coaches in charge should the players' strike end in time for the regular season to begin this week. The Mets were scheduled to open Thursday in Pittsburgh.

"Replacing Gil is the furthest thing from my mind at the moment," said Scheffing. "I haven't quite gotten over it. I haven't thought about naming a new manager so I can't say anything about it.

"I'm just concerned with the family. It's just too quick. If the strike is over, I'll put one of the coaches in charge and in the meantime, I'll start thinking about what we'll do."

Two of the Mets' coaches, Yogi Berra and Rube Walker, have managerial experience. Berra piloted the New York Yankees to their last American League title in 1964 before being fired. He has coached first base for the Mets since 1965. Walker filled in for Hodges in the final week of the 1968 season when the Met manager suffered his first heart attack.

Two other possibilities in the Met organization are Hank Bauer, manager of the club's top farm club at Tidewater, Va., and Whitey Herzog, director of player development.

Bauer has prior managerial experience with Baltimore and the Athletics, both in Kansas City and Oakland. Herzog is a former Met coach.

Hodges had just finished playing 27 holes of golf with Walker and two other Met coaches Sunday afternoon when he collapsed a short distance from his motel room.

He was taken to nearby Good Samaritan Hospital where he was pronounced dead of a massive heart seizure.

Hodges' first heart attack came in the final week of the 1968 season when he complained of not feeling well during a game at Atlanta. He sat out the final days of that season but returned to the Mets in 1969 and piloted the club to the world championship. He called the Mets' title that year his greatest thrill in baseball.

A public viewing of Hodges' body will be Wednesday from 1 p.m. to 10 p.m. and Thursday from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. at Our Lady Help of Christians Roman Catholic Church in Brooklyn. A high requiem mass will be Thursday at the same church at 11 a.m. Burial will be private at Holy Cross Cemetery in Brooklyn.

Espo Wins NHL Crown

MONTREAL (AP) — Phil Esposito of the Boston Bruins has his third National Hockey League scoring title in four years...and an additional $1,750.

According to figures released Monday by NHL headquarters, Boston's super center posted 66 goals and 67 assists for 133 points. His goals and points were the second highest in the history of the league, trailing the 76 goals and 152 points Esposito accumulated last season.

Esposito collects $1,000 for winning the scoring title, $500 as the second-half leader and $250 as runnerup to New York's Jean Ratelle during the first half of the season.

Ratelle, who missed the last 15 games with a broken ankle, finished third with 46 goals and 63 assists for 109 points behind Boston's Bobby Orr, who had 117 points on a record-tying 37 goals for a defenseman plus a league- leading 80 assists.

The Vezina Trophy went to the Chicago Black Hawks' goaltending duo of Tony Esposito, Phil's brother, and Gary Smith, who yielded 2.12 goals per game on 166 goals in 78 games.

New York's Vic Hadfield and Chicago's Bobby Hull each scored twice in their final game to finish second to Esposito with 50 goals apiece. It was the first time Hadfield reached the 50 goal mark and the fifth time for Hull.

McGovern 1st, Muskie 4th, In Wisconsin

MILWAUKEE, Wis. (AP)-Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota scored a sweeping victory in the Wisconsin presidential primary Tuesday night, vaulting to the front rank of Democratic contenders for the nomination to challenge President Nixon.

New York Mayor John V. Lindsay, far back in the Wisconsin field, quit the race for the White House.

Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace edged ahead of Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota in a tight race for second place.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine ran a potentially crippling fourth, polling 11 per cent of the Wisconsin vote. He said he would press on, and still expected to win the nomination.

"I don't know the meaning of the word quit," he said.

Wallace gained a hefty northern showing to go with his Southern campaign sendoff in Florida and said it made him "a really serious candidate."

With nearly 75 per cent of the ballots counted, McGovern was capturing 30 per cent of the vote in a 12-way race.

Wallace and Humphrey were capturing 21 per cent of the vote apiece.

McGovern was in charge for 54 of Wisconsin's 67 national convention votes, to go along with the giant psychological boost he gained in his first victory of the primary season.

"It clearly establishes me as a major contender in the public mind," he said. Lindsay, who was running sixth, behind Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, with 7 per cent of the vote, became the first major dropout of the Democratic campaign for the White House.

President Nixon swamped two opponents on the Republican primary ballot.

With 61 per cent of the vote tallied, this was the standing of the six Democratic candidates who campaigned actively in Wisconsin:

McGovern 223,960 votes or 30 per cent.

Humphrey 161,545 or 21 per cent.

Wallace 159,600 or 21 per cent.

Muskie 80,737 or 11 per cent.

Jackson had 58,673, or 8 per cent.

And Lindsay 51,430 or 7 per cent

Six other candidates gained scattered support.

Former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy of Minnesota had 10,369 or 1 per cent.

Rep. Shirley Chisholm of New York had 6,060 or 1 per cent.

Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty had 1,886 or less than 1 per cent.

Also getting less than 1 per cent were Rep. Patsy Mink of Hawaii with 924 votes, Rep. Wilbur D. Mills of Arkansas with 704 votes and Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana with 623.

McGovern led for 54 of Wisconsin's nominating votes at the Democratic national convention.

Humphrey was ahead for the other 13.

President Nixon won 28 convention votes for renomination.

He had been opposed by John Ashbrook of Ohio and Paul N. McCloskey Jr. of California who had withdrawn from the race.

Wisconsin voters could choose the primary ballot of either party.

The other names on the Democratic ballot were those of former Minnesota Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, Reps. Shirley Chisholm of New York, Wilbur D. Mills of Arkansas and Patsy Mink of Hawaii, Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles and Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana.

Hartke has quit the presidential campaign and endorsed Humphrey.

Wisconsin's ballot also offered the voter a chance to say no, a box marked "none of these names shown."

McGovern's manager said even before the votes were tallied that the senator had established himself among the politicians and the analysts as a man who could, indeed, win the Democatic nomination.

That has been a major problem all along for McGovern, who had lagged far behind in the national public opinion polls.

Humphrey said beforehand he wouldn't be hurt by a second-place finish, if it was a close one.

Muskie and his men were braced for the prospect of defeat, insisting that the real tests are coming up in states where the field of candidates will be smaller and the convention stakes higher.

Two of those tests come up on April 25, in Massachusetts for 102 delegates and Pennsylvania for 182.

Campaign strategy for the April 25 contests, and those in Ohio and Indiana on May 2, was one of the topics Muskie lieutenants were discussing on election day in Wisconsin.

McGovern is Muskie's chief rival in Massachusetts, Humphrey in Pennsylvania.

McGovern and Humphrey campaigners said the Muskie organization could face worsening financial troubles in the weeks ahead.

Humphrey came to Wisconsin after an 18 per cent second-place showing in Florida, where he ran second to Wallace's 42 per cent.

George McGovern came in first in yesterday's Wisconsin primary. Humphrey, Wallace and Muskie trailed and John Lindsay announced his withdrawal. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

$30 Rent Hike; Change In 21 Policy Likely

By STEVE TRIPOLI

The Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate last night suggested to Vice Chancellor Thomas Campion and Robert Gage and Chuck Hampton of the Housing Office a plan which would increase rent $54 per year and meal ticket cost about $15 per year.

The administrators, however, hinted that they would suggest to the Chancellor a plan that would increase rent $30 a year and allow for no increase in meal ticket cost, but this would be at the cost of changing the 21 year old policy and allowing fewer students move off campus next year.

This policy was the chief bone of contention at the meeting. Committee Chairman Robert Chiller expressed the committee's view that although Rents and Fees was committed to the lowest possible rent increases, there was no possible way that they could endorse a change in the 21 year old policy. They felt that there was no reason to make the approximately 700 students who would be eligible to move off campus next year pay for the administration's mistakes by being forced to live on campus.

The committee's recommendation came with the expectation that the administrators would pass the 21 year old policy change in any event, and Vice Chancellor Campion told the Collegian that he would very likely recommend the plan which included the change to the Chancellor.

A change in the policy would revise it so that a student would not be able to move off campus until he was 21 years of age. The present policy allows for a student to move off campus any time in the year in which he will turn 21.

There was also discussion on the closing of a dorm, and possibly two dorms, in order to defray out of pocket operating expenses and allow for needed renovations. The chief candidate for closing is Hills, which is in need of about $150,000 in repairs.

There was some discussion on this, as the administrators felt that it would be unfeasible to move the approximately 400 residents of Hills without much prior notice. The committee felt that due to the tremendous need for renovations the residents should be informed before room choosing day, which is less than a week away.

The prospects for closing Hills look to be fairly certain at this point, but the chances for closing more than one dorm are uncertain.

The morning meeting saw Joel Stoneham and Gerry Grady of Food Services explain that there would be a raise of anywhere from zero to a maximum of $15 in meal ticket cost if there is no change in housing policy next semester. There should be a final price set within a week.

If the 21 year old housing policy is changed so that more students are forced to live on campus, there probably would be no raise at all in meal ticket cost. The extra students (there could be as many as 700) would make up the projected deficit.

Also discussed were the possibilities of using the empty space in Hampden Dining Commons. The game area has been expanded and it is expected that the area will be a source of increased revenue next year.

The next meeting of the committee is scheduled for Thursday evening, and hopefully all rent and fee prices will be finalized by the end of the week.

Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services Thomas Campion explains the reasons behind his proposals for Rent increases totaling $30 and a change in the University's 21 year old policy at last night's meeting of the Rents and Fees Committee. Seated next to him is Chuck Hampton of the Housing Office. (MDC photo by Barbara Brecher)

Slide Show On Air War Tonight

Tonight at 8 P.M. at Hampden Dining Commons the Student Mobilization Committee will present a slide show concerning the air war in Indochina and the extensive use of the electronic battlefield.

The presentation will deal primarily with the accelerated bombings and their devastating effect on the lives of the Indochinese. Also included will be a discussion concerning anti-war activities planned for this spring, specifically the April 22 demonstration in New York City.

The NARMIC report clearly illustrates the increasing role played by the United States, and various corporations, in Southeast Asia. The background report describes the automated battlefield and its areas of application.

NARMIC compiled the report to examine White House plans for Indochina and their domestic implications. It ties the recent development of the automated battlefield to other seemingly disparate events: the demoralization of the troops, the "urbanization" and the upheaval in the cities of South Vietnam today, the future of captured Americans in North Vietnam, and reasons for the lack of knowledge and information about the exact nature of the ongoing war and American involvement.

The slide show was produced and compiled by the National Action/Research on the Military Industrial Complex, a project of the American Friends Service Committee.

Adam Clayton Powell Dead At 63

MIAMI (AP)-Adam Clayton Powell, politician preacher and playboy whose flamboyant love of wheeling and dealing led to his exclusion from Congress, died Tuesday night in a Miami hospital of complications following prostate surgery. He was 63.

His death was announced by Fred J. Cowell, associate director of Jackson Memorial Hospital.

"Congressman Adam Clayton Powell expired at Jackson Memorial Hospital at 10:45 p.m. Tuesday, April 4, 1972," said Cowell.

Powell was brought by U.S. Coast Guard helicopter to Jackson Memorial Hospital March 7 from his Bahamian island retreat of Bimini.

Both Yvette Powell, his third wife, and Darlene Expose, whom the flamboyant former lawmaker once introduced as his wife, had kept a hospital vigil during his weeks-long illness.

In 1945 the tall, handsome Powell became the first black to be elected to Congress from the East.

He also became the first congressman in modern times to be excluded by a vote of the House.

Powell, whose adoptive phrase "Keep the faith, baby," was on the lips of many Americans in the late 1960s, was re-elected in a special election a month after Congress voted him out. He campaigned only a few days, spending most of the time in Bimini, but did not try to reclaim his seat.

In 1968, without making a single campaign appearance in his Harlem district of New York City, Powell was re-elected again by a 7-1 majority-the same margin by which the Supreme Court ruled the following June that the House had exceeded its constitutional power in barring him. However, he did not get $65,000 in back pay, nor restoration of the seniority that made him chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee.

After his re-election in 1968, Congress had already voted to reseat Powell, provided he pay a $25,000 fine and forfeit seniority.

Powell accepted the deal, but he attended only part time.

"I'm a part time congressman because I'm a part time paid congressman, he said. The fine was deducted from his salary in monthly installments.

Legislating Separates Senate Candidates

By MARY SMITH

Robert Chiller and Chester Richardson, the candidates for the Office of Senate Treasurer, have voiced agreement on principal aims and proposals. The major difference between the candidates lies in their approach towards implimenting the proposed programs.

Bob Chiller views the role of Senate Treasurer as one that must become mor involved in student affairs. The treasurer must function as a financial officer in addition to his duties as an accountant. As treasurer, Chiller would initiate programs that would provide greater services to students.

Chiller proposes a four point plan:

—a revision of the financial policy act, and a clarification of the accounting procedures;

—an implementation of a physical inventory of SATF funded groups, and monthly meetings with all treasurers;

—closer attention to the Student Senate's Auto Pool, Transit Service, and Note Service, and implementation of a small equipment pool;

—research and development of a cooperative system of stores, and Student Senate corporations dealing with dorms and other such ventures.

Senator Chiller envisions a wide scope of activities that could be maintained on a cooperative basis. Possibilities range from the establishment of a cooperative bookstore to student controlled and operated dorms.

Chet Richardson admits to the desirability of Chiller's programs but feels that a reorganization of budgetary procedure is necessary before such projects can be undertaken by the Senate.

Richardson pointed out that a revision of the Financial Policy Act, proposed by Chiller, is already being dealt with by the Rents & Fees Committee and the Budgets Committee.

Richardson maintains that internal reform is needed before the Senate can begin to expand into additional areas. A change in the budgeting procedure that would streamline the financial functions of the Senate is the aim of Richardson. Specific problems that need consideration include a reassessment of how returning SATF is distributed and the problem of overtaxing students.

Richardson stated that the Senate By-laws charge the treasurer with the responsibility for all the financial transactions of the Senate. He views the role of treasurer as primarily a financial position, one that requires a knowledge of the intricacies of the present system. Richardson is confident that as treasurer he could start planning procedures that would give the Senate and RSO groups a firm basis that would enable them to branch out.

Richardson is presently the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. Since his election to the Senate, Richardson has served on the Rents & Fees Committee, Services Committee, and the Transportation and Parking Council. He is also the only student on the Athletic Director Search Committee.

Chiller is the current chairperson of the Rents & Fees Committee. He has also chaired the Food Services Committee, Services Committee, and the Food Service Committee of the SUG Board, in addition to being a member of the Parking and Housing Committees. He also serves on the executive committee of the Commuter Assembly and was a delegate to the National Student Congress.

SOS Meeting Tonight

Students Offering Support (S.O.S.) is holding a recruitment meeting this evening at 7:00 in room 903 of the Campus Center.

A meeting was held the week before vacation for this purpose, but, due to the large amount of midsemester exams, many of those who were interested could not attend.

For this reason, Chairman of S.O.S. Joe Sylvia scheduled this second meeting in order to give interested students a chance to learn more about S.O.S., and to join in their efforts to aid the residents at Belchertown State Hospital.

Students are needed to assist S.O.S. and the Concert Committee in setting up a series of Spring coffee houses and concerts. The funds derived from these will go to both S.O.S. and the Concert Committee. Help is also needed by S.O.S. to enable them to successfully carry out their candy sale and raffle.

The Weather

By TOM BORKOWSKI

Yes, indeed, there is weather today! Expect it to be sunny with the high temperature in the 40's, and changing to cold (about 20 or 25, maybe even 30) after Apollo "goes over the hill." Well, at least anticipate it to be dark.

Thursday may be cloudy. But don't be depressed. Great things come on cloudy days--rain puddles, mud puddles, puddle puddles...What else could you expect from a winter turned to spring?

Baraka Discusses Dr. King's Life

By BURVELL WILLIAMS

Last night in the Campus Center auditorium, the D.V.P. featured Imamu Amiri Baraka (LeRoi Jones) to begin the Martin Luther King Lecture Series this week. Although there was some delay in Imamu's appearance, the capacity audience was beautifully entertained by two very talented black speakers, whose prose and poetry set the mood and tone for the evening.

Baraka's hour-long lecture discussed "The Civil Rights Movement-Dr. King and The Present Black Struggle." He cited Dr. King as the focal point of the black struggle "in the context of his own appearance and manifestation for the kind of pantheon of black leadership."

Baraka made a reflection of his early conception of Dr. Martin Luther King. He stated he learned a lot about America by watching King trying to change it: by bringing civil rights to America and trying to intergrate public facilities in the south. As King was trying to transform America, Baraka notes that some black people were transformed, even though he admits that at this time he had put King down for what he was doing. He stated he had not understood what was meant by non-violence.

The efforts of King were essential to the work of Malcolm Stokely Carmichael and several other black leaders that took up arms against the enemy. Baraka pointed out that the efforts of Malcolm somewhat contrasted with the efforts of Dr. King. Malcolm preached such things as revolutionary black nationalism, unity of all black people, Afro-Asian alliances, and the belief that there was no need to ask for civil rights but to just exist naturally with inherent human rights.

It seemed as if Imamu Amiri Baraka knew who he was talking to and limited his lecture to key and important generalities that are important in such things as self-development, racism, and human rights.

On revolution he commented that "one cannot talk about world revolution if one cannot organize 1,000 people in his own community; one also cannot help people if his own wife, mother, or father are counter-revolutionary and raving maniacs." His lecture seemed to enhance the awareness of revolutionary-minded and oppressed people.

Globe Tuition Story Disclaimed By Sargent

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

A spokesman for Gov. Sargent's office in Boston said a story appearing in the Boston Globe yesterday relating to tuition increases was inaccurate and misleading.

The front-page story said the State of Massachusetts is planning to double the present $200 a year tuition fee for students in public colleges and universities.

The Globe, who received their information from "an informed source" said the tuition hike would be "unrelated to ability to pay."

Refuting the article, the spokesman, who wished to remain nameless, said the Governor's tuition legislation, is, in fact, based on the student's ability to pay.

Tuition would be based on a sliding scale and would be according to the family income, he said. This scale would start at zero tuition and is expected to have an ultimate ceiling in the area of $600.

An innovative provision in the Governor's tuition package is that families who have a total income less than $5,000 will be exempt from paying tuition.

The spokesman said the average projected tuition increase for the upcoming year would be approximately $100 under the proposed legislation.

The Globe stated that the trustees of all institutions concerned have tentatively agreed to Sargent's tuition plans.

Lee Sandwen, President of the Student Senate and Student Trustee said the Trustees have not given any signs of supporting any tuition increases and have never discussed the tuition plans the Globe refers to.

The spokesman said Sargent's tuition package should be brought to a vote in the legislature within the next two or three months. Before being brought to a vote, it must first pass a series of tests in legislative committee hearings.

One provision of Sargent's legislation is to give the Board of Higher Education the necessary power to set all tuition rates.

Under present policy, the tuition rates for all public colleges and universities are set by the five boards of trustees.

Only last week, the UMass Trustees voted to increase tuition for out-of-state and graduate students at UMass.

Tuition for out-of-state undergraduates will increase by $250 a year for the next two years while tuition for in-state graduate students will increase by $125 for the next two years. Tuition for out-of-state graduate students will increase by $300 for the next two years.

Ms. Merrill On Welfare Rights

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

Bonnie Merrill of the State Health Office is recruiting University women to act as welfare counsellors with the Valley Women's Center "when Welfare Rights go into legal rights."

Ms. Merrill described the "controls' effectiveness" as the result of "intimidation" and explained the need for an informed party to accompany eligible individuals during Welfare Office interviews. Interested women are asked to contact the Center.

Ms. Merrill in her speech cited the irony of jailing the fathers for not working to support their children. She also cited a recent "peculiar" court decision "which gave unmarried fathers as much legal right to children as married fathers and unmarried mothers."

"The National Welfare sets up only general guidelines," she continued, "the rest is up to the states." She stressed the need for more test cases, which means getting the case together, finding an attorney...and with no money.

Ms. Merrill went on to describe the Family Assistance Plan, the Nixon-Mills plan to nationalize Welfare ("this would provide a basic standard of $2,400 for a family of four"), and explained the "point system" which would provide an additional $25 per month per point.

The children could earn these points by belonging to certain approved organizations and doing well in school. A mother could earn points for her housekeeping, or by telling the whereabouts of her husband or the father of her children to her caseworker so that he could be charged with non-support.

"There is also a rider on the bill," she said, "that Welfare mothers with no children under 6 years old must 'seek employment'. Eventually the bill will read 'with no children under 3 years old.' "

Ms. Merrill pointed out the irony that "the Senator who added the rider thinks that a Welfare mother has more children in order to stay on Welfare. This way she would have to have a baby every three years instead of every fourteen."

"The largest category of Welfare money in Massachusetts," she stated, "goes into nursing homes. Every person in the state is potentially eligible for Medicaid. The differences," she explained, "has to do with 'income brackets... more income from different family members, and property, and there is no recourse...until you lose enough money, get in bad enough shape, to get onto Welfare.' "

"The Welfare Department will probe as far as it can. Caseworkers can get on a power trip...and money is power. There are very few good people left because they have found that they couldn't work within the system."

"The caseworkers now are overworked," Ms. Merrill closed with, explaining that there are no more midnight raids around here because of "benign neglect."

Chisholm To Speak In Springfield

Presidential candidate Shirley Chisholm will be in Springfield on Thursday, April 6. At 5:00 p.m., Congresswoman Chisholm will express to people at Bay State West that "my candidacy is unique, a people's kind of candidacy. People are tired of Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum characters...the small clique that has ruled American politics too long."

Then at 7:00 p.m., Rep. Chisholm will give an address at the Springfield College Field House on Adler Street in the Hill Magnate area.

She is committed to running "all the way" and will be on the primary ballot in Massachusetts, April 25. "Rhetoric and rapping don't mean a thing; you've got to do something," Ms. Chisholm said.

Earlier in the day, Representative Chisholm will speak at a luncheon in the Arlington Street Church in Boston. It will be a soul food luncheon.

Two More ARVN Bases Overrun

QUANG TRI--FLEEING HOMES--An old Vietnamese peasant is helped to his feet after collapsing on Route 1 near Quang Tri, 19 miles south of the DMZ, Sunday. Thousands of civilians are fleeing their homes toward the south as the North Vietnamese offensive continues. (AP)

SAIGON (AP) — North Vietnamese forces overran two more South Vietnamese bases below the demilitarized zone Tuesday. One base guarded the southern approaches to the provincial capital of Quang Tri. Elsewhere on the northern battle front, the enemy offensive abated.

Field commanders said the enemy was regrouping and resupplying for more blows. The United States sent is entire fleet of B52 bombers, and scores of fighter-bombers to disrupt the emeny's plans for new strikes. Five destroyers offshore added their firepower to the pounding of enemy positions.

All B52 missions in Cambodia and Laos were passed for the second successive day and 50 of the Stratofortresses hit North Vietnamese troop concentrations and supply depots in the north and in the central highlands.

South Vietnamese forces abandoned the northern naval patrol base at the Cua Viet River mouth, 10 miles north of Quang Tri, and Fire Base Anne, eight miles southwest of Quang Tri. Fire Base Anne helped guard the city's approaches. Fire Base Pedro, just to the west, still stands.

The losses brought to 14 the number of outposts abandoned by the South Vietnamese since the Communist Command's offensive was launched last Thursday.

The South Vietnamese now face the North Vietnamese roughly on an east-west line that parallels the Dong Ha River, seven miles north of Quang Tri in South Vietnam's northernmost province.

Lt. Gen. Hoang Xuan Lam, commander of the 1st military region there, described Tuesay's relative lull as the result of the enemy's taking time for resupply and reorganization.

"We have stopped them now, but we don't know if they will attack more," Lam told newsmen in Da Nang. "They have taken very heavy casualties. They have stopped for resupply and reorganization."

The general estimated the North Vietnamese have suffered 2,000 killed thus far in ground fighting and by air and artillery strikes. South Vietnamese forces, Lam said, have lost 200 killed and 600 wounded.

The fall of Fire Base Anne raised the threat that Highway 1 might be cut south of Quang Tri, thus isolating it.

Associated Press Correspondent Holger Jensen reported that many of the 28,000 refugees still left in Quang Tri were packing to move southward along the vital Highway 1 toward Hue, 34 miles to the southwest where some 20,000 already have been temporarily located.

The South Vietnamese military command denied published reports Tuesday that government troops had made an amphibious landing at the mouth of the Cua Viet River, where the naval base fell after three days of attacks.

AP Correspondent Jensen said U.S. air strikes north of Dong Ha were designed to cut Highway 1 in an attempt to prevent the North Vietnamese from moving any more heavy equipment.

In Brief...

Argentines Riot Over Electricity Price Increase

MENDOZA, Argentina (AP) — Nearly 20,000 demonstrators rampaged through Mendoza Tuesday, protesting a stiff increase in electricity rates. Witnesses reported one man killed and dozens injured.

More than 8,000 of the rioters tried to seize the provincial government building, but were driven back by police and army troops.

During four hours of street fighting, stores were looted, windows broken and about 40 cars set afire. Rioters with stones and clubs battled police armed with tear gas, water cannon and nightsticks.

Secretary of the Navy Chafee Resigns

WASHINGTON (AP) — John H. Chafee resigned today after three years as secretary of the Navy. His letter to President Nixon did not cite a reason, but Chafee is expected to return to Rhode Island to run for the Senate.

The White House, in announcing the resignation, released a letter in which President Nixon expressed "my deep gratitude for your superb service to the Navy and the country for the past three years."

Dita Beard Leaves Hospital

DENVER (AP) — Lobbyist Dita Beard, a central figure in the controversy over a proposed International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. contribution in connection with the Republican National Convention, has ended her month-long stay at the Rocky Mountain Osteopathic Hospital.

Mrs. Beard, 53, left the hospital just before midnight Monday, several hours earlier than expected, and thus avoided newsmen.

Hospital authorities said Mrs. Beard went to a nearby apartment where she will receive outpatient treatment for the next several weeks.

IRA Shows Defiance As Attacks Continue

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Irish Republican Army guerrillas fought British troops today in a Belfast district where the IRA has lost some of its Roman Catholic support.

No one was hurt in the Andersonstown gunfight, and the shooting was seen as a defiant IRA gesture to show that its word is still law in the heavily Catholic district.

It came after more than 2,000 Andersonstown Catholics attended a funderal Monday for a slain mother in a protest against the IRA's continuing violence despite British peace moves.

Catholic women trying to hold a meeting Monday night to urge an IRA truce were drowned out by jeering IRA women sympathizers.

In Dublin an IRA leader assailed an appeal by William Cardinal Conway, Catholic primate of all Ireland, for an end to the IRA's war of independence in the north.

Despite fears of major trouble, Northern Ireland got through the long Easter weekend without fatalities.

William Whitelaw moved into his provincial headquarters at Stormont Castle, completing a transfer of power that ended 51 years of local majority Protestant rule and opened the way to granting concessions to the minority Catholics.

One of Whitelaw's first tasks as peacemaker will be deciding how many IRA suspects he can release from the controversial internment camps where men are being held without trial. Phasing out internment is a key part of the British peace plan.

SALT Talks

HELSINKI (AP) — The third session of the seventh round of the strategic arms limitation talks between the United States and the Soviet Union lasted an hour and 45 minutes today.

The U.S. delegation spokesman said "delegates were approaching work in a very serious manner."

The next session, which started more than 2 1/2 years ago, is scheduled Friday.

Harrisburg Jury Still Undecided

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — A jury trying the Rev. Philip Berrigan and six others on kidnap-bomb conspiracy charges asked Tuesday for more time for deliberations, saying: "For the past two hours there has been progress made."

The foreman, Harold Sheets, told U.S. District Court Judge R. Dixon Herman, however, that he foresaw no verdict before Wednesday at the earliest.

He suggested that the jury be relieved of its duties for the day at 6 p.m. and the court agreed.

Nine women and three men on the jury reported Sunday that they were deadlocked in the key features of a government indictment charging Berrigan and six other antiwar activists with a plot to kidnap White House aide Henry Kissinger and blow up a government tunnel heating system in Washington, D.C., and vandalize draft boards in various states.

Herman directed at that time that they resume deliberations in an attempt to reach an overall verdict. The jury had found Berrigan guilty of a single count in the indictment of smuggling a letter out of the federal penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa.

The defense objected on the spot to continuing the jury deliberations, and renewed its objections of Monday and Tuesday, charging the jury was "being coerced into a compromise verdict."

"Further forced deliberations by this jury would be prejudicial to the defendants," defense lawyer Thomas Menaker said in a formal handwritten motion, again asking that the jury be discharged.

Berrigan, 48, faces a maximum of 10 years in federal prison on the smuggling conviction, in addition to two years still remaining on a six-year sentence for destroying draft records in Maryland.

It was when he entered Lewisburg in 1970 to begin the current sentence that Berrigan fell in with another inmate, Boyd F. Douglas, Jr., who was winding up a five-year term for bank fraud and assault on a government agent.

Enrolled in a study-release program at nearby Bucknell University, the 31-year-old Douglas was free to leave the prison daily. He became a mail courier for the militant priest but turned FBI informer and handed over to agents copies of letters between Berrigan and members of his antiwar movement on the outside.

The defense sought to convince the jury that Douglas seized upon random ideas advanced by the defendants and tried to fan them into actions that the FBI could label conspiratorial-in short, that the paid informer acted as "agent provocateur."

U.S. Recognizes Bangladesh

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States Tuesday officially recognized Bangladesh, the new nation carved out of the former eastern province of Pakistan late last year with the aid of the Indian army.

"I am pleased to announce this morning that the United States government is extending recognition to Bangladesh," Secretary of State William P. Rogers said in a statement.

The action ends more than three months of varying stances by the Nixon administration toward the new nation.

The initial American response to Bangladesh when it won its independence in December was one of reticence, with spokesmen saying at the time recognition was not being considered.

This was followed by statements that the matter had been elevated to active consideration with the presence of Indian troops in Bangladesh considered a negative factor.

When asked why the administration picked this time to take the step to recognition, State Department spokesman Robert J. McCloskey said there is "nothing necessarily magic" about Tuesday as the announcement date.

But he noted that Rogers had spoken of the Indian troops' issue last month, and that the troops for the most part were pulled out by the middle of March.

McCloskey said several nations were informed in advance of Tuesday's announcement, including China, the Soviet Union, Pakistan and India.

The American recognition is expected to help ease tensions with India, which has been at odds with the United States over the war with Pakistan that led to creation of the new government.

Peking, the only major government still not recognizing Bangladesh, sided with Pakistan in the December war, as did the United States.

Although recognition was held back the United States has maintained a consulate in Dacca and has contributed $15 million in economic and humantarian relief to Bangladesh since the end of the December war.

Herbert D. Spivack, who headed the Dacca consulate, will continue in that capacity with the title of charge d'affaires.

In addition to the Indian troop withdrawal, McCloskey listed as factors in determining recognition a growing sense of stability in South Asia and an expected positive international effect resulting from the American move.

Nobel Award Barred

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Soviet novelist Alexander Solzhenitsyn will not receive his 1970 Nobel Prize for Literature in Moscow April 9 as planned because the Soviet government won't give a visa to the Nobel Foundation official who was to present it.

Karl-Ragnar Gierow, the secretary of the foundation, said today that the Russians had refused him a visa. He made no other comment.

Gierow had planned to deliver the prize medal and diploma at a private ceremony at the Moscow home of a friend of Solzhenitsyn. The Soviet government was angered by the award to the author because of the anti-Soviet tone of his writing, and he refused to come to Stockholm for the prize ceremonies because he feared his government would not let him return home.

Gierow said the Soviet authorities gave him no reason for refusing a visa.

Solzhenitsyn's Nobel cash prize of $80,000 was deposited in a Swiss bank.

Government's VD Campaign Criticized By Commission

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Commission on Venereal Disease said Tuesday the government's stepped-up campaign against gonorrhea and syphilis is not enough to control what it called an epidemic striking 2.5 million Americans each year.

After a year of study, the advisory panel of 16 physicians and one osteopath recommended federal spending of $296 million over the next five years for VD control.

Specifically, it sponsored a 19-point program including VD instruction down to the seventh grade in public and private schools, more research and a search for vaccines, and restored VD courses in the curriculum of medical schools.

In the fiscal year starting July 1, the commission urged that federal spending be boosted to $46.1 million compared with the $31 million President Nixon has requested.

But Dr. Merlin K. DuVal, assistant secretary for health and scientific affairs in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said the administration request represents a 250 percent increase over two decades.

Noting a historic rise in gonorrhea and a 20-year high in reported infectious syphilis cases, the commission blamed the outbreak on public and medical complacency following the introduction of penicillin in the early 1950s.

Dr. Bruce P. Webster, Cornell University professor emeritus who headed the study, said the recent breakthrough in developing the vaccine against meningitis "gives stimulus and hope that such a possibility is available" for gonorrhea.

Officials from the National Center for Disease Control in Atlanta said, however, that it takes 7 to 10 years to institute a new vaccination program.

Untreated syphilis can lead to brain damage and blindness, and be passed on by an expectant mother to her child. Gonorrhea may cause sterility, blood infections and arthritis.

The UMass Medical School

On Skulduggery And Boondoggling

The above model of the UMass medical school shows the two research and office wings, connected by the classroom and lecture hall building. The smaller building between the three will house the school's library. The large cross-shaped building in the rear will be the school's 400-bed teaching hospital. The complex is due to be opened in 1974.

(Editor's Note: This is the third installment in a series on the UMass Medical School in Worcester. So far the series has been concerned with the events leading up to the meeting by the Trustees when the location of the school was to be decided. Dr. Lamar Soutter, Dean of the School, was mentioned as man standing between the many political factions during the debate.)

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

The UMass Trustees met on June 11, 1965, to vote on the site of the medical school. (The meeting was held after commencement, which was probably a foreshadowing of the outcome, in that students and faculty would be away from campus and would not be readily able to present a united voice against the decision.)

Most people were fairly confident of what the results would be. As an example, one local newspaperman tells this story of that afternoon: "We had a reporter outside the meeting room with an open line back to the paper. We had already prepared the story and laid it out with the headline 'UMass Trustees Chose Amherst for Medical School Site.' We were holding the presses waiting for the official word. As the meeting wore on, we were wondering why it was taking so long to reach such an easy decision."

Knowledge of the events which transpired inside the meeting is spotty. One account is told by Roger L. Putnam, Chairman of the Citizens' Action Committee of Springfield, a group working for a western Massachusetts' location. Putnam said the following is an "inside" account of the meeting:

There were three groups at the time of the first ballot, one wanted the Amherst site, another wanted an urban setting, and the last wanted a Boston location. Six of the twenty-two Trustees were from western Massachusetts and would vote for the school's location there. (Five wanted Amherst, and one, Bishop Weldon of Springfield, wanted it in that city.)

It was decided to vote by secret ballot, (a decision which would be later challenged in the State Legislature). Amherst, Springfield, Worcester, Suburban Boston and Downtown Boston were the sties on which the vote was to be taken.

It was also decided that after each ballot the lowest contender would be eliminated. Balloting would continue until one site had a majority. Most expected Amherst to win by a substantial margin on the second ballot, after the individuals had fulfilled their political obligations.

The Amherst group later said that they figured Worcester would drop out on the first ballot as it clearly didn't have preference over the other sites which had been selected by medical professionals. When Worcester was eliminated, their votes were expected to go to Amherst along with a few votes from Trustees of the Boston area who wished for a more suburban setting.

But, in reality, after the first ballot it looked as if the Boston block had already made arrangements with the Worcester group, for Worcester had picked up votes from Boston, and the Metropolitan area was eliminated. Then, on the second ballot, the Springfield group along with Bishop Weldon (who apparently favors an urban location) switched to Worcester and the decision was made. Worcester won with a 12-10 majority, the smallest majority possible for a decision.

After that, in a rush to get something out of the deal, the Western Massachusetts group pushed for a 2 plus 2 plan, i.e., a two-year school in both Worcester and Springfield. This was rejected by another close decision, the majority saying it would "jeopardize a quality education." A revote was asked, but all members refused to change their original positions, so it was cancelled.

When the results were made public, the massive cry of disbelief and resentment was unprecedented. For the first time in history, the faculty, students, and University administration seemed united in a common cause. All went on record against the decision and asked the Trustees to reconsider. Letters poured in from across the state asking for a revote.

In an effort to "calm the natives", the Trustees scheduled an open hearing on August 4, 1965. But, at that hearing, it became obvious that the decision had been made and no matter what was said, the Trustees would not change their minds.

An editorial in the Amherst Record summed up the feelings felt by most people on the decision. "Few people in Amherst acknowledge the wisdom of the Trustees' decision. Because twelve men, in their human fallibility, had chosen...to cast their votes with a flagrant disregard for public sentiment and professional objective recommendations, the Medical School was written off as one more entry in Massachusetts' impressive journal of political skulduggery and boondoggling about which, sometime, something should perhaps be done, by someone."

Trustee Hugh Thompson said to a group of labor leaders in Worcester that their "decision was not influenced by political pressures. Despite what anyone might say, we believed that we were right and we are confident that the medical profession will be proud of the job we have done."

He had apparently not read an editorial in the New England Journal of Medicine on July 8, 1965, which said, "The Worcester site can neither strengthen the University nor can it be strenghthened by it." It continued saying the Amherst location was preferable over Worcester.

As the debate continued, Dean Soutter, fearing that his school would be delayed further (He said at the time that he held the record of being dean for the longest time without having one student.), asked the dissenters to cease and allow the school to go ahead in Worcester.

Aside from the negative aspect of not having the medical school on campus at Amherst, it appears that little regard had been made for the practical problems involved in locating it in Worcester. For, at that time, no site had been accepted and there began a frantic search for land on which to construct the buildings.

Not only was the land unplanned for, but the Worcester hospitals had for some time been conducting massive construction projects to serve the growing demands of the community. Apparently, there was little inter- communication between the hospitals, for according to a Massachusetts Blue Cross and Blue Shield report, the hospitals, after their expansions were completed, would have a surplus of both beds and special treatment facilities. The report noted that it did not include the Medical School Hospital which comprised a 400-bed unit and many special treatment facilities.

Also, on August 20, 1965, the Worcester Telegram noted that there was an "acute shortage of nurses" in central Massachusetts and that the medical school would only add to the dilemma.

But, the decision had been made and after some quick bargaining at the State House, the Trustees voted on September 11, 1965, to accept a parcel of land on the shores of Lake Quinsigamond from State Department of Mental Health Commissioner Henry C. Solomon.

Then, after preliminary construction plans had been made, Soutter released figures that confirmed the accuracy of the study conducted by Booz, Allen and Hamilton. Building at Worcester, he said, would cost $459,000 more for construction and $500,000 more per year for operating costs. Total cost of the Worcester complex was now approaching $111 million.

In July, 1969, when Governor Sargent signed the final bill to begin construction, the total cost was up to $124 million with an annual payroll of $15.6 million.

What had been termed by one member of the Board of Trustees as "the logical site" continued to be challenged across the state and by the medical profession outside the state. For in December, 1965, the president of the American Medical Association said concerning the Board's decision: "A medical school is a better medical school when it is associated with a full university." He said that it allows a substantial savings in that it is not necessary to duplicate costs. He added that "the University also benefits because of the availability of scientific facilities and courses connected with the medical school."

A View, A Review, A Vision

By DAVID SCONDRAS

The following is the first of a series of articles that hopefully will open a dialogue with the community on the School of Education.

This is my perception of the school, its relevance and problems, its successes and potentials, primarily oriented toward communication, not toward an advocacy position with respect to the remainder of the community.

To pretend that America has no problems is to deny the realities of war, racism, poverty, overpopulation, oppressive social orders, ecological imbalances, and future shock. To assume that the strategies, skills and roles of the past are adequate to cope with the emergent crisis is to guarantee personal disillusionment and leave the future to the exigencies of biology and the false concerns of those who for so long have abused the earth in the name of truth for the sake of power.

"...Over the bleached bones of many a dead civilization are written the words: too late, said M. Luther King. In many ways, the most disconcerting aspect of our problems is that their solutions depend on time: we cannot pretend with the glibness so characteristic of a specie seemingly blind to history that there will always be time to rectify error.

Knowing full well that societal issues must affect institutions that socialize, it is time once again that the role of education be re-evaluated; not in terms of the past, but in terms of the future.

It is undeniable that our educational system has been viewed from within and without in increasingly critical terms. Although many aspects of these criticisms might be discussed, one thing seems clear: the education of the future will be oriented toward change in process and toward strategies in concepts. Many who are now in school or who have recently finished school have already discovered the inadequacy of their education and the increasingly questionable relevance of present methods of accreditation. Putting aside degree inflation and thifts in demand for present job skills, there is the glaring probability that neither the economic roles of the near future nor the needs of the individual to cope with that future's peculiar uncertainties are likely to be consonant with the preparation afforded by our present schools.

In the context, then, of the University of Massachusetts, I think it valuable to clarify the movement, history, resources and structure of the School of Education in orderto open the possibility of involvement which might aid in operationalizing its stated goals.

For example, what kinds of successes and failures has the school had with its pass/fail system? In what direction should we be moving? If we accept the role of education as an institution to prepare people for work, then how is the present structure valid given the likelihood of a significantly altered job market? If we do not accept this role as legitimate, then what have?

To begin with, the School of d has a set of publicized goals. This is not to say that these goals are realizable or that the school is necessarily moving toward them de facto. Such questions are matter of concern, need analysis and ultimately will be settled by history. However, we begin with the goals as they outline a setting in which the school operates.

Some of the stated objectives of the School are:

1. The elimination of racism as the central pathology of our time and the most challenging issue facing all societal institutions.
2. Improvement of Urban Education.
3. Allowing the freedom to fail (viewed as a prerequisite to experimentation).
4. The development of Alternate routes to effective education. (The school declares itself to be committed to be a model and testing ground for these.)
5. Individual freedom: this involves
   a. the minimizing of organizational constraints,
   b. routes of appeal for those who feel they are prohibited from actions consistent with the goals and resources of the school.
   c. the elimination of status distinctions based on formal rather than real criteria.
   d. the opportunity for all members of the school community to participate in the formation of school policy and all other aspects of the school's governance.

There are of course many other objectives, but these will suffice as a point of departure.

Given these goals, here are a few reactions from people asked randomly, "can you characterize the school of education from your perspective?" They serve to provide an impressionistic view of the diverse reactions to the school.

"It has a verbalized commitment to make racism its top priority. It has undertaken, however, only a pseudoeffort toward the operationalization of this priority. Its over-publicizing of its goals makes what is done seem far too little and fall short of its image"–a doctoral student.

"A wonderful place if you know what you want and are aggressive about getting it."–faculty member.

"I see the school as a hustle. That's how it operates, that's how it encourages its members to operate, and that's what it rewards–hustling and survival."–a doctoral student.

"I like the activist orientation, but I dislike the anti-intellectualism, i.e., to be active is to be good; to think about what you're doing is not as important. I want both to be a part of social change–to be accountable to the goals set up and to reflect upon what is done."–faculty member.

"Exciting, relevant, a good place if you know what you want to do."–administrator.

"In spite of many difficulties, it is the most exciting, dynamic, meaningful institution for training teachers in the country."–doctoral student.

"My involvement at the moment is frenetic; the school itself is promising."–doctoral student.

"The school offers a wide range of possibilities for students to pursue independent objectives within a school environment. From my own experience each centre allows for more or less independence, and thus it's hard to characterize the school as a whole."–student.

"As long as you don't have to deal with the internal politics–as long as what you want to do with your project or program fits into what they want, the school is the freest in the country. However, if your vision does not coincide with that of the administrators, you have no recourse. Women, students and blacks have little place within the school. Unless you are a strong person willing to take risks, the level of cooptation is a constant threat."–project director.

"The school is an institution designed and structured to perpetrate the illusion that there exists in America the possibility for substantial educational opportunities for poor people, blacks and women. This is a clear cut and obvious effect of watered down liberal rhetoric coupled with the school's unprincipled political and financial ambitions."–doctoral student.

"The situation vis a vis education in the country is bad in many respects. The school is attempting to improve this situation. That's why I think that what is going on here is good. The very attempt to change, under the circumstances, is a good thing."–faculty member.

Clearly, the school is complex in its effects on its population. You will note the absence of undergraduate response above. Perhaps if you have feelings, you might take the time to send me a memo at 225 Ed. Bldg.

The remainder of the series will concentrate on:

The history of the school, its present programs and projects and resources.

2. Decision making within the school.
3. The school's commitment to racism, sexism social change and innovation.
4. The potential effectiveness of involvement on the

These articles will attempt to communicate, not debate. For those interested, statements made which may appear rhetorical without footnoting can be footnoted upon request. There are, perhaps, others who simply feel that the ideals of the school are irrelevant or that the situation in the larger society does not warrant a new vision. To them we shall say nothing to save them from obscurity.

On The Back Road To Inflation

WASHINGTON–There was more good news on the cost of living from the Nixon Administration last week. It went up again. But Herbert Stein, one of the President's chief economists, said the only reason it had risen was because food prices had increased. If you eliminated food prices from the cost of living, he said, you would in fact have seen a decrease in the prices.

Not many people realized how well the President's anti-inflation policies were working until they were explained to them by Mr. Stein.

Since food prices seem to be the main problem, I can now reveal what the Administration is going to do about it.

Do not be surprised if you flip on your TV set in a few weeks and see the President of the United States sitting at his desk behind his seal.

"My fellow Americans,

"I have asked to speak to you tonight on a subject that is vital to everyone in this country. When I took office three and a half years ago, this country was on the road to inflation; an inflation that touched every household, every man, woman and child in this great land of ours. I vowed at the time to do something about it and I am happy to report to you tonight that my efforts have succeeded. I can now tell you that the price of baseball cards is down. .8%, the cost of trolley-car tracks has been reduced .9%, men's straw hats are selling at one-third the price of 10 years ago.

"Lawrence Welk records have been reduced $1, and men's Nehru jackets are selling at a 50% discount.

"The reason for the success of my anti-inflation program is the willingness of the American people to make sacrifices to stem the tide.

"The only area we don't seem to have made headway in our fight against rising prices is in food. Now I know you are going to say, 'If the price of food goes up how can we ever hope to hold down inflation?'

"My fellow Americans, the answer to that question rests with each and every one of you out there. Ladies and gentlemen, we can lick the problem of the high cost of food if we make one more slight sacrifice. I am asking every person in the nation regardless of race, regardless of age, regardless of party affiliation, to stop eating.

"When I saying stop eating, I don't mean just meat or vegetables or fruit or bread. I mean stop eating anything.

"If everyone gives up three meals a day as long as Phase 2 is in effect, I assure you that our battle against higher prices will be won before the November election.

"Some of you may say, 'How can we give up eating when it has become such an important part of our lives?' At first it won't be easy. If I may add a personal note, Pat said to me just before the broadcast, 'Isn't there any other way of lowering the cost of living besides giving up food?'

"And I replied, 'Pat, of course there are other ways. We could freeze farm prices, or put a ceiling on grocery distributors, or issue regulations barring rises in commodities. That would be the easy way, the political way, the economical way.

"But, as President of the United States, I must choose the hard way. Certainly there will be some temporary inconveniences when people have to give up eating. But they are nothing comparable to the gains that will show up on our economic indicators.'

"My fellow Americans, when you go to bed hungry tonight, remember you are not going to bed hungry because there is no food to eat, but you are going to bed hungry because you believe, as I do, in a healthy, stable economy.

"I don't think I'm exaggerating when I say that if every American gives up eating until the inflation crisis is over, this could go down as the week that changed the history of the world."

Letters To The Editor

Look For The Blake Remnant

To the Editor:

I search out the Black Remnant. That it may be called into readiness, will you help by making a visible ear of corn out of the following shibboleth?

English Black defines Jerusalem as Liberty. She is the Divine Vision in every individual; the Emanation of the Giant Albion; the Holy City of Peace; and, in happy copulation, She is the Bride of the Lamb-the Marriage of Christ and His Church.

The purpose for which Blake, alone, lived was to lay the foundation of Jerusalem in Lambeth; to 'build Jerusalem in England's green and pleasant land'. For She lay in ruins, marked as a Harlot for not putting off the Human Form.

Jesus & Blake were Transgressors from the womb; coming to defy the self-jealous miseries of Religious heavens. Both were born to the illicit act. Blake renounces the chastity of official Christianity. The Body of his espousal is 'a Woman Crowned', The Universal Church.

Jesus is named Liberator; Blake, the 'Liberty Boy': each suffering Prophets. And Blake, proclaiming the advent of the New Heaven, earmarked the return of the Red Inheritance of which, with Esau, we have been deprived-namely, the Holiness of the Body, now come of age.

We are the Church of the Blake Recital, called Golgonooza, the Fourfold London, in Athens, Ohio, at the Foot of Mount Nebo, in America. We are erecting a bell-tower on the foundations of Jerusalem. It happens here!

The American Liberty Bell aborted; cracked in pride. At this juncture we proclaim Liberty throughout the land. We ring-in the fiery Son of Man!

"The Briton, Saxon, Roman, Norman amalgamating in my Furnaces Into One Nation, the English, and taking refuge in the Loins of Albion." God is an Englishman.

Friends of the Giant Albion! We embrace you-and would hear from You.

Broken Record

To the Editor:

In the past few issues of the Collegian there have been several letters of endorsement for Larry Ladd as President of the Student Senate, and although the Graduate Student Senate has in the past kept itself apart from the workings of the undergraduate Student Senate, I feel a need at this time to come forth in support of Larry's position. From groups such as the Committee of Concern which drew up the early guidelines for the Chancellor's Search Committee to the recent conference on Residential Colleges and Living Learning Experiments, I find that it is the unity of the campus and a concern for the student body as a whole which is uppermost in Larry's mind. Much has been said, and there is a good record for evidence of the action coming out of those concerns. Consider the record, and consider the vote in your senate by your representative as significant a step in your life as that other vote for which you've so conscientiously registered.

Veda B. Ross
President, Graduate Student Senate

Larry Cleans Up

To the Editor:

The future of the Student Government Association will be decided Wednesday evening, when the Student Senate elects its officers. This letter is about that election, and the men who are seeking to lead the SGA, Larry Ladd and John Stevens. I have known both of the candidates for two years, and during that time I have come to like and respect both of them very much. However, when you decide to back a candidate for an office, friendship cannot be a consideration, rather which man can be the most productive in the position being sought.

For this reason, I am endorsing Larry Ladd for the Presidency of the SGA. The SGA will be taking on a new complexion next year with the new roles given the Senate Officers. It is most important that the man selected as President be a very capable rational diplomat. Larry Ladd possesses these qualities. John is not as experienced, and does not possess these needed qualities. These are not faults, but they are not good attributes for one who must deal with the administration. We need a man who will meet these people at their own level and be respected for his opinion, not one who presents a list of demands and will not discuss the problem.

I believe that Larry will carry the SGA to a position of respect, and I ask you to elect him President.

Henry P. Bouffard
Attorney General, SGA

It's A Fraud

To the Editor:

On the first page of the University magazine "Yahoo", distributed yesterday, the editors explain that the magazine is published only twice yearly due to the small budget appropriated by the Student Senate. The unqualified failure of this magazine prompts me to strongly suggest that its budget be entirely eliminated.

To say that the magazine was not humorous is an understatement. I found the articles and cartoons puerile, offensive and depressing. My opinion is not based on any prudishness on my part nor does it reflect only my own taste; none of the students to whom I spoke concerning this rag could find anything good to say about it.

The people responsible for this fraud should make a public apology for wasting whatever funds were given to them.

Still Waiting

To the Editor:

I have been waiting, apparently in vain, to see if the Daily Collegian was going to prove itself objective in regard to the issue of abortion. Several weeks ago this paper printed what I have been told were only facts regarding the "rights" and options open to women with unwanted pregnancies. I feel, and I am sure that there are others who would agree with me, that by printing these "facts" the Collegian, a supposedly free and responsible press, has lost any trace of objectivity and is printing slanted news.

In your series of articles I did not see anything about the rights and options left open to the unborn child or his or her father. Where are those facts? Will the editors of the Collegian be as objective as the term "free and responsible press" warrants, or will they continue to print only those facts which happen to agree with their personal philosophies?

Needle-leaves

The tree, she sings. She musics everything.
She prats a song of change.
Her audience of green and yellow,
like amphitheatre, in seats of red and mellow orange, recline in chairs... rest dangling stares
upon the trunken sound.
The branching isles reach away, and lean an ear around.
The dangling ears constantly perking
at every sound.
The old-man leaves grow young again,
each year, and fall away.
The tree, she pines, she mourns in evergreen.
She will at times just flow and sway
in her own, proud, tuneless way.
Oblivious, her vacant colisseum, points and dangles criticism...
upon the trunken sound.
The empty isles fade away, and never look around.
The pineling ears constantly smirking
at pantomime, in sound.
The needle-leaves grow old and deaf,
each year, and so they stay.

A Special Note Of Thanks

To the Editor:

On behalf of Muscular Dystrophy for the Western Massachusett's chapter, the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon would like to thank the entire campus community for their generosity during our recent drive on March 21. Over $1000 was raised for Muscular Dystrophy due to the contributions from students, faculty members, and many others associated with the University.

A special note of thanks is extended to the sisters of Alpha Chi Omega, Kappa Alpha Theta, and Kappa Kappa Gamma, whose time and effort greatly enhanced our efforts to make this contribution to Muscular Dystrophy.

Black Social Art Lectured Tonight

The Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial Lecture Series presents, as a part of a week-long program, Barry Gaither, the museum curator at The National Center for Afro-American Art, and Director of Visual Arts for The, Elma Lewis School for Fine Arts, in Roxbury. He will be lecturing tonight, April 5th, in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union at 8:00 p.m. on the topic of Black Social Art. His major interest lies in extracting Black art from the shadows of the Black cultural experience, and proudly exhibiting it and its history in the world of art and culture. His knowledge of his work is broad and far-reaching, and his intellectual curiosity, coupled with a tremendous determination and drive, make him successful in his work. He teaches, writes, exhibits, catalogues, researches, and shows no sign, in spite of this crowded schedule, of fatigue or disenchantment. He is, at the same time, building a slide-file, the beginning of an archive, that he hopes in five years will include 9,000 slides, highlighting various artists' careers. He has published works on Afro-American artists in the past and the Conference on African and Afro-American Studies has commissioned him to write a monograph on Afro-American Art, which was released late last year.

His academic education is based at Morehouse College in the Atlanta University Center, and Brown University in Providence. He went on to teach Afro-American Art at Spelman College in Atlanta.

Among the organizations to which Brother Gaither belongs are the College Art Association, the National Conference of Artists, and the Pan-African Art Alliance.

His publications include, "Henry O. Tanner, An Afro-American Artist;" "Towards A Viable Participation;" and he is currently writing an entry on Afro-American Art for The Negro Reference Book. He has also been invited to write a book for Secondary schools by the New York Graphic Society, Greenwich, Connecticut.

Since coming to Boston in 1969, Gaither has been Director of Visual Arts for The Elma Lewis School of Fine Arts, Curator of the museum of The National Center of Afro-American Artists, and Special Curator of Affairs Involving Black Artists, at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

Oil Spill Reparations Sought

EAST LYME, Conn. (AP) — The Board of Selectmen voted unanimously Monday night to seek reparations from the owner of the tanker F.L. Hayes, which spilled 80,000 gallons of oil on Long Island Sound March 21.

Beaches in East Lyme around Niantic Bay were described by state and federal environmental officials as taking the brunt of damage from the oil, spilled when the tanker grounded on Bartlett's Reef.

The decision was the second promise of action to seek damages from the owner of the tanker, the Spentonbush Fuel Transport Co. of New York City.

State Environmental Protection Commissioner Dan W. Lufkin last week said the firm was guilty of negligence in the spill. He asked Atty. Gen. Robert J. Killian to take legal action, but Killian reserved his decision about what action to take until after the environment department's hearings on the spill are concluded. Those hearings are scheduled to begin Thursday in East Lyme.

A resolution adopted by the selectmen said:

"It is impossible to know at this time of the damage to the town, its people and future generations will suffer because of the gross negligence and indifferences of the responsible people. The selectmen consider it their duty to do everything they can, not only to compensate the town and its people for the losses, but to demonstrate that it is cheaper to do whatever is necessary to prevent these spills than to pay the consequences."

Hungarian Choir To Perform Tuesday

The Bela Bartok Choir of Eotvos Lorand University, Budapest, will perform here Tuesday, April 11, as part of the third International University Choral Festival.

The concert, under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council in association with the UMass Chorale, will begin at 8 p.m. in Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest Residential College (site of the high-rise dormitories).

Dr. Gabor Baross founded the Bela Bartok Choir at Eotvos Lorand University in 1948. While studying for a law degree there, Dr. Baross continued his music studies at the Budapest Conservatory of Music. He conducts the University Symphony Orchestra, Folklore Ensemble, in addition to the Choir, and also serves as artistic director of The State Folk Ensemble Orchestra. Dr. Baross, recently appointed director of The Budapest University Theatre, was the 1971 recipient of the coveted Franz Liszt Prize by the Hungarian government.

For its April 11th appearance the Bela Bartok Choir will perform works spanning four centuries from Palestrina to examples of contemporary Hungarian choral writing. Tickets are $1 for UMass undergraduates and $1.50 for others, and may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone (413) 545-0202. Seating will be limited, and remaining tickets will be available at the door prior to the concert.

Holyoke Dance Group To Hold Spring Rites

By MAUREEN MEISTER

The Mount Holyoke Concert Dance Group is presenting its annual spring performance this weekend in the college's Laboratory Theatre.

Tickets may be bought now at the Lab Theatre box office for the shows which will begin at 8:00 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings.

The dance group, under the direction of Miss Rosalind Pierson, will involve about twenty members from UMass, Smith and Amherst as well as students from Mount Holyoke. Students are also responsible for much of the choreography.

The program promises to be exceptionally good, and it will be seen in a number of places. The group is previewing their concert on the "Kitty Today" show Wednesday at 9 a.m. on WWLP-TV, Channel 22. Three dances from the performance will be featured.

From Mount Holyoke, the dance group will take its production to Wellesley and Windham Colleges where they have been invited. A performance will also be given at Amherst College next Monday, April 10 in Buckley Recital Hall.

The program is diverse and will include a variety of types and styles of dance. Outstanding among the nine pieces will be an Afro-American dance about the American Negro and a jazz solo to the music of the Beatles' Sgt. Pepper. Also featured will be a modern ballet to a Vivaldi piece and, of course, classical ballet.

GayLib Talk At Amherst

"The Gay Liberation Movement--An Instance of Stigma Conversion" will be the topic of Prof. R. Laud Humphries' lecture at Amherst College on Thursday, April 6.

Sponsored by the Department of Anthropology and Sociology, the lecture will be at 8 p.m. in the Babbott Room of the Black Cultural Center. It is open to the public without charge.

Humphries is Professor Criminal Justice at the State University of New York (Albany) and is the author of Tea Room Trade.

Acting Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, left, and others from UMass Amherst met with representatives from the University of Freiburg, Germany, recently to negotiate a historic new partnership agreement and lay the framework for increased cooperation. With Dr. Bromery, from left: Pro-Rector Eduard Seidler of Freiburg, in charge of foreign relations for the German university; Dr. Barbara Burn, UMass director of international programs; Bernhard Buchner of the Freiburg Committee at UMass. Over the past six years UMass students and faculty have gone to Freiburg to study and teach; the new agreement opens the way for a full, two-way exchange, the first such agreement for either of the two institutions.

Festival Is Lottery Site

NORWICH, Conn. (AP)-The Norwich Rose Arts Festival in late June has been chosen for the first quarterly drawing in the state lottery featuring top winnings of $100,000, according to a gaming commission representative.

Drawings for the weekly, "Super 75" and quarterly prizes will be divided between June 22 and 23 at the festival and will involve more than $1 million in prizes.

Harold G. Wills Jr., a field representative of the commission, said Monday both the "Mighty Oak" drawing, which has a top prize of $100,000, and the "Little Acorn" selection with $10,000 in top winnings will be presented at the June 23 drawing.

The first day will involve the regular weekly pick of $5,000 prize winners and the person from the previous week's winning list who gets $75,000.

The Gaming Commission also announced today in Hartford that a record 26 winners of $5,000 have claimed prizes as a result of last week's drawings.

Sex And Money Cause Marital Problems

By DRS. MCCASHIN AND KLEIN

Q: "I'm worried about my marriage. Since my husband and I enrolled in graduate school it seems as though we've been gradually drifting apart. In fact we haven't made love in over a month. When we are talking to each other it seems as though we're always arguing about money. We're both very committed to our work and I'm afraid that this interferes with our relationship. We both love each other but can't seem to work things out."

A: Sex and money are invariably the chief areas of controversy among couples. It is in these areas that interpersonal conflicts in a relationship are often acted out. In varying intensity these conflicts may involve issues of power, dependency, vanity or competitiveness. Unresolved, these struggles can lead to mutually hurtful patterns of behavior, characterized by withdrawal, stormy arguments or a combination of both. It is there fore unlikely that the difficulties in your marriage can be explained wholly in terms of academic versus marital interests. Invite your husband to enter into a "truce" with you and talk openly about your concerns. Try to initially resolve the less provocative problems, like working out a way to spend more free time together. Focus on what is positive in your relationship and avoiding intellectual debating, try to develop an atmosphere of mutual helpfulness. If the problems persist you may wish to seek professional evaluation or therapy as a couple.Q: "I have been trying to get a friend of mine to get therapy for several months now. He is a drug addict who wants to break a heavy amphetamine habit. He says that he's gone clean several times before only to start speeding again He refuses to get therapy because he says it doesn't work in cases like his. Is this true and if so, why?" A: It is true that for many reasons, traditional individual psychotherapy is often unsuccessful in treating drug addiction. Drug addiction has only in recent years been openly acknowledged as a middle-class problem. This is one significant factor involved in the neglect of the problem. There has been woefully little significant research on the medical and phenomenological factors involved. Furthermore, relatively few professional psychotherapists have had adequate training or experience in working as practitioners with drug addicts.

Furthermore the symptoms of drug addiction are pleasure related in spite of the high price addicts pay for the gratification involved. In the traditional neurosis the symptoms e.g. anxiety phobia depression, etc. are themselves painful. The patient is therefore more likely to have high motivation for change. The symptoms of drug addiction like alcoholism and certain kinds of sexual and anti-social behavior patterns become very much a source of consistent gratification in one's life.

Inadequate reserach data, inadequate professional training and resistant patients along with the highly complex sociological factors involved are part of what keeps success rates for psychotherapeutic treatment down. If your friend is really motivated to change however, a larger stumbling block for successful treatment is dramatically reduced and it would be worthwhile to continue pressing him to enter some kind of counseling relationship.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will accept questions in strict confidence for possible appearance in "Your Head." Send or bring your inquiries to Mental Health, 303 Machmer Hall.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Recently I had my fourth radio-TV debate on astrology with Dr. George Abel, chairman of the department of astronomy at the University of California at Los Angeles. Neither one of us has been declared a "winner." But the good doctor has learned much about astrology and I have been pleasantly surprised to finally find one astronomer who at least has the stance of an open mind. Perhaps, if the debates continue, I will become an astronomy buff and Dr. Abel will be utilizing planetary positions to delineate human character and future trends. We shall see.

Dawson Signs New Pact With KC

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Quarterback Len Dawson put an end Tuesday to speculation he might retire from pro football and signed a new two-year contract with the Kansas City Chiefs.

The announcement was made at a news conference by the 36-year-old Dawson and Chiefs Coach Hank Stram.

It is believed the contract puts Dawson in the $100,000 a year bracket. His previous contract with the Chiefs, a four-year agreement which ended in 1971, was thought to be for about $250,000 or $62,000 a year.

Dawson predicted the Chiefs would be involved in another National Football League title game and said he "would like to be a part of the championship."

Dawson, who has been in the pros 15 years, heard Stram say his quarterback "is just coming into the fine years of his brilliant career. In my mind, he's only a 10-year man as far as his artistic ability is concerned.

"I feel Len can help us win more championships."

About speculation concerning his possible retirement, Dawson said:

"I have given a lot of time and careful consideration to my future. Following the 1971 season, I wanted to wait a couple of months to see if I still had the desire to play.

"There are a lot of reasons for my decision but to simplify matters, I still feel I can contribute to whatever future success the Chiefs may enjoy."

"Football has provided me with everything I have. In fact, I have attained more professional football than I ever hoped to when my career began.

"Every professional player realizes that the day will come when he must retire. But I don't think this is the time for me."

Dawson was picked up as a free agent by the old Dallas Texans, now the Chiefs, in 1962 when the former Purdue star was discouraged over his pro career. He was a first round draft choice of the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1956 but spent most of four years in Steeler uniform on the bench.

Dawson went to the Cleveland Browns in 1960. Again, he saw little action.

He was the AFL passing leader in 1964, 1966 and 1968.

Dawson had one of his best seasons last year, hitting on 167 of 301 passes for 2,504 yards and 15 touchdowns.

Women Gymnasts Fourth

By STEVE CARY

The 1972 Gymnastics season closed for college teams and competitors this past weekend in Des Moines, Iowa. The young UMass varsity team scored 102.45 to place fourth behind Springfield-104.87, Southeastern Louisiana-104.55, and Southern Illinois University-103.22. The UMass team of one junior, three sophomores and three freshmen competed strongly throughout the long team championships on Friday only to meet with a heartbreaking failure late in the evening on Balance Beam, resulting in their respectable but disappointing finish.

Margie Combs led the team with scores of 9.1 on the Floor Ex. 8.95 on Side Horse Vaulting, and 8.9 on the Uneven Bars. Her All-Around score of 34.80 was good for seventh nationally. Both Anne Vexler and Jeannine Burger contributed 9.0 on the Floor, giving UMass an exciting start with a 27.10 total for that event. Side Horse was down a little with Jeannine at 8.45, and Marina Rodriguez at 8.0, completing the 25.35 team showing here. On Unevens Betsy East at 8.7 and Jeannine at 8.2 joined Margie for an event total of 25.85. To this point the girls had averaged 8.7 for each score that counted. Springfield's average that won the meet was an 8.75.

The final event of the last meet of the season was for UMass, the Beam. This event requires as much experience as it does skill and concentration. Each girl fell at least once, Anne Vexler scoring 8.25, Jeannine Burger an 8.0, and Marge Combs a 7.85. The team score of 24.1 here dropped them certainly from first or second to fourth in the last minutes of the meet.

The team must now begin its work for next year. Training Coach Miss Evans and her assistant Mike Kasavana will prepare what they shall only consider a championship team for the already coming season.

"Garber's Gorillas" Get Ready

By MARTY KELLEY

In the college coaching ranks, it's not uncommon to find that the longer a coach remains at an institution, the better his teams get. But with UMass lacrosse mentor Dick Garber, now in his 18th season at the UMass helm, it's going to be quite a trick just to duplicate the immediate past.

Garber has brought renown personality to the UMass lacrosse picture that has found the Redmen gaining national recognition as well as garnering three straight New England championships. When Garber's Gorillas open their season at New Haven against Yale this Saturday, the most difficult but perhaps the most rewarding season in Garber's 18-year reign will be unveiled.

Right now the Gorillas stand 1-1 on the season after an Easter Week trip to Long Island. In non-exhibition contests the visitors were dropped by Adelphi 8-4 but followed up with a 15-4 rout of Farleigh Dickinson on the strength of 4 goals and six assists from All-American candidate Charlie Hardy.

"It's tough when you have to open your season against one of the country's best in Adelphia," noted Garber. "But I feel that right now we're conditioned and physically and mentally in better shape than we were a year ago."

And with that statement you know something's being said for this year's club. Last spring, the Gorillas were rated 14th in the land and New England champs for the third straight year. But, after reeling off 10 straight wins, they lost to Brown and Harvard in the last two games of the season, foregoing a trip to the nationals.

In the last four games, the snakebeaters were 37-4 including an undefeated 10-0 slate in 1969. But coach Garber has his eye on the Nationals, and he may do more than just dream of a national tournament in the next couple of months as a talented crop of veterans return from last season's 10-2 success story.

The Redmen, No. 2 in the N.E. pre-season poll behind Brown, are paced by tri-captains Bruce Crawford, goalie, (Franklin Square, N.Y.), midfielder, Dana Stone (Needham), and record setting attackman Charlie Hardy (East Meadow, N.Y.). All will graduate in June.

Hardy dispells any thought that the little guy can't play lacrosse. Standing but 5'7", 150 lbs., Hardy set a school record with 51 assists last season and netted 10 goals for a total of 61 points. The slick sharpshooter bolstered one of the most prolific scoring attacks in UMass history that accounted for 157 goals for a 13.1 per game average.

The two leading scorers on the Hardy line return to even more augment the picture and make Garber's work a little easier. Little All-America Paul Ritch (33-10-43) and John Nagle, all 6'6" of him, (28-2-30), who are both seniors, are sure to make their share of noise with frosh Peter Connelly and Soph Fred Michaels backing them up.

Ritch has as hard a shot as anyone in New England circles while Nagle has what is demonstratively described in lacrosse as the "quick stick". "I call him the Phil Esposito of lacrosse", quipped Garber as he points out Nagle's uncanny ability to release quickly from the point position of crease attack in front of the adversaries' net.

In lacrosse, on attack, you've got to have a shot and a complement of stickhandling ability, on defense you have to hit, but as a midfielder you have to run, run, and run some more. And Coach Garber has the horses in soph Hirsch Seidmen (Baltimore, Md.), Dwight Bloomquist, a junior from Williston Park, N.Y., and tri-captain Dana Stone (Needham).

Also expected to see a lot of action on the second midfield line is senior Tim Bosworth, a letterman from last year. Due to the general fast pace of the game, a well-endowed team such as the Redmen will use up to four midfield lines.

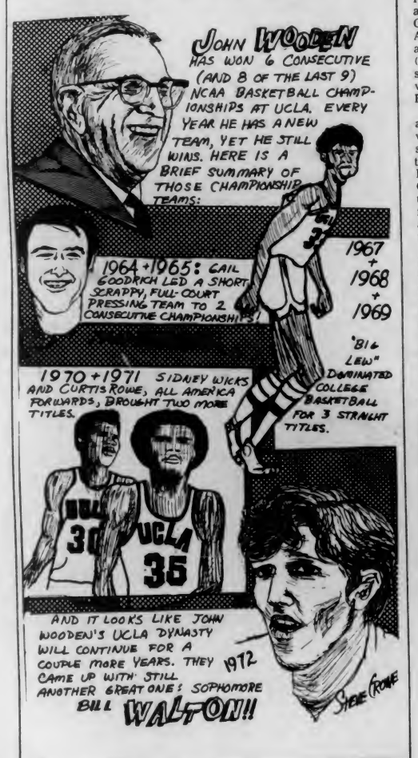
"Perhaps the most crucial part of our game will be defense. We know we can score," summarized Coach Garber. "But if our young kids can help Bruce (Crawford, goalie) keep it out of the nets, we'll be in good shape."

The youth movement on defense lists a starting trio of freshmen Bill Blaustein (Plainview, N.Y.) and John McCarthy (Mineola, N.Y.). The old man of the outfit is senior Kevin Carpenger, a liberal arts major from Needham. Also expected to see a lot of service are Bob Lindsay, a senior letterman from Worcester, Bill Will, a junior from Rathaway, New Jersey, and Tom Bock, a junior letterman from Elmont, N.Y.

Perhaps without a doubt, the loneliest position in sports is that of the goalie...and in lacrosse it's downright barren. Anything on net from 20 yards on in should generally find the mark. The position is as frustrating as it is difficult to play, but one individual, Bruce Crawford, by name, has been able to conquer the moments of anguish over the last couple of years to become one of the top-rated goalies in the country.

His coach had nothing but praise for the senior tri-captain from Franklin Square, N.Y. "Bruce does everything you ask of him in the nets. He clears the ball as well as anyone I've seen. He's so important in getting our fast break going. I look for him to be one of the country's best goalies at the end of the season.

Crawford drew added praise for his performance in the Long Island trip. The pesky netminder displayed mid-season form in clearing the ball out of the defensive zone. The All-New England goalie will be spelled this spring by Jim Haddad a freshman from Longmeadow.



Schedule-wise, this will be the toughest season ever at UMass for Dick Garber. The Redmen, having already split with powerful Adelphi and Farleigh Dickinson, will have all they can handle with national power Washington and Lee in their home opener April 11th. Also, grudge matches with Harvard and Brown at home on the 19th and 26th should provide the catalyst for a make or break season.

"We're out to win, but we're also out to have a good time. The game and winning should be fun and enjoying, philosophised Garber. "We'll have some easy ones and they'll be ones that we'll have to henscratch. But most of the kids feel that they let themselves down against Harvard (7-6, double overtime) and Brown (8-4) , they won't feel that way this season."

The game of lacrosse has come a long way since a French explorer saw a barely clothed Chactaw Indian tribe battling with rackets and a ball made of leather strappings in the 17th century.

Now the game and its UMass curator Dick Garber have been synonymous with success and so rewarding that a fourth straight New England title and a possible trip to the nationals may be in the offering for Garber's Gorillas this spring.

Will It Ever End?
